THERE IS A RIGHT WAY to paint and a wrong way. The right way is to have the best Paint—Pure White Lead and Linseed Oil—applied by a practical painter. The wrong way is to get some mixture about which you know nothing and apply it yourself or have some inexperienced, irresponsible person do it.

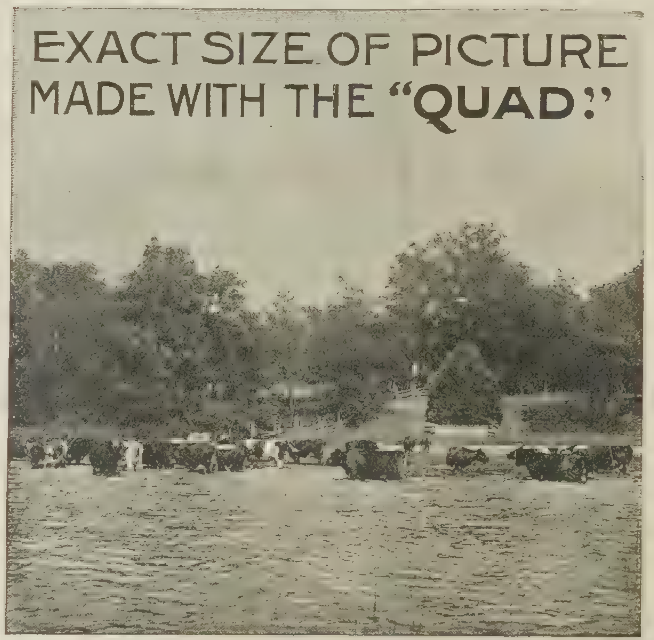
Pure White Lead

can be readily tinted to any shade required by using NATIONAL LEAD CO.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors, prepared expressly for this purpose.

Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New York.

A Quad Your Best Outing Companion



THE ONLY PRACTICAL CAMERA FOR $5.00

It does the work of other Cameras costing two and three times as much, and a novice can operate it. Size of Camera 4⅝ x 4⅝ x 6 inches. Can be loaded and unloaded in daylight. It is the only Camera using the new Quadruplex Plate Holder.

EVERY "QUAD" Is Fully Guaranteed

Ask your Dealer for it, or send us two 1-cent stamps for illustrated catalogue and sample of work.

CLOSE & CONE, 126 State St., Chicago, Ill.

Take a Combination Case of the LARKIN SOAPS
and a "Chautauqua"
Reclining Easy Chair or Desk
ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL.

CASE CONTAINS . . .
100 Bars Sweet Home Soap. 10 Bars White Woolen Soap.
9 Packages Boraxine. 18 Cakes Finest Toilet Soaps.
Perfumes, Cold Cream, Tooth-Powder, Shaving Soap.
If changes in contents desired, write.

The Soaps at retail would cost $10.00
Either Premium is worth . $10.00
Both if at retail . . . $20.00

From factory to family, Both $10.

AND ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL. IF SATISFIED, YOU REMIT $10.00; IF DISAPPOINTED, HOLD GOODS SUBJECT TO OUR ORDER.

The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Our offer explained more fully in The Outlook, Nov. 16th, 23d, and 30th.

NOTE.—We are personally acquainted with Mr. Larkin, of the Soap Manufacturing Company of Buffalo; have visited their factory; seen their goods and premiums offered, and we know that they are full value. The only wonder is that they are able to give so much for so little money. The Company are perfectly reliable.—The Evangelist.

From The Churchman.—We have investigated the propositions in above advertisement, and are satisfied that the goods offered are worth more than price charged, and that the Company will do all they agree to.

The Outlook

A·Family·Paper

New Series of The Christian Union

Copyright, 1896, by The Outlook Company.

Entered as second-class matter in the New York Post-Office.

The Outlook is a weekly Family Paper, containing this week sixty pages. The subscription price is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance.

Postage is Prepaid by the publishers for all subscriptions in the United States, Canada, and Mexico. For all other countries in the Postal Union add $1.56 for postage.

Changes of Address.—When a change of address is ordered, both the new and the old address must be given. The notice should be sent one week before the change is to take effect.

Discontinuances.—If a subscriber wishes his copy of the paper discontinued at the expiration of his subscription, notice to that effect should be sent. Otherwise it is assumed that a continuance of the subscription is desired.

How to Remit.—Remittances should be sent by Check, Draft, Express-Order, or Money-Order, payable to order of THE OUTLOOK COMPANY. Cash should be sent in Registered Letter.

Letters should be addressed:
THE OUTLOOK,
Clinton Hall, Astor Place,
New York.

Contents for 29 August, 1896

EDITORIAL:

Lord Russell on Arbitration 357
John Morley on Arbitration................ 357
Canada and the United States................ 358
The Manitoba Question.......................... 358
German Anti-Gambling Law................ 358
Mr. Cockran's Speech........................ 359
Mr. Bryan's Speech........................... 359
Mr. McKinley's Speech....................... 359
Political News.................................... 360
The Church of England in Parliament...... 360
The Commonwealth—IV..... 362
The Art of Living............................ 362

CONTRIBUTED ARTICLES:

The Spectator on the East Side.............. 364
A Bird Subscriber. 366
Li Hung Chang and General Grant.......... 367
By Colonel F. D. Grant
The Higher Life of St. Louis................. 372
By the Rev. John Snyder
Mr. Moody and Northfield 379
By the Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, D.D.
Mr. Moody's Life and Work 382
By James M. Whiton
The Institutional Church...................... 384
By Rufus R. Wilson
Kate Carnegie—Chapters XVII., XVIII...... 388
By Ian Maclaren

THE RELIGIOUS WORLD:

The Doshisha....................................... 393
Brotherhood of the Kingdom.................. 393
Education in the Y. M. C. A................. 393
Ocean Grove Anniversary 394
Bethany Encampment, etc., etc.............. 394

BOOKS AND AUTHORS:

Essays on Poetry.................. 395
New Books.. 396

CORRESPONDENCE

THE HOME CLUB

THE

HANDY BINDER

for The Outlook, made to hold compactly and conveniently twenty-six numbers, will be sent by mail on receipt of sixty cents.

THE OUTLOOK CO. - NEW YORK

The PHOTAKE Camera

WITH COMPLETE OUTFIT for Taking and Developing Six Negatives and Printing Twelve Pictures Prepaid to any part of the United States for $2.50

TAKES FIVE PICTURES on glass plates at one loading (no kinky films to handle). Makes it easy to develop and finish pictures, which is half the pleasure of amateur photography, at minimum cost. TAKES ANY KIND OF PICTURE, Snap Shot, Flash Light or Time Exposure. Has Long Focus, and will not distort. Made of seamless metal, handsomely finished. Simplest of all to operate, and gives best results. Every one tested and guaranteed. Send 2c. stamp for booklet and sample picture.

Chicago Camera Co.
Room 34, Garden City Blk., Chicago

Blindness can be Prevented and Cured

Treat the Cause of Diseased Eyes and Impaired Vision and Restore Your Eyesight.

NO KNIFE! NO RISK!

The Bemis Sanitarium and Annex, Glens Falls, N. Y.

In the small photo-engraving many will recognize E. H. Bemis the noted Eye Specialist, orginator of the Absorption Treatment, together with his famous Sanitarium where hundreds have been cured of blindness.

The MOST successful and Humane Treatment in the world is the Absorption Treatment. It not only gives the patient a new lease of life, but cures and relieves many of the following diseases which have been pronounced incurable by leading oculists: Cataracts, Scars, Films, Paralysis, Glaucoma, Amaurosis, Atrophy of the Optic Nerve, Detached Retina, Weeping Eyes, Tumors, Inflammation or Ulceration of the Eyes, Granulated Eyelids and all other diseases of a chronic nature.

THERE SHOULD BE NO WAITING TO BE BLIND.

EVERYBODY should read our pamphlet, which is sent FREE to any address. It gives the cause of failing eyesight and diseased eyes, how prevented and cured at our Sanitarium or by mail. Address

The BEMIS SANITARIUM, Glens Falls, N. Y.

Branch Office, 200 Columbus Avenue, - - - BOSTON, MASS.

Every package of this popular dentifrice contains:
A large bottle of liquid Sozodont
A box of Sozodont Powder
A sample cake of Sozoderma Soap, for the skin

Sozodont FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH.

Use liquid Sozodont daily; the powder twice a week. A sample of liquid Sozodont by mail, provided you mention this publication and send three cents for postage. Address the Proprietors of Sozodont, HALL & RUCKEL, Wholesale Druggists, New York City.

THE AMERICAN JOURNAL OF SOCIOLOGY

Contents of September Number:

Superiority and Subordination as Subject-matter of Sociology, - - - GEORGE SIMMEL.
Some Social-Economic Problems, CLARE DE GRAFFENRIED.
The Ideals of Social Reformers, WALTER RAUSCHENBUSCH.
The Function of the Church, - E. M. FAIRCHILD.
The Mechanics of Society, - LESTER F. WARD.
Social Control by Suggestion, - - - E. A. ROSS
The Criterion of Distributive Justice, FRANK C. SHARP.
The Christian Conception of Social Order, SHAILER MATHEWS.
Reviews, Abstracts, and Bibliography.

$2.00 per year. 35 cents per number

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO,
UNIVERSITY PRESS DIVISION,
Chicago, Ill.

Photographic Variety

makes our stock of photo supplies almost a wilderness. All makes of cameras and supplies at lowest market prices for cash. New store—convenient.

The Scovill & Adams Co., of New York
Nos. 60 and 62 East 11th St.
(Five doors from B'way)

Send 35 cents for a sample number of The Photographic Times, containing about 100 handsome photographic illustrations.

The Business World

The Week The stringency in the money market which has lately been shown to exist by such facts as the failure of New York City to place its gold bonds at a fair price becomes more evident with the usual demand of this season from the interior for money to move the crops. It was thought this week that the New York Clearing-House would have to give relief to some of the banks which are suffering from overpressure by issuing loan certificates. On Monday of this week a committee met to hear applications for such loans, but none were made. It is thought that before the end of the week loan certificates will be called for. The weekly statement of the associated banks shows an increase of over half a million in circulation, but, on the other hand, there was a decrease in deposits of over nine millions, in loans of nearly six millions, and in legal tenders and specie of nearly two and a half millions. Money on call ruled high, going up to 8 per cent. The stock market for the first part of the week still showed an upward tendency, but this disappeared toward the end of the week. Dealings were small, and the market was dull. Sales of stock at the close of Saturday as compared with that day of the week before showed a very slight average decline. Burlington closed at 58½, St. Paul at 63¾, Northern Pacific at 16, Western Union at 75⅛. Financiers have been puzzled about the meaning of the importation of gold. About $2,000,000 came this way last week. It is hard to see why this should occur under present trade conditions, but it has been welcomed as a hopeful sign. The London correspondent of the New York "Tribune" says:

> One theory advanced here is that Americans have begun to hoard gold in expectation of its going to a premium; but a better one, which is generally held, is that the Morgan syndicate has arranged for the withdrawal of gold from this side as a means of protecting the Treasury and maintaining the gold reserve until the Presidential election is over. Since shipments cannot be made at a profit under the present rates of exchange, this is regarded as an artificial and desperate attempt to keep the gold reserve up to the statutory limit, and as a new sign of the gravity of the currency situation in the United States.

On the other hand, "Bradstreet's" declares that there is absolutely no truth in this theory, and that the importations are natural, the result of a decline in exchange, and possibly of a small premium which it says has been offered in some quarters for gold not taken from the United States Treasury by means of legal tenders. There is little to record in the way of changes in general trade. All industries continue dull. Wheat exports are large, showing an increase over the previous week and the same week a year ago. The reports of gross railway earnings for the first half of the year show a slight increase (3 6-10 per cent. over a year ago). "Bradstreet's" reports 264 business failures for the week—six more than the week before, and 72 more than in the same week a year ago. There has been a slight decline in the price of silver.

American Petroleum in Germany The "Oil, Paint, and Drug Reporter" says: "Some interest was excited in the petroleum trade last week by an article cabled from Berlin to the effect that the German Government had again ordered that reports be submitted to it on the importation of petroleum, and inferring that the evident intent of the investigation was the introduction of a differential tariff. The item also assumed that the matter is revived with a view to breaking the monopoly of the Standard Oil Company. It is not quite clear what this means, but it is presumably intended to convey the idea that there is to be an increased measure of protection to the German refineries, and, in fact, we believe this will result in some measure from the new tariff which goes into effect in September. It does not appear, however, that it has been the intent of the Government to discriminate against American oils, which would clearly be the result of any legislation aimed at the Standard Oil Company, since whatever rates of duty or regulations affecting imports were adopted would necessarily bear equally upon all importers of American oils, whether they represented that company or the outside interests. Doubtless the Standard has, by its recent arrangement with the large distributing firms, greatly strengthened its position in Germany, and has identified itself more closely with that export outlet. Its policy in that respect has been apparent for several years past, and, in view of the vast importance of the export trade to the American refiners, as well as producers, is as natural as was the establishing of distributing depots in this country. The latest dispatches from Hamburg are to the effect that the firm of John & Co., of that city, announce the pooling of their petroleum business with that of Philipp Pots, of Mannheim, and the Passows, of Bremen. These firms will come to an agreement with the Deutsch-American Company regarding the prices of oil. To these facts is added the statement that 'part of the petroleum required by the pool will be bought from the Standard Oil Company.' It may easily be surmised from these facts, if they are entirely correct, that the Standard has formed an alliance which embraces all of the more important petroleum importing and distributing houses in Germany, and includes also the leading representatives of the German importers in this country."

Trolleys Crowding Out Horses It is interesting to note the way in which electricity is displacing horses in the running of street-cars throughout the world. During the past year the number of street railroads in Europe has increased from 70 to 111, and the length of lines from 700 to 902 kilometers (a kilometer equals 3,250 feet), the power from 18,150 to 25,095, and the number of cars from 1,236 to 1,747. The following table shows the ratio in the different countries:

	Total in Kilometers.	Power.	Cars.
Germany	406.4	7,194	857
France	132.0	4,490	225
England	94.3	4,243	143
Austria-Hungary	71.0	1,940	157
Switzerland	47.0	1,550	86
Italy	39.7	1,890	84
Spain	29.0	600	26
Belgium	25.0	1,120	48
Ireland	13.0	440	25
Russia	10.0	540	32
Servia	10.0	200	11
Norway and Sweden	7.5	225	15
Bosnia	5.6	75	6
Roumania	5.5	140	15
Holland	3.2	320	14
Portugal	2.8	110	3

Transmitting Niagara's Power Some interesting facts relating to the electric transmission of power are given in an article in the New York "Tribune." There are now in service in California three or four lines over which power is transmitted in the form of electricity for distances varying from twenty to thirty-five miles. The pressure under which the electricity is sent is from 10,000 to 12,000 volts. The amount thus conveyed is equivalent in each case to several thousand horse-power. The great plant at Niagara has thus far supplied current only to factories close at hand. Active steps are now being taken, however, to furnish other cities. The contract has been let within a few days for the construction of a line to Buffalo, fifteen miles away, over which eventually about 20,000 horse-power will be transmitted. This would require all of the output of four 5,000 horse-power dynamos. These machines are not all in place yet at the Falls. For this and other reasons only 5,000 horse-power will be delivered at first. At least 1,000 of this will be taken by the Buffalo Street Railway Company, and it is hoped that connections will be made for this purpose by or before November 1 this year. That particular customer pays $40 annually per horse-power, but is to have it for $36 if it takes more than the amount just mentioned.

Making the Dairy Pay A correspondent of "The Ploughman" asks: "Is there any reason why dairymen should not make a net return of $50 from each milch cow? Let us see. We will suppose that the farmer has a good grass and hay farm with enough rough land to pasture the stock in summer. He has stocked his farm with ten first-rate butter cows. Everything he uses will come from the farm except grain. For the result I will quote from the experience of Andrew Wilson, of Bovina Center, N. Y., who had ten grade Jerseys of good but not extraordinary quality. He fed them $200 worth of grain, which, as with most farmers, was the only money outlay. He sold $15 worth of calves and $40 worth of pork made from the skim-milk. His 2,750 pounds of butter brought him $687.50 at 25 cents a pound. The average earnings per cow were $74.25. Deducting the $20 each for grain, there remains a cash return of $54.25 for each cow, or considerably over $500 for the herd. Another farmer in the same State kept nine grade Jerseys and sold 1,900 pounds of butter at 23½ cents a pound for $446.50; calves, $25; skim-milk, $37.50; milk, $6.50. Average earnings per cow, $56.92; grain, $6.15 per cow. Here the cash return is also about $50 per head, although it is evident that high feeding was not practiced. These are not given as examples of remarkable profits in dairying, but are meant to indicate what any smart, industrious farmer may expect if he keeps good cows and takes care of them."

FINANCIAL

AMERICAN FIRE
INSURANCE COMPANY
A.D. 1810.
Office, Company's Building,
308 & 310 Walnut St.,
Philadelphia

WE have been at much pains to prepare a reliable list of bonds and stocks from which investors may safely choose such as meet their special requirements. A copy of the list will be sent without charge to all applicants.

HARVEY FISK & SONS
Dealers in Government Bonds and SELECTED Securities
24 NASSAU STREET, NEW YORK
BOSTON PHILADELPHIA

£ THE BEST MONEY
for Travelers abroad.
Cheque Bank Cheques
Excellent for remittances. See circular.
Agency of the U.S. Cheque Bank, L'd.
FREDERICK W. PERRY, Manager
40 and 42 Wall St., N. Y.

THE "16 to 1" QUESTION? interests you, doesn't it, if you "can put down one and carry off 16?" An investment in IRRIGATED IDAHO FRUIT FARM LANDS, if made now, will repay you twenty-fold in ten years. The most fertile soil in the world (with perpetual water right) situated upon the main line of the U. P. R. R., near the town of Orchard, Idaho, is offered in blocks of from 5 to 40 acres upon the most easy terms. Homes built for bona-fide settlers. School, Depot, fire protection, and unequaled drinking water. A few choice town lots also for sale. If you want literature and maps or to ask questions, address Supt. of Lands, IDAHO FRUIT CO., 50 Broadway, N. Y. ☞ This Company is composed of men whose reputation is national.

DISCREET PEOPLE are buying LIFE ANNUITIES
They provide a fixed income for life, and for Elderly People yield double the usual rate of interest. Security absolute. Information given and orders executed by
B. G. CARPENTER, 256 Broadway, N. Y.

It is hardly worth while to carry your silverware up stairs every night to protect it from thieves when you are destroying it down stairs every day by using worthless silver polish. USE which saves your silverware and preserves its brilliancy.

SILVER
ELECTRO-SILICON
POLISH

Sample free. Box, postpaid, 15c.

THE ELECTRO SILICON CO., 72 John St., New York.

(Study this Out and Try It)

$50.00 IN GOLD | GIVEN AWAY

Who can form the greatest number of words from the letters in TOILERS? You are smart enough to make fifteen or more words, we feel sure, and if you do you will receive a good reward. Do not use any letter more times than it appears in the word. No proper nouns. No foreign words. Use any dictionary that is standard. Use plurals. Here is an example of the way to work it out: To, toil, toils, set, sot, sit, oil, oils, let, etc. These words count. The publisher of WOMAN'S WORLD AND JENNESS MILLER MONTHLY will pay $20.00 in gold to the person able to make the largest list of words from the letters in the word TOILERS; $10.00 for the second largest; $5.00 for the third; $5.00 for the fourth, and $2.00 each for the five next largest lists. The above rewards are given free and without consideration for the purpose of attracting attention to our handsome ladies' magazine, twenty-four pages, ninety-six long columns, finely illustrated, and all original matter, long and short stories by the best authors; price $1 per year. It is necessary for you, to enter the contest, to send 12 two-cent stamps for a three-months' trial subscription with your list of words, and every person sending the 24 cents and a list of fifteen words or more is guaranteed an extra present by return mail (in addition to the magazine) of a large 256-page book, "The Story of an African Farm," by Ralph Iron, one of the most remarkable books of the age. Satisfaction guaranteed in every case or your money refunded. Lists should be sent at once, and not later than September 20, so that the names of successful contestants may be published in the October issue. Our publication has been established nine years. We refer you to any mercantile agency for our standing. Write now. Address J. H. PLUMMER, Publisher, 905 Temple Court Building, B 43, New York City.

MARM LISA

Four chapters of an exceedingly interesting Serial Story by appear in the

MRS. WIGGIN

September Atlantic Monthly

This number is full of important and attractive articles, including among others:

The Story of Uncle Tom's Cabin, an account of this marvelous book, by CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER.

The Awakening of the Negro,
by BOOKER T. WASHINGTON.

The Country of the Pointed Firs, another installment of this exquisite serial, by SARAH ORNE JEWETT.

Athenaise (II.),
a story of Creole life, by KATE CHOPIN.

The Problem of the West,
a timely and important paper, by Prof. FREDK. J. TURNER, of the University of Wisconsin.

The Election of the President, an historical account of our "quadrennial trial," by JOHN B. MCMASTER, the historian.

$4.00 a year; 35 cents a year.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston
11 East 17th Street, New York

Inventions of Antiquity

"There is nothing new under the sun" is an axiom that is as true to-day as it was when uttered by King Solomon a thousand years before the birth of Christ. The above remark is suggested by reading catalogues of the British Museum and our own Smithsonian Institution, from which we learn that many, if not all, supposed modern inventions were thought out and applied centuries and scores of centuries ago. Examples are so numerous that we hardly know which to select for first illustration. Hat-pins with glass heads, lead pipes and burned clay tiles for conveying water, stamps for making pottery ware, safety-pins with a little coiled spring at one end and a catch at the other, were as well known in the Pompeii of two thousand years ago as they are in the St. Louis or Chicago of 1895. Razors with modern handles, telescopes, fish-hooks exactly like those of to-day, with their barbed points and flattened or loop-end shanks, were known and in general use in the Babylon of fifteen hundred years B.C. Thimbles, which are usually referred to as inventions of the Middle Ages, when they were called "thumb-bells," have been found in prehistoric mounds and graves of the Bronze Age. Not something that resembles thimbles, but real bronze articles of that character containing the customary indentations, so nicely done that it appears to be the work of machinery.

In the Smithsonian collection are a variety of combs, hair-pins, tweezers, strainers, door-hinges, locks, and kitchen utensils that are known to date back over twenty centuries. Lamps exactly like those used in colonial times were in use in Egypt four thousand years ago, and knives, hatchets, sickles, scythes, etc., were made then in exact resemblance to those used to-day. Bronze beads, awls, bodkins, needles, etc., were made and used by the men and women of the Bronze Age, which probably began five thousand years ago. The "nickel-in-the-slot" machine was used in ancient Egypt, the telephone in China a thousand years ago, and the magnetic telegraph in England and France nearly three hundred years ago.—St. Louis Republic.

The End of Old Money

The end of these old bills that have served their purpose so faithfully has a certain amount of pathos. If one is fortunate enough to be present when a committee of three officers of the Treasury send them to their destruction, a curious, almost indescribable sensation will creep over one. The destruction takes place in a room in the Treasury Building. There is a small table in the center of the room, and on this the bundled bills are piled in reckless confusion. Through two holes in the floor at the end of the table can be seen the large cylinders or macerators into which the bills are placed. They are about the size of locomotive boilers. A large funnel is inserted in one of the holes, and it connects with one of the macerators. The bills are then untied and thrown into the mouth of this funnel. It is amusing to see one of the committee take a stick when they become jammed and prod them through. When the last one is safely in, a mixture of lime and soda ash is placed in the macerator, a cover is clamped over the ventricle, and each member of the committee fastens it with a separate lock. Steam is then turned on, and the cylinders are set in motion. When the bills have been thoroughly macerated, the pulp is drawn off and taken to a paper-machine, where it is made into sheets of paper, and afterwards sold.

Some one suggested the idea of using part of the pulp to make little fancy images. The idea was adopted, and dainty little knick-knacks made of the pulp can be bought in the stores in Washington. The salesmen often induce the possible purchaser to buy by telling him that the image at one time represented a large sum of money.

To pick up one of these images is to give rise to thought, for here, embodied in a small compass, is that which was once part of the greatest power in the world.—Harper's Round Table.

Every Grocery Store
A Recruiting Station
For Thinking People

Join the wide-awake folks who eat for nourishment and strength. Put on the daily food list. Supplants oatmeal in taste, non-heating and in absence of husky irritating particles. Good enough for three times a day.

WHEATLET

Ask your GROCER for it to-day.

MADE ONLY BY THE
Franklin Mills Co., Lockport, N.Y.

Photography Simplified.

Picture taking with the Improved Bullet camera is the refinement of photographic luxury. It makes photography easy for the novice—delightful for everybody.

LOADS IN DAYLIGHT with our light-proof film cartridges, or can be used with glass plates. Splendid achromatic lens, improved rotary shutter, set of three stops. Handsome finish.

Price, Improved No. 2 Bullet, for pictures 3½ x 3½ inches,	$10.00
Light-proof Film Cartridge, 12 exposures, 3½ x 3½	.60

EASTMAN KODAK CO.

Booklet Free. Rochester, N. Y.

How to Disinfect.

We desire to mail you free, a valuable illustrated book prepared at great expense. Simple directions on disinfecting in cases of contagious diseases and in everyday life—sinks, sewers, etc. Send your address.

* * "Sanitas" Co., Ld., 636 West 55th St., N. Y.

Does Your Hair Fall Out?

Is it getting thin—lessening in volume? If so, I can help you. If totally bald do not write. Select family patronage for ten years. Send self-addressed stamped envelope to Miss RACHEL T. WYATT, Centerville, Mass

DON'T BOIL Whitman's INSTANTANEOUS Chocolate—doesn't need it. Made in a jiffy, with boiling water or milk. Sold everywhere.

THOSE answering advertisements appearing in The Outlook will confer a favor upon the advertiser as well as the publisher by mentioning this publication.

Recreation Department

It will give The Outlook Company much pleasure to assist you in planning your

Autumn Outing

if you will write stating fully what you desire. No charge is made for this service.

Suggestions for planning a vacation or a trip anywhere in the world; printed information, if issued, concerning any Transportation Line, any Tour, any Hotel, or any Pleasure or Health Resort in any part of the world, will be sent on request, without charge, to any Outlook reader.

Address Recreation Department, The Outlook, 13 Astor Place, New York.

The Perplexing Problem

of a summer outing is solved by the handsome new book just issued by the Delaware and Hudson Railroad, containing illustrations of localities, hotels, and boarding-houses, maps, rates, routes, etc. Sent free on receipt of 4 cents postage. J. W. Burdick, General Passenger Agent, Albany, N. Y. H. G. Young, Second Vice-President.

TRAVELERS' R. R. GUIDE Formerly Appletons'.

R. R. Maps and Time-Tables. Conveniently Indexed. Monthly—25 cents. 24 Park Place, N. Y.

TRAVEL

UNION PACIFIC

The Overland Route—World's Pictorial Line

THE ONLY LINE WEST OF MISSOURI RIVER RUNNING BUFFET SMOKING AND LIBRARY CARS.

THE ORIGINAL OVERLAND ROUTE

It was the Route in '49!
It is the Route To-Day, and Will be for All Time to Come!

'49 '96

Fastest Train to the West,

"THE OVERLAND LIMITED"

CHICAGO to SAN FRANCISCO daily

in 3 days from Chicago
2½ days from Missouri River

Pullman Palace Sleepers; Dining Cars; Free Reclining Chair Cars; Buffet Smoking and Library Cars.

For tickets and full information call or address any Union Pacific agent, or E. L. LOMAX, Gen. Pass. & Tkt. Agt., Omaha, Neb.

EUROPE

Europe and the Orient

53 days. All Southern Europe 280.00

Late Summer Tours leaving New York every Saturday, 33 days, all expenses, visiting London and Paris, $175.

South France and Italy party, leaving New York Sept. 2d, 30th, and Oct. 3d, visiting England, France, Switzerland, and Italy, 60 days, all expenses, $460. First-class only.

Egypt and Palestine grand tour, sailing from New York Oct. 3d, by North German Lloyd S.S. Ems, visiting Gibraltar, Algiers, Italy, Egypt, Palestine, Constantinople, and Greece, high class, 113 days, all expenses, $860. First-class only.

Annual 'Round the World party, outward via San Francisco, Japan, China, and India, home via Egypt, Italy, Switzerland, France, and England, leaving Boston and New York Oct. 6th. All parties in charge of Experienced Conductors. For programmes, etc., apply to H. GAZE & SONS, Ltd. (52d Year), 113 Broadway, New York.

Lake of Como, Italy

GRAND HOTEL BELLAGIO

AND DEPENDANCE

HOTEL VILLA SERBELLONI

One of the finest Hotels in Europe. The most beautiful site on the Italian Lakes. Perfect sanitary arrangements Electric light. Telegraph in the hotel. L. BREITSCHMID, P.

GRAND VIEW SANATORIUM

WERNERSVILLE, PA.

The "Grand View" as seen from the Lebanon Valley

Delightful fall climate. Steam heat and open grates. Dry air. Grand scenery. A substantial table and home comforts. Rates and full information gladly sent. Drs. WENRICH & DEPPEN.

Europe

European Summer Resort

INNSBRUCK, TYROL, AUSTRIA

1,900 feet above the sea, with, dry, bracing climate; center for Coaching Trips and Excursions of all kinds; fine university, hospital, &c.

HOTEL TIROL (Open all the year.) Large, airy, sunny rooms, well furnished; superior cuisine; modern conveniences. Best references. Illustrated pamphlets on application. CARL LANDSEE, Prop'r.

MELROSE, SCOTLAND

The Abbey Hotel ABBEY GATE AND George and Abbotsford Hotel

HIGH STREET.—The only First-class Hotels in Melrose, both overlooking the ruins, and only two minutes' walk from Railway Station. Hotel 'Buses attend all Trains. G. HAMILTON, Proprietor.

CROWN HOTEL

Scarborough, Eng.

Occupying the finest position in ths beautiful seaside resort. Electric lights and bells throughout. Continental entrance lounge newly added. Terms on application. DOUGLAS GORDON (late of the Gordon Hotels, Lim.).

Stratford-on-Avon, England Golden Lion Hotel

This favorite Inn was known in Shakespeare's time as "Ye Peacocke Inn," 1613. JOHN FRY, Prop.

CHESTER, ENGLAND QUEEN HOTEL

First-Class Hotel, connected with the General Railway by covered Way. Lift. H. T. GOULD, Manager.

LUCERNE, SWITZERLAND

Hotel d'Angleterre First class; lift; finest situation in Lucerne; arrangement de pension; prices moderate; opens April 1st. F. HEFFEN, Prop.

INTERLAKEN, SWITZERLAND

Hotel AND Pension St. George

Situated directly on the main promenade, opposite the park and the mountains. Cable-cars connect with steamboats and railroads. Highly recommended. C. LICHTENBERGER.

Hotel Mont-Fleuri

TERRITET MONTREUX
LAKE OF GENEVA

600 Meters Above the Sea

First-class Hotel; most delightful and healthy situation; splendid view over the lake and the Alps; highly recommended to American families; summer and winter residence; lift, electric lights; moderate terms; omnibus at station Territet.

Circulars of The Outlook.

Europe

Munich, Germany

"Bayerischer Hof" (BAVARIA) Most fashionable Hotel

250 ROOMS & SALOONS

Electric Light, Lift, etc. Moderate terms.

Prop're, TH. SEIFwe. Director, H. SCHLENK.

HOLLAND

AMSTERDAM

AMSTEL HOTEL The largest hotel in Amsterdam. Strongly recommended to families. Every moderate comfort. Moderate prices

---

HOTELS AND RESORTS

California

HOTEL GREEN PASADENA, CAL. Accommodation for 400 guests. Occupies an entire block. Souvenir mailed.
G. G. GREEN, Owner. J. H. HOLMES, Mgr.

Colorado

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo.: The Antlers

Illustrated book, describing Colorado Springs, sent on request by E. BARNETT, Proprietor.

Massachusetts

BERKSHIRE HILLS.—A pleasant place to spend the Autumn months. Pleasant rooms; fine scenery; daily mail; piano; fresh vegetables, cream, and eggs. Adults $5; children reduction. Miss E. S. ROCKWELL, Alford, Berkshire Co., Mass.

Dr. Ring's Sanatorium

Arlington Heights, Mass. 8 Miles from Boston.

For HEALTH SEEKERS and persons requiring CHANGE, REST, and CARE. A delightful home for those who desire a small and select SANATORIUM. Thorough treatment by all forms of Electricity, Baths, and Massage. Circulars on application.

The Outlook Arlington Heights, Mass.—Delightful location for Autumn months, eight miles from Boston. Mrs. L. F. PERKINS.

Marblehead Rockmere Point COVE COTTAGES

The place on the North Shore to spend September.

Easy of access; grand views; prominent headland; beach; 35 minutes from Boston.

Reduced Rates for September

Also to rent, well-furnished house of 7 rooms. Apply J. R. GILES, Marblehead, Mass.

Massachusetts

Spend September at MAGNOLIA, MASS.

Stay at

The Magnolia

Excellent roads overarched with trees. Magnificent ocean views. Service of highest standard. Special rates. One hour from Boston on North Shore. Address for pamphlet and rates, H. W. PRIEST, Prop.

TACONIC FARM MOUNT WASHINGTON, Berkshire Co., Mass.—Rooms for Sept. and Oct. Finest air and scenery in the Berkshires. H. F. KEITH.

"THE BREAKWATER"

WOODS HOLL, MASS.

This family hotel is situated in a most unique spot, being about 150 feet from waters of Woods Holl, Great Harbor (Vineyard Sound), and about 250 feet from Buzzard's Bay, and adjacent to Penzance. Fine bathing beach on Buzzard's Bay. Plumbing and drainage approved by sanitary agency of Boston. Superior table and service. Select patronage. Mrs. CAROLINE M. CARCANO, Proprietress, Woods Holl, Mass.

New Hampshire

Forest Hills Hotel and Cottages

HEART OF THE WHITE MTS.

Golf link, wheel track, casino. Up to date in every respect. MAY TO NOVEMBER.

J. W. DUDLEY & CO., Proprietors,
Franconia, N. H.

FOR AN AUTUMN OUTING

in bracing climate, pine and balsam air, address SOO-NIPI PARK LODGE, New London, N.H. Private hotel on east shore of Lake Sunapee, 1,200 ft. above sea. Modern improvements, home comforts, and quiet. 400 acres of forest-covered private grounds. Grouse and woodcock shooting; trout and salmon fishery operations; boating, beach-bathing, mountain drives and rambles; rich autumn foliage. N. Y. physician. Rooms for September and October at reduced rates.

WHITE MTS.

September Rates at the

NEW MOUNT PLEASANT HOUSE

Excellent rooms at $35.00 per week for two, or $25.00 to $30.00 in the cottage. Address MOUNT PLEASANT HOUSE, N H. ANDERSON & PRICE, Mgrs.

New York

"THE OUTLOOK" MOUNT PROSPECT. 1,500 ft. altitude. Overlooking city. Grand views, continuous breezes, dry air, broad verandas, excellent table, pure water, comfort and quiet. Rate, $6.00. W. B. CLEVES, Binghamton, N. Y.

EARL HOUSE FREEHOLD, N. Y.—Beautifully located in the midst of the Catskill Mountains. Tennis and baseball grounds, bowling-alley, and croquet. Post and telegraph offices 6 minutes' walk from house. JOSEPH EARL, Mangr.

"INTERPINES" Wickham Park, Goshen, N. Y.

A BEAUTIFUL, QUIET, RESTFUL "HOME."

Particularly adapted to Chronic and Nervous Invalids of refinement who require all the appointments of an elegant modern home, together with the constant attention of skilled physicians and trained nurses. Address FREDERICK W. SEWARD, M.D., Resident Physician.

Oak Crest Spring Valley, N.Y. A private home for invalids and aged people. Situated in the beautiful Ramapo Hills. A very healthy neighborhood. Pleasant drives over well-kept roads. Modern improvements. Write E. E. POTTS, Spring Valley, N. Y.

AUTUMN IN THE MOUNTAINS

WALTER'S SANITARIUM

WALTER'S PARK
(WERNERSVILLE), PA.

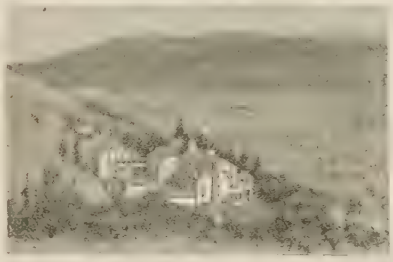
Sanitary treatment is a science in itself. For more than thirty years the Drs. Walter have been engaged in study, investigation, and practice, and, in addition to a location unequaled for natural advantages and a sanitarium unsurpassed in its facilities, are able to offer the most comprehensive advantages for the recovery of health, and the season of the year is now here in which the best results can be obtained. Address for illustrated catalogue, ROB'T WALTER, M.D., as above.

New York

GLEASON SANITARIUM

ELMIRA, N. Y.

1852 (Formerly Elmira Water Cure) 1896



REST AND RECREATION

GUESTS RECEIVED WITH OR WITHOUT MEDICAL ATTENTION

Pure Spring Water: Good Table; Fine Views; Pure Air. All forms of Baths, Electricity, and Massage. All modern improvements. Under the care of medical graduates of long experience. Send for illustrated Booklet.

WILLEY HOUSE

IN THE ADIRONDACKS

2,000 ft. above sea-level. For illustrated circular address HARVEY WILLEY, Hurricane, N. Y.

Dr. Strong's Sanitarium

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

For health or pleasure. The appointments of a first-class Hotel. Elevator, electric bells, sun-parlor, and promenade on the roof. Suites of rooms with baths. Massage, Electricity, all baths and health appliances. New Turkish, Russian, and Natural Sulphur-Water baths. Dry tonic air, Saratoga water, croquet, lawn-tennis, etc. Open all the year. Send for illustrated circular.

THE GLEN SPRINGS Watkins Glen, N. Y.

A Sanatorium for those Seeking Health and Rest under the Medical management of experienced Physicians.

Neptune Brine Baths, for RHEUMATISM, GOUT, and NERVOUS DISEASES. Neptune Spring is a 67° Brine, containing the largest amount of Chloride of Calcium of any Spring in the world.

Carbonated Neptune Brine Baths (the Nauheim treatment), for chronic diseases of the Heart. All approved forms of Hydrotherapy and Electricity, Massage, Swedish Movements, Turkish and Russian Baths.

Valuable Mineral Springs, Muriated, Alkaline, Chalybeate, Iodo-Bromated, and Brine, especially efficacious in disorders of Digestion, Gouty conditions, Diabetes, Anæmia, Nervous diseases, and Chronic affections of the Kidney.

Climate mild, dry, and equable. No Malaria. No Hay-Fever. Location overlooks thirty miles of Seneca Lake. Sixty acres of private Park, Golf Links, Tennis Courts, Bowling-Alleys, &c. All the appointments of a first-class hotel. No Insane or other objectionable cases received. Correspondence with physicians solicited. Send for illustrated book.

WM. E. LEFFINGWELL, Manager, Watkins, N.Y.

Pennsylvania

Mountain House Delaware Water Gap, Pa.

Twenty-sixth season. A comfortable, attractively located, popular house at this well-known resort. Send for circular. Mrs. THEO. HAUSER & SON.

The Water Gap Sanitarium Pa.

Columbia Bicycles

$100 TO ALL ALIKE.

Worth paying $100 for the satisfaction a Columbia gives.

POPE MFG. CO.

General Offices and Factories, HARTFORD, CONN.

Branch Stores and Agencies in almost every city and town. If Columbias are not properly represented in your vicinity, let us know.

THE HAIR 26th Ed., 25 cts (or stamps). Why it Falls off, Turns Grey, and the Remedy. By Prof. HARLEY PARKER. W. E. LONG & CO., 1013 Arch St., Phila., Pa. Every one should read this little book."—Athenæum.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED. Our INVISIBLE TUBE Cushions help when all else fails, as glasses help eyes. NO PAIN. Whispers heard. Send to F. Hiscox Co., 853 B'way, N. Y., for Book and Proofs FREE

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS

Want advertisements of thirty words or less will be published under this heading at one dollar a week. Four cents a week is charged for each word in excess of thirty.

YOUNG LADIES wishing to attend Brooklyn schools may find board and home comforts at Mrs. A. Amrath's private house, 525 Lafayette Ave. Motherly care and training given to younger children. German taught if desired. Refers to Rev. John W. Chadwick.

A YOUNG LADY wishing to spend the winter in Boston in finishing studies will be received into the family of a physician, who can give the advantages and comforts of a refined home, with undoubted references as to social position. No boarders. Address X. Y. Z., No. 1,778, The Outlook Office.

A TRAINED NURSE of several years' experience in both hospital and private practice desires a position in physician's office, or as companion-nurse. Best references from prominent physicians. Address "NURSE," No. 1,772, care The Outlook.

A WOMAN of three years' experience desires a position as matron or housekeeper in a school, college, or institution. Understands catering for students. References given. Address BROOKLYN, No. 1,718, care The Outlook.

GOVERNESS—the last 4 years in a family in Philadelphia, Pa.—wishes similar position, or to teach in private school. All school branches and music. Specialties: Languages and Art. Address T. E., Seal P. O., Chester Co. Pa COMPANION.—An educated and refined lady of middle age desires a position as companion. No objection to traveling. Highest references. Address Miss E. M., 104 Prospect Street, Binghamton, N. Y.

YALE UNIVERSITY.—For rent near Yale University, several first-class houses; two of them furnished. Also smaller rents in half-house and flats. Address JOHN T. SLOAN, New Haven, Conn.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.—For sale or to rent, 15-room house, near Yale College and the center of the city. Garden, city water, gas, sewer connection, furnace. Address T., No. 1,726, care The Outlook.

A COLLEGE STUDENT of experience in teaching desires for the school year a position as tutor and companion to one or more boys. References given. Address H. B. REED, Oberlin, Ohio.

BOARD in private family in New York City for girl students. References given and required. For particulars address, until September 15th, Box 64, Siasconset, Massachusetts.

EDUCATIONAL

New York City

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established 1855. 3 East 14th St., N. Y.

BERKELEY SCHOOL

(Combining city and country life), New York City. Besides the day school thirty-five boarding pupils are received, in two separate buildings, under seven resident teachers, securing the most complete home life. Fire-proof school house, armory, gymnasium, ten-acre playground—the Berkeley Oval—Oval Cottage, Manual Training, and Military Drill fully presented in the register for '96. 250 boys have been prepared for the leading colleges. JOHN S. WHITE, LL.D., Head Master.

NEW YORK LAW SCHOOL 120 Broadway, New York City. "Dwight Method" of Instruction
LL.B. in two years. Graduate course, one year. High standards. Largest Law School east of Michigan. Send for catalogue. GEORGE CHASE, Dean.

Miss S. D. Doremus
BOARDING and DAY SCHOOL for GIRLS
REOPENS OCTOBER 1st.
735 Madison Avenue, New York.

MRS. ELLIMAN'S KINDERGARTEN AND ELEMENTARY CLASS opens Oct. 1st. Training-class for kindergartners. One year's course. Practice work. Class limited. 1786 Broadway, N. Y. City.

The Misses Ely's School for Girls
RIVERSIDE DRIVE
85th and 86th Streets, New York

TWENTY-FIFTH YEAR OF
MISS GIBBONS' SCHOOL
New York City, 55 West 47th St. Mrs. SARAH H. EMERSON, Principal. Primary and Advanced Classes. Preparation for all Colleges. A few boarding scholars taken. Reopens Sept. 30, 1896.

The Misses Graham (Successors to the Misses Green)
BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS (established 1816).
New location. 176 West 72d Street, Sherman Square,
NEW YORK

School of Social Economics
UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK CITY
Reopens Sept. 21. Prepares for citizenship, business, regents' examinations, colleges, and professional schools. Both sexes. Endowed; annual fee $50. For circulars address GEORGE GUNTON, President.

N.Y.U. Evening Law School (Formerly Metropolis Law School.) Opens Oct. 1. 1896. LL.B. after three years' evening course.
TUITION, $100. NO INCIDENTAL FEE.
Address for catalogue, REGISTRAR, University, Washington Square, East, or Vice Dean CLARENCE D. ASHLEY,
207 Broadway, N. Y. City.

Miss Peebles and Miss Thompson's Boarding and Day School for Girls
30, 32, and 34 East 57th St., New York
Special students admitted.

Teachers College NEW YORK (MORNINGSIDE HEIGHTS, 120TH STREET, WEST).—Department of the Kindergarten. Three distinctive features: (3) High standards of attainment and admission,—an inducement to women of education, refinement, and executive power. A preparatory course giving specific preparation for the Kindergarten Department. (See adv. in Outlook for April 18 and 25.)
WALTER L. HERVEY, President.

Union Theological Seminary
700 Park Avenue, New York
The next term will begin Wednesday, September 23, 1896.
The Faculty will meet in the President's room at 9:30 A.M., receiving applications for admission.
Rooms will be drawn at 2 P.M.
The opening address will be delivered by PRESIDENT HASTINGS
in the Adams Chapel, Thursday, Sept. 24th, at 4 P.M.
E. M KINGSLEY, Secy.

160-162 West 74th Street, New York
THE VELTIN SCHOOL
Reopens October 5th. School for Girls. College Preparation. Fire-proof School Building.

Misses Whitfield and Bliss Boarding and Day School for Girls, 41 West 124th Street, Mount Morris Park, New York City. Reopens October 1st.

California

POMONA COLLEGE, Claremont, Cal.—Full College courses leading to degrees of B.A., B.L., B.S. Degrees recognized by University of California and other similar graduate schools. Thirty-five miles from Los Angeles. An Academic course. Preparatory school preparing for all institutions connected with the College. Address C. G. BALDWIN, President.

Connecticut

Brookfield Center, Fairfield Co., Conn.
The Curtis School for Young Boys
A strong life in school and out, full of normal activities and healthy conditions. A clean moral atmosphere, a loyalty, a high purpose—full of help for your boy's manhood. Home life; single rooms. $500. 22d year. A book full of suggestion. FREDERICK S CURTIS.

The Housatonic Valley Institute Cornwall, Conn.
Among the Berkshire Hills of Northwestern Connecticut. Home School for boys. Classical, Scientific, Business, Preparatory Courses. Thirteenth year.
H. B. MacFarland, S.B., L. W. Arnold, A.B., Principals.

The Misses Stowe Principals of the HOMESTEAD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, Greenwich, Ct. A Family School for 12 Girls.

Academy and Home for 10 Boys
GREENWICH, CONN.
71st year of Academy, 17th of Home. Preparation for College or Business. Absolutely healthful location and genuine home, with refined surroundings. Gymnasium. References required. J. H. ROOT, Principal.

HARTFORD THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY 63d Year Opens Oct. 7, 1896.
Unexcelled Advantages for College Graduates.
HARTFORD, CONN.

714 Asylum Ave., Hartford, Conn.
Home School for Young Girls Limited number. English and college preparatory courses. JULIA B. BURBANK

Woodside Seminary Terms, $500 to $700. City advantages for culture and study. Experienced teachers.
Miss SARA J. SMITH, Principal, Hartford, Conn.

THE Hotchkiss School
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
Prepares for the best colleges and scientific schools. The next year will begin Sept. 16, 1896.
EDWARD G. COY, Head Master.

The Taconic School for Girls
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
Opens Sept. 30. Admission to college by certificate.
Miss ELIZA HARDY LORD, Principal.

Yale Divinity School
Term Opens Sept. 24
The School offers many University advantages. For catalogues or information address
Prof. GEO. B. STEVENS, New Haven, Conn.

Mrs. and Miss Cady's SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
56 Hillhouse Avenue, New Haven, Conn.
Circulars sent on application. Address, until Sept. 1st, Grenell, Thousand Islands, New York.

YALE DIVINITY SCHOOL
The next term will begin on Thursday, September 24. Rooms will be drawn on the day previous. Applications to be made to Professor GEORGE B. STEVENS, Secretary, New Haven, Conn.

Miss Baird's Institute for Girls
NORWALK, CONN.—25th year. Primary, Academic, and College Preparatory courses. Music, Art, and the Languages. Careful attention to morals and manners. New buildings, steam heat, gymnasium.

OLD LYME, Conn. Boxwood School for Girls
Elective and college preparatory. Special advantages in Art and Music. Separate department for girls under twelve. Mrs. RICHARD SILL GRISWOLD.

MISS AIKEN'S BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. Daily drill in Miss Aiken's method. Prepares for college. For terms and circular apply to Principal Mrs. HARRIET BEECHER SCOVILLE DEVAN, Stamford, Conn.

Connecticut

"What we do, we do well."

On September 21st the old bell will ring in our 58th year.

Betts Academy,
Stamford, Conn.
Home life and the individual are the keynotes at this school. Each boy is taught how to study—how to think and reason for himself, and is trained in observation and research.

Preparation for any Technical School or University, and a liberal, practical training to those not intending to enter college.

New building, modern conveniences. Large, beautiful grounds adapted for athletics and out-door sports of all seasons. Illustrated catalogue on application. Personal inspection preferred. (One hour from New York.) WM. J. BETTS, M.A. (Yale), Principal.

STAMFORD, CONN.
MISS LOW'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
Miss Low and Miss HEYWOOD, Principals.

THE CHOATE SCHOOL FOR BOYS
MARK PITMAN, A.M., Principal Wallingford, Conn.
References
Hon. Wm. G. Choate, New York.
Rev. Edward Everett Hale, D.D., Boston.
Dr. Francis Bacon, New Haven.
Hon. Nathaniel Shipman, Hartford.

YOUNG LADIES' INSTITUTE Windsor, Conn.
A Home School for Girls of all ages. Refers to the Board of Examiners of five colleges as to the thoroughness of its instruction, and to its patrons for the care of the health and morals of its pupils. Terms, $350 to $500. For circulars address Miss J. S. WILLIAMS, Prin.

District of Columbia

Washington, D. C. (Cor. M and Eleventh Sts., N.W.)
Mount Vernon Seminary
English, French, and German Boarding and Day School for Young Girls. Opens September thirtieth.
Mrs. ELIZABETH J. SOMERS, Principal.

France

A FRENCH LADY, Professor at the Lycée Racine, Paris, would receive in her family young ladies wishing private instruction, or the opportunity of studying at the Lycée. Address Mlle. GOUNIAULT, 24 Rue de la Chaise, Paris.

Germany

BERLIN, GERMANY
American Home School for Girls
Mrs. MARY B. WILLARD, Principal, will spend the month of August in the United States, and will return to Germany with pupils in September. Address 2019 O Street, Washington, D. C.

GERMANY, BERLIN Kleiststrasse, 26. Fräulein Lange's school for young ladies offers the best opportunities in languages, music, art, literature, and home culture. Also Normal course. Beautiful and healthful location. Students enter any time. Best American references.

Indiana

Rose Polytechnic Institute
Terre Haute, Ind. A School of Engineering. Mechanical, Electrical, Civil Engineering, Chemical courses. Well-endowed. Extensive Shops and Foundry. Modernly equipped Laboratories in all departments. Expenses low. Address C. L. MEES, President.

Maryland

1405 Park Ave., Baltimore, Md.
RANDOLPH-HARRISON
Boarding and Day, College Preparatory, and Finishing School. Resident native French and German Teachers. Special advantages also in Music, Art, and Gymnastics. Mrs. JANE RANDOLPH HARRISON RANDALL, Principal.

ST. GEORGE'S HALL, St. George's, Md.—In the highlands, 15 miles from Baltimore. 21st year. A limited home school for boys. Individual instruction. Primary, academic, business courses. Extensive athletic grounds, new buildings, modern conveniences. J. C. KINEAR, A.M.

Massachusetts

Mount Doma Home School for Girls
Prepares for college. Send for circular.
Rev. E. C. WINSLOW, A.M., Amherst, Mass.

OAK GROVE HOME SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, Amherst, Mass. Reopens September 23d, 1896. Certificate admits to Smith and Wellesley.
Miss VRYLING WILDER BUFFUM, A.B., Principal

ANDOVER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
Term begins Sept. 16. Opening lectures at 4 P.M.
For catalogue or further information apply to
GEORGE HARRIS, President of the Faculty.

Massachusetts

ANDOVER, MASS.

ABBOT ACADEMY for Young Ladies

Begins its 68th year September 17th, offering enlarged opportunities. Three Seminary Courses of study and a College-fitting Course. Address
Miss LAURA S. WATSON, Principal.

BRADFORD ACADEMY

Founded 1803. For the higher education of young women. Classical and scientific course of study, also Preparatory and optional. Year begins Sept. 16, 1896. Apply to Ida C. Allen, Prin., Bradford, Mass.

Eastern Teachers' Agency

Miss E. F. FOSTER, Manager
50 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.
TELEPHONE, BOSTON, 775-2

Teachers furnished for all grades of public and private schools, Specialists in any desired branches, Tutors and Governesses.

Boston University Law School

New Hall, Ashburton Place,
Opens Oct. 7. Boston, Mass.

18 Newbury St., Boston, Mass.

Miss Frances V. Emerson's School for Girls

College Preparatory, Regular and Advanced Courses.

Hitchcock Free High School

BRIMFIELD, MASS.

The forty-first year will begin Sept. 1, 1896.

This is an academy which fits pupils for all colleges. No charge for tuition. Boarding-house connected with the school; pupils boarded at cost.

For further information address
GEO. W. EARLE, Principal.
GEO. M. HITCHCOCK, Clerk.

THE CAMBRIDGE SCHOOL A select, private school for girls.

Best preparation for college. Many courses not leading to college. Comforts of home. Mr. ARTHUR GILMAN is the Director, Cambridge, Mass.

PROSPECT HILL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

GREENFIELD, MASS.

A thorough education with good home influence.
Established 1869.
Miss IDA F. FOSTER,
Miss CAROLINE R. CLARK, } Principals.

LOWELL, MASS. ROGERS HALL

A Home School for Girls and Young Women. Certificate admits to Smith and Wellesley. Reopens October first. Terms, $750. References: Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer, Mrs. Frederic T. Greenhalge. For further particulars address Mrs. E. P. UNDERHILL, M.A., Principal.

ATTRACTIVE LIFE CALLING

An unequaled opportunity for some of our best men and women in the "new profession"—lay Sunday-school and Missionary work. The School for Christian Workers, Springfield, Mass., should enter 100 leaders Sept. 9th in order to begin to fill the demand. New: Ladies' Home. recognized practical missionary instructor, decision by trustees to place Institution on highest educational basis and secure as president a leader among college and seminary presidents. Arouse your friends and send for catalog.

Windsor Hall School

prepares girls for Radcliffe and other colleges. Studies elective in other courses. Comfortable home. Ten miles from Boston. Dr. CHARLES H. CLARK, Principal,
WABAN, MASSACHUSETTS

WESLEYAN ACADEMY

WILBRAHAM, MASS.—Both Sexes. Nine Courses. Specialists in Classics, Arts, and Music. Enlarged endowment insures superior advantages at moderate expense. 80th year. Opens Sept. 16, 1896. For Catalogue address
Rev. WM. R. NEWHALL, Prin.

Miss Kimball's School for Girls Worcester, Mass.

Thorough preparation for College. Intermediate, Academic, and Special Courses. Send for Illustrated Circular

HIGHLAND MILITARY ACADEMY, Worcester ("The Academic City"), Mass. 41st year. Best preparation for College, Professional or Business Life. Healthful location. Careful selection and supervision of students. Small Classes.
JOSEPH ALDEN SHAW, A.M., Head Master.

New Hampshire

The Phillips Exeter Academy

The 114th year begins September 16th, 1896. Eighty Scholarships awarded to students of high standing. For Catalogue and illustrated Supplement address
HARLAN P. AMEN, Principal, Exeter, N. H.

New Hampshire

COLBY ACADEMY, New London, N. H.

$200 to $250 a Year. Co-educational. 44th Year.
Send for Catalogue. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, PRESIDENT

New Jersey

Whether she means to be a "bread-winner" or a "home-maker," your daughter should attend

The Bordentown (N. J.) Female College

under its new management. Refitted, refurnished, and supplied with every modern comfort and help. The President and Head Master, with their wives, provide an ideal school and a real home.

Send for a Catalogue and investigate our claims. Come to Bordentown, N. J., and see us. We want your daughter for our profit, your satisfaction, and her good.

REV. J. W. BLAISDELL, President.
FREDERICK T. SHULTZ, A.M., Head Master.

BORDENTOWN MILITARY INSTITUTE

Bordentown, N. J.

Prepares for Colleges and Government Academies. Music; Military Training; Government, a combination of parental and military. No compromise on tobacco, liquor, or hazing. Rev. T. H. LANDON, A.M., Prin. Capt. T. D. LANDON, Com'd't.

IVY HALL BRIDGETON, NEW JERSEY.

—Home and College Preparatory School for Young Ladies. Certificate admits to Smith. Established 1861. Mrs. J. ALLEN MAXWELL, Principal.

SOUTH JERSEY INSTITUTE Bridgeton, N. J.

27th year begins Sept. 16. Both sexes. Prepares for any College, Teaching, or Business. French, German, Art, Music, Gymnasium. Competent Physical Director. Spacious campus and athletic field. Pure water, drainage perfect. H. K. TRASK, Principal.

Englewood, N. J. (14 miles from New York)

Dwight School for Girls 8th year.

New, pleasant home; finest educational advantages. College preparation. Miss CREIGHTON. Miss FARRAR.

MISS GERRISH'S School for Girls

Englewood, New Jersey
Collegiate and special courses of study.

FREEHOLD, NEW JERSEY

Young Ladies' Seminary

Preparation for College. Seminary Course. Post-Graduate Studies. Art, Music, Oratory. For catalogue apply to the Misses SEWALL, Principals.

PEDDIE INSTITUTE Hightstown, N. J.

Prepares for College, Teaching, Business. Courses in German, French, Music Art. Both sexes. 29th year opens Sept. 9th.
Address Rev. JOSEPH E. PERRY, Ph.D., Prin.

Lakewood Heights School

"Among the Pines."
THOROUGH AND ATTRACTIVE.
Prepares for College, Scientific Schools, or Business. $600.
JAMES W. MOREY, A.M., Principal.
LAKEWOOD, N. J.

Glenwood Collegiate Institute

MATAWAN, NEW JERSEY

A thorough preparatory school. Co-educational. Moderate price. Classical, Scientific, and Special Courses. Graduates this year enter Columbia, Rutgers, and Vassar Colleges. One of its graduates is the Republican Candidate for Vice-President of the U. S. Character-building is one of the chief objects of the system of education in this institution. Address the Principal.

Montclair Military Academy,

Montclair, N. J.

Under a tutor a boy receives careful instruction, but lacks the stimulus of rivalry. In a large class he has the rivalry, but cannot have particular attention. We combine the merits and avoid the defects of both systems by having small classes. Failure to properly prepare lessons is always revealed in our recitations.

J. G. MACVICAR,
Head Master.

New Jersey

Miss Dana's School for Girls, Morristown, New Jersey, will reopen September 23. Certificate admits to Smith, Wellesley, and Baltimore Colleges. Music and Art. Resident native French and German teachers. Nearness to New York affords special advantages. Boarding pupils, $700.

MOUNT HOLLY, N. J. Academic and College Preparatory School for Girls reopens September 16. References: Gov. Griggs, The Rev. Waldo Burnett. Apply to Miss PARK, A.B.,

Miss HARRIMAN, A.B., } Principals.

Miss Townsend's School for Girls

Academic and college preparatory departments. Special courses. Sept. 29. 54 Park Place, Newark, N. J.

The Misses Anable's English, French, and German Boarding and Day School

NEW BRUNSWICK, NEW JERSEY
College Preparation, Art, and Music. Apply for circulars

SUMMIT, N. J. Near New York

The Kent Place School for Girls

Principal, Mrs. Sarah Woodman Paul, late of Wellesley College. Modern methods. College preparation. Home comforts for boarding pupils.
HAMILTON W. MABIE, President.

New York

AUBURN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

ESTABLISHED 1820

Next term begins Wednesday, September 16, 1896. Opening address by Professor Willis J. Beecher, D.D. For information write to HENRY M. BOOTH, President, Auburn, N.Y.

Wells College for the higher education of young women.

The catalogue gives full information about entrance requirements, courses of study, scholarships, expenses, etc., and will be mailed upon application to WILLIAM E. WATERS, Ph.D., President, Aurora, N. Y.

THE BROOKLYN HEIGHTS SEMINARY,

138-140 Montague St., Brooklyn, N. Y. Boarding and Day School for Girls. 4[illegible]th year opens September 24th. College preparation. Terms, $700. For circulars address the Seminary.
CLARA R. COLTON, ISABEL D. HUBBARD,
KATHARINE S. WOODWARD, } Principals.

CAYUGA LAKE MILITARY ACADEMY

Aurora, N. Y.—A live military school; strict discipline, thorough work. Beautiful and healthful location. $400.00 per year. Col. VASA E. STOLBRAND, Superintendent.

The Lady Jane Grey School

Binghamton, N. Y.—Home School for Girls. Address Mrs. JANE GREY HYDE.

284 Delaware Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO SEMINARY

The forty-sixth year. For circulars address
Mrs. C. F. HARTT, Principal.

THE HUDSON RIVER INSTITUTE

A Classical Seminary of high grade for boys and girls. Beautiful and healthful location in the Hudson River Valley. A record of forty-two years of uninterrupted successful educational work. Conservatory of Music, Art, and Elocution. 43d year begins Sept. 16. For catalogues address Rev. A. H. FLACK, A.M., Principal, Claverack, N. Y.

CANANDAIGUA, N. Y.

Granger Place School for Girls

A Collegiate Course of Study. Diplomas given. Preparatory course admits to leading colleges by certificate. Special attention given to the culture of girls who are not expecting to enter college, but desire a thorough and practical education.

DREW LADIES' SEMINARY

CARMEL, N. Y.

31st year begins Sept. 24th. New gymnasium and music hall. "An excellent educational institution."—Chauncey M. Depew. "A delightful home school."—Margaret Bottome. Illustrated catalogue.
JAMES M. YEAGER, D.D., Pres.

NEW YORK, Clinton.

Houghton Seminary

offers to young women care, comfort, and culture. College Preparatory. 36th year.

(For other advertisements in this department see following page.)

New York

New York Military Academy

CORNWALL-ON-HUDSON

For boarding cadets only. Distinctively military in organization and discipline. Located on the Hudson River four miles from West Point, in a region famous for its beauty and healthfulness. For catalogue address

S. C. JONES, C.E., Superintendent.

Fort Edward Collegiate Institute

For young women and girls. A choice of six courses or special studies. 39th year Sept. 22d, 1896. $350. Illustrated catalogue. JOS. E. KING, Pres., Fort Edward, N. Y.

COLGATE ACADEMY

HAMILTON, N. Y.

Boys' school. Prepares for College or Scientific School. Cottage dormitories; new gymnasium; ample grounds for sports. Opens Sept. 10th. Send for particulars to

F. L. SHEPARDSON, A.M., Principal.

MISS BENNETT'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Irvington-on-Hudson, N. Y. Opens Sept. 23d, 1896. An exceptional school with the most desirable school features, 20 miles from New York. Refers to Charles Dudley Warner, &c. Apply to the Principals,

Miss May F. Bennett, Miss Eleanor W. Rose.

Kindergarten Training School with Practice School

Two years' course. Reopens Oct. 1st at 305 East 41st St., N. Y. City. Address Mrs. M. F. WALTON, Rochelle Park, New Rochelle, N. Y.

Rockland Institute

Nyack-on-the-Hudson, N. Y.

Young men and boys, $360; no extras. For College, Business, and Thorough English, Stenography and Music. "A Safe Home." Veteran teachers; individual progress; firm discipline; superior physical course; athletics. The only school with free saddle-horses and boys' ponies.

Capt. J. WILSON, A.M. (ex-cavalry officer), Prin.

The Peekskill Military Academy

Peekskill, N. Y.—63d year. Send for illustrated catalogue. Col. LOUIS H. ORLEMAN, Prin.

ST. JOHN'S SCHOOL

MANLIUS, N. Y.

Next term begins September 16th, 1896.

Apply to WM. VERBECK.

New York, Newburgh.

The Misses Mackie's School for Girls

Academic and College-Preparatory. Special advantages in Art and Music. Certificate admits to Vassar and Wellesley.

One and a half hours from New York.

LYNDON HALL SCHOOL

For Young Ladies. 48th year. College preparation. SAMUEL WELLS BUCK, A.M., Poughkeepsie, N. Y

TEMPLE GROVE SEMINARY

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.

For Young Women

Forty-second year begins Sept. 23d.

CHARLES F. DOWD, Ph.D., Pres.

Send for year-book giving details of courses to Franklin B. Dowd, Asst Prin.

SETAUKET SEMINARY

Setauket, Long Island, New York.—Fourth year will begin Sept. 23d, 1896. Terms, $225. Address Principal.

Mount Pleasant Military Academy

A high-grade school for boys. Fits for college and for business. Eighty-second year. Library of 12,000 volumes. Reference: Hon. Joseph H. Choate; Hamilton W. Mabie, L.H.D. Charles F. Brusie, A.M., Arthur T. Emory, A.B., Principals. Sing Sing-on-Hudson.

Sing-Sing-on-the-Hudson, N. Y.

OSSINING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Prepares for college. Advance courses in Art and Music. Albert Ross Parsons, Musical Director. One hour from New York. 29th year begins Sept. 23d.

Miss C. C. Fuller, Principal.

HOME INSTITUTE

A Boarding and Day School for Girls. College preparation, Music, Languages, and Art. Miss M. W. Metcalf, Principal, Tarrytown-on-Hudson.

New York

IRVING INSTITUTE FOR BOYS

Tarrytown-on-Hudson, N. Y. 25 miles from N. Y. City. 41st year begins in September. Summer term.

J. M. FURMAN, A.M., Principal.

TROY, N. Y.

EMMA WILLARD SCHOOL

Preparation for all colleges open to women: four years' academic course; graduate courses; departments of music and art. 83d year opens Sept. 23, 1896.

MARY ALICE KNOX, Principal.

Ohio

Mt. Auburn Institute

The H. Thane Miller School

For Girls and Young Ladies

This noted School of Language, Literature, and History was established in 1856, and each succeeding year has witnessed its continued growth in usefulness and influence. It is beautifully located in one of the healthiest and handsomest suburbs of Cincinnati, is of easy access, and has a commanding view of the city. Among many attractive features are special courses in History of Art; Preparation for Foreign Travel; Eminent Lecturers throughout the entire year; Music and Art; Elective Courses of Study. The limited number of pupils received gives opportunity for special attention to Home Training and Social Culture. For catalogue and full information address

Mrs. H. THANE MILLER, or Miss EMMA LOUISE PARRY, Associate Principal, } Mt. Auburn, Cincinnati, Ohio.

1020 Prospect Street, Cleveland, Ohio

Miss Mittleberger's School for Girls

Prepares for all Colleges open to women.
Fall term begins September 23.

Oberlin Theological Seminary

62d year opens Sept. 23d, with special advantages in the College and the Conservatory of Music. E. I. BOSWORTH, Sec.

OXFORD, OHIO

THE WESTERN

A College and Seminary for Women

Miss Leila S. McKee, Ph.D., President. Forty-second year opens Sept. 9, 1896. Superior advantages for thorough Christian culture. Terms, $250 per year.

Lake Erie Seminary for Young Women

PAINESVILLE, O.

Thirty-eighth year opens Sept. 16. A new building for laboratories and lecture-rooms.

For circulars address Miss EVANS, Principal.

Pennsylvania

Miss Baldwin's School FOR GIRLS

BRYN MAWR, PA.

Preparatory to Bryn Mawr College

Miss Florence Baldwin, Prin. Within five years more than fifty pupils have entered Bryn Mawr College from this school. Certificate admits to Smith, Vassar, and Wellesley. Diploma given in both General and College-Preparatory Courses. Fine fire-proof stone building. 25 acres beautiful grounds. For circular address the Secretary.

ST. LUKE'S

Bustleton, near Philadelphia, Penna.

A school of the highest class in an exceptionally healthful location. St. Luke's boys now in Harvard, Princeton, Univ. of Pa., Yale, Trinity, West Point, Mass. Inst. of Tech., &c. Illustrated catalogue.

CHAS. H. STROUT, F. E. MOULTON.

Pennsylvania

NAZARETH HALL

NAZARETH Penna.

(Moravian) Military Academy. Founded 1785. Prepares for business or college. Modern equipment; home care; healthful location. Term opens Sept. 16, 1896. $330. For circulars address Rev. C. C. LANIUS, Principal.

Linden Hall Moravian Seminary

Lititz, Pa. (Near Philadelphia.) Opens Sept. 16th. For girls and young women. Healthful, beautiful, and retired. Preparatory, Academic, Post-Graduate, Music, Art, and Modern Languages. Rev. C. B. Shultz, D.D., Principal.

OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES

Opens Sept. 30. Established in 1850. Twenty minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. For circular, apply to Principals, Frances E. Bennett, Sylvia J. Eastman, Ogontz School P.O., Pa.

1350 Pine St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Miss Anable's Boarding & Day School for Young Ladies. Estab. in 1848. Circular on application.

Miss Gordon's French and English Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies and Little Girls

COLLEGE PREPARATORY

4110 and 4112 Spruce St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA SEMINARY

1325 N. Broad St., Phila. College preparatory. Languages, Art, Music, etc. 26th year. For circular address REBECCA E. JUDKINS, Principal.

WALNUT LANE SCHOOL

Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa.

Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies. Reopens Sept. 23d. Academic and College Preparatory courses.

Mrs. T. B. RICHARDS, Prin.
Miss S. L. TRACY, A.M., Associate.

THE WALTON-WELLESLEY SCHOOL

2101 and 2103 Spruce St., Philadelphia

For Girls. Possesses finest private property in city. Boarding and day. 15th year. Academic, College Preparatory, and Musical Depts. For illus. catalogue and references address Dr. and Mrs. James R. Danforth.

COLLEGE PREPARATORY AND PRIMARY classes; boarding and day school; both sexes; combined advantages of class work and individual instruction; earnest young people find here excellent opportunity to make up lost time. The work is thorough and practical, and the moral tone high. A spirit of earnest endeavor and of honest pride in each other's success pervades the place. The best evidence of the value of the school is to be found in the good opinion of its neighbors, patrons and pupils. Boarding pupils, $325 a year.

ARTHUR H. TOMLINSON, Principal

SWARTHMORE GRAMMAR SCHOOL

Swarthmore, Pa.

Home-Family School and College Preparatory for Girls

In the attractive and healthful town of West Chester, Pa. An hour's ride from Philadelphia.
Mrs. MARY SCHREINER SMITH, A.M., Principal.

Williamsport Dickinson Seminary

Both sexes. Regular and Elective Courses. Degrees conferred. Fits for College. Music, Art, Modern Languages, Specialties. Steam heat, electric light, home comforts. Write for catalogue.

E. J. GRAY, D.D., President, Williamsport, Pa.

Rhode Island

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

FRIENDS SCHOOL FOR BOTH SEXES

Founded in 1784. Excellent home. Students from 18 States. All denominations. Thorough work in English, Science, Classics, Music, and Art. Address

AUGUSTINE JONES, LL.B.

CHEVY CHASE

French and English Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies

Half an hour from Washington, D. C., by electric cars. French the Language of the house. Reopens October 1, 1896. Address

Mlle. Léa M. Bouligny

P. O. Station E, Washington, D. C.

"DON'T BORROW TROUBLE." BUY SAPOLIO 'TIS CHEAPER IN THE END.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS' NEW BOOKS

SENTIMENTAL TOMMY (Ready October 17th)

The Story of his Boyhood. By James M. Barrie. Illustrated by William Hatherell. 12mo, $1.50.

"Sentimental Tommy" has been the success of the year during its serial publication. It has been the one serial talked of, and, as more than one critic has said, to be "eagerly waited for." The conception of the story is entirely unique—that of making the loves and tragedies of his elders tell themselves through Tommy's mind and Tommy's experiences; and when in doing this Mr. Barrie has made Tommy one of the most delightful characters in fiction, he has made a book which, not to speak of its genius, is one of the most entertaining of the time.

New Books by R. L. Stevenson

In the South Seas. With map. 12mo, $1.50.

Made up from the interesting sketches contributed to periodicals by Mr. Stevenson, narrating his experiences and observations during cruises in the Marquesas, Paumotus, and the Gilbert Islands.

Fables. 16mo, $1.00.

Mr. Stevenson's delightful fables are here collected and issued for the first time in book form, uniform with the "Vailima Letters."

New Books by Eugene Field

Songs and Other Verse. 12mo, $1.25.
Second Book of Tales. 12mo, $1.25.

These two new volumes are made up of a selection of the best of Mr. Field's verses and tales remaining unpublished in book form at the time of his death, and contain some of his most charming work. A new edition of "The Holy Cross, and Other Tales" is also now issued, containing five additional tales.

Love in Old Cloathes

And Other Stories. By H. C. BUNNER. With 12 full-page illustrations by A. Castaigne, W. T. Smedley, and Orson Lowell. 12mo, $1.50.

This volume of stories by Mr. Bunner, collected under the title of one which his readers will remember affectionately, is marked throughout by the qualities which have endeared this master of the short story to so large a circle. The volume brings into permanent form some of the best things he ever wrote.

MRS. CLIFF'S YACHT (Ready October 3d)

By Frank R. Stockton. Illustrated by A. Forestier. 12mo, $1.50.

The many readers of Mr. Stockton's popular story, "The Adventures of Captain Horn," need no introduction to Mrs. Cliff. The further experiences of that interesting lady are here told with all of Mr. Stockton's breeziness of style and whimsical humor. All who read "The Adventures of Captain Horn" will be eager to take up this sequel and renew their acquaintance with Mrs. Cliff, while new readers will find in her one of Mr. Stockton's most original and entertaining characters.

The Sprightly Romance of Marsac

By MOLLY ELLIOT SEAWELL. Illustrated by Gustave Verbeck. 12mo, $1.25.

Marsac is a real discovery of Miss Seawell's. His character is best described as "sprightly," and the way in which the wit and good nature of this Bohemian of the Latin Quarter triumph over adverse circumstances and land him and his friend in affluence and bliss is told in a brisk narrative that recalls Mürger. The illustrations are numerous, and as original as the text.

A Tragic Idyl

By PAUL BOURGET. 12mo, $1.50.

The theme of M. Bourget's new novel is the warfare between love and friendship. It is an elaborate social study as well as a novel of absorbing interest, distinguished by the author's well-known analytic power and individual style. The opening scene is in the famous gambling Casino of Monte Carlo, and the reader is introduced at once to the cosmopolitan society which M. Bourget knows so well how to depict.

The Rogue's March

A Romance. By E. W. HORNUNG. 12mo, $1.50.

Thrilling incidents and daring adventures abound in Mr. Hornung's romance. No one who has read the author's "Irralie's Bushranger" and other Australian stories needs any assurance of the fascinating interest of that part of his new novel dealing with Australian scenes and types; and it is only necessary to say that the English as well as the Australian experiences of the much-wronged hero are told with characteristic dash and spirit.

THE LAST QUARTER CENTURY IN THE UNITED STATES

By E. Benjamin Andrews, President of Brown University. With 350 Illustrations. 2 vols. 8vo, $6.00.

President Andrews' work is absolutely unique. Never before have the many history-making events of this period been gathered together in a historical narrative by a competent hand. The illustrations, prepared at a great expense, are remarkable for their combination of artistic charm with absolute historical accuracy. Since its publication in SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE the History has been thoroughly revised and increased in size almost one-half, thus making it possible to include many topics omitted before on account of lack of space.

The Edge of the Orient

By ROBERT HOWARD RUSSELL. With 130 Illustrations. 12mo, $2.00.

An account of an interesting trip along the picturesque coast of Dalmatia and Montenegro, and continuing through Constantinople and the Eastern coast of Asia Minor to Cairo and the Nile. He brings to the portrayal of these Eastern localities a fresh eye and a graphic and picturesque style.

In Ole Virginia

By THOMAS NELSON PAGE. With 24 full-page Illustrations by A. B. Frost, Howard Pyle, W. T. Smedley, C. S. Reinhart, A. Castaigne, and B. W. Clinedinst. 12mo, $2.00.

This handsome volume contains Mr. Page's famous stories of Southern life—"Marse Chan," "Meh Lady," "Polly," "Unc' Edinburg," "Ole Stracted," and "No Haid Pawn"—with many beautiful illustrations.

Colonial Days in Old New York

By ALICE MORSE EARLE. 12mo, $1.25.

Mrs. Earle here describes the daily life, the habits, the dress, occupations, furniture, domestic economy, the characteristic customs of Dutch times in Old New York. She treats the subject as graphically and humorously as she treated New England in her former well-known books "Sabbath in Puritan New England" and "Customs and Fashions of Old New England."

HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE

By Professor George P. Fisher, Yale University. (International Theological Library.) Crown 8vo, $2.50 net.

"I know of no work that, in point of accuracy, comprehensiveness, and intelligibility, can be compared with this."—Prof. ALBERT NEWMAN, Toronto, Can.

"It is to me quite a marvel how a book of this kind can be written so accurately to scale. It could only be done by one who had a very complete command of all the periods."—Prof. WILLIAM SANDAY, Oxford.

Problems of Modern Democracy

By E. L. GODKIN. 8vo, $2.00.

A new volume of essays by an eminent journalist, dealing with the various questions of public, vital, and timely interest arising out of the great political force of the modern world—Democracy.

The Sense of Beauty

By GEORGE SANTAYANA, Lecturer at Harvard University. 12mo, $1.50.

The author's theory of æsthetics is original and interesting, and is elaborated in a style distinguished for its subtlety, clearness, and grace.

With Open Face

Or, Jesus Mirrored in Matthew, Mark, and Luke. By A. B. BRUCE, D.D. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

This volume presents popular sketches of the spirit and teachings of our Lord as exhibited in selected scenes from the Evangelic Records.

THE NATIONAL COOK BOOK

By Marion Harland and Christine Terhune Herrick. 12mo, $1.50.

This work is not a revision of old material, but is entirely new in every respect, and has been in preparation during a period of seven years. It contains 1,000 recipes carefully prepared in the light of the latest methods of cooking and serving. In addition to the value and interest the volume possesses as the joint work of two recognized authorities on domestic economy, the book is unique in that it includes dishes of various nations, adapted to the use of American housewives. An additional feature of value is a department devoted to the diet of children.

THE IVORY SERIES. New Volumes

One of the Visconti ☘ ☘ ☘ ☘

By EVA WILDER (McGLASSON) BRODHEAD. 16mo, 75 cents.

A charming love story, the scene of which is laid in Naples, the hero being a young Kentuckian, and the heroine of the old and famous Visconti family.

A Book of Martyrs ☘ ☘ ☘ ☘

By CORNELIA ATWOOD PRATT. 16mo, 75 cents.

Short stories of the every-day tragedies, mostly domestic, of life in the Central West, revealing an extraordinary knowledge of human nature and a masterly art in narration.

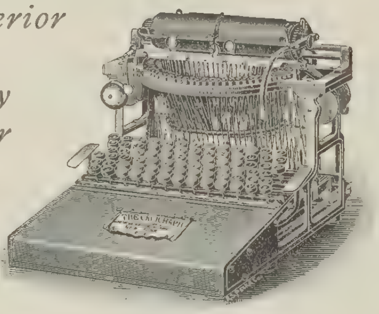
Previous Volumes: Amos Judd. By J. A. MITCHELL, Editor of Life. Seventh Edition.—Ia. A Love Story. By "Q" (ARTHUR T. QUILLER-COUCH).—Irralie's Bushranger. By E. W. HORNUNG.—A Master Spirit. By HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD.—The Suicide Club. By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.—Madame Delphine. By GEORGE W. CABLE. Each, 16mo, 75 cents.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 153-157 Fifth Avenue, New York

Use any test you like

and you will find the

No. 4 Caligraph Typewriter



Superior to every other

NEW CATALOGUE AND PAMPHLETS MAY BE HAD ON APPLICATION

AMERICAN WRITING MACHINE CO.
237 Broadway, New York, U. S. A.

Good Nature

good health, good looks, and good style come to the woman who breaks away from corsets and revels in the comfort of a Ferris Waist. Perfect in form and style, adding symmetry to the figure while it supports and strengthens,—the should be in every woman's wardrobe. Made in short or extra long waist, high or low bust.

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE CORSET WAIST

Children's, 25c. to 50c. Misses', 50c. to $1. Ladies', $1 to $2.
For sale by all retailers.

Noveltics in Black Goods.

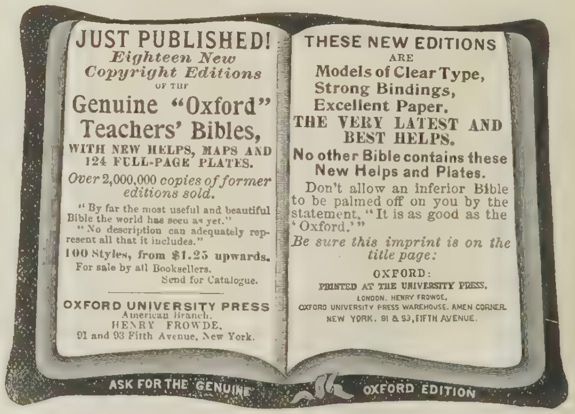
The largest and most complete assortment of Novelties in Black Goods, ever shown by us, is now on our counters, ready for inspection.

James McCreery & Co.

Broadway and 11th St.,
Twenty-third Street,
New York.

Brought up with conscientious care to the present hour. The beauty of the work, the perfect printing and paper, and the dainty binding made to last a student's lifetime, make a possession to be treasured by all who know how to value an exquisite volume. Surely it is appointed to become one of the old familiar faces in many a little study and great library.

The Very Rev. A. K. H. BOYD, D.D.,
Author of "The Recreations of a Country Parson.



JUST PUBLISHED!
Eighteen New Copyright Editions
OF THE
Genuine "Oxford" Teachers' Bibles,
WITH NEW HELPS, MAPS AND 124 FULL-PAGE PLATES.
Over 2,000,000 copies of former editions sold.

"By far the most useful and beautiful Bible the world has seen as yet."
"No description can adequately represent all that it includes."

100 Styles, from $1.25 upwards.
For sale by all Booksellers.
Send for Catalogue.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
American Branch.
HENRY FROWDE,
91 and 93 Fifth Avenue, New York.

THESE NEW EDITIONS ARE Models of Clear Type,
Strong Bindings,
Excellent Paper.
THE VERY LATEST AND BEST HELPS.
No other Bible contains these New Helps and Plates.

Don't allow an inferior Bible to be palmed off on you by the statement, "It is as good as the 'Oxford.'"

Be sure this imprint is on the title page:

OXFORD:
PRINTED AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS.
LONDON. HENRY FROWDE,
OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE. AMEN CORNER.
NEW YORK. 91 & 93, FIFTH AVENUE.

Also, Just Published, an Entirely New Series,

"OXFORD" WORKER'S BIBLE

containing 300 pages of Handy Helps.

All Bible Students should be in possession of the latest discoveries in Bible Lands. See

BIBLE ILLUSTRATIONS

A Series of Plates illustrating Biblical Versions and Antiquities; being an Appendix to the "Oxford" Bible for Teachers.
Long Primer. 8vo, Cloth, $1.00.

For sale by all Booksellers. New Catalogue Just Issued. Mailed on Application.

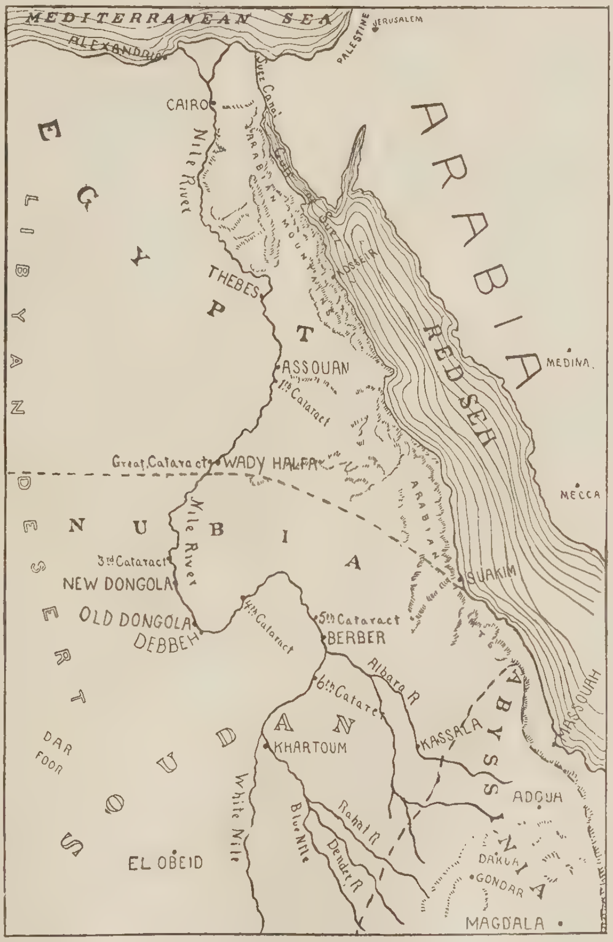
OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
AMERICAN BRANCH
HENRY FROWDE, 91 and 93 Fifth Ave., New York

The Outlook

A·Family·Paper

Volume 54 Saturday, 26 September, 1896 Number 13

THE capture of Dongola on last Saturday by the Anglo-Egyptian expedition accomplishes the end aimed at by the recent advance on the Nile as announced in Parliament before the expedition started. In point of fact, no one doubts that General Kitchener will push on to Berber and thence to Khartoum, thus reconquering the Soudan for Egypt and avenging the death of Gordon. The result of the summer's campaign is gratifying to British pride; no reverses have been encountered, and the only severe losses have been from cholera, which caused the death of over a thousand soldiers—mostly Egyptians. The only serious engagement with the Soudanese previous to last week was in the battle at Firket on June 7, when the forces of the Dervishes were defeated with great loss. The advance has been along the line of the Nile, and the troops have been accompanied by seven gunboats and numerous transports. This is the only reasonable way of attacking the Soudan, and the attempt to rescue Gordon might have succeeded if it had been well organized and had pushed rapidly up the river. The actual capture of Dongola followed the seizure of El Hafir, where the Dervishes made a stand and fought bravely but hopelessly against superior discipline and machine guns. While the fight was going on at El Hafir the British gunboats slipped up the river past the Dervishes and seized Dongola, so that the defeated forces were compelled to retreat away from their base of supplies. It is thought that they may make a desperate attempt to retake Dongola. The natives in the vicinity are said to hail with joy the coming of the Egyptian army, as they have long suffered from the tyranny of the Khalifa Abdallah, the successor of Mahdi. Abdallah, as all who read Slatin Pasha's account of his captivity will remember, is a man of overbearing vanity, cunning but not wise, and frequently cruel. His fall will be a blessing to Central Africa and to the cause of civilization.



Egypt and the Soudan

❀

The situation at Constantinople is apparently insoluble, and is likely to remain so until England consents to let affairs take their course and the Russians make themselves the assignees of bankrupt Turkey, or until Russia consents to English interference. The Great Powers have seldom been in so discreditable a position. The Continental Powers appear to care nothing for the slaughter which is going on in so many places in the Turkish Empire; the English care sincerely, but they are now paying for the false policy of the past. They have several times prevented Russia from going to Constantinople, and now Russia does not propose to let England work her will. English feeling is deep and intense and is apparently gathering in volume, and the English Government would apparently like to act disinterestedly. Not many days ago it seemed to be on the point of acting, but evidently Russia has plainly intimated that she will not permit action, and now there has been a semi-official backdown. No independent action on the part of England can be expected. The situation has become, however, intolerable to the moral sense of England, and a good deal is hoped from the visit of the Czar and the Czarina at Balmoral Castle during the present week, and the exercise of the great personal influence which the Queen is known to have over her grandson, the ruler of all the Russias. But Russian policy, which is persistent and which has never shown any great sensitiveness to moral considerations, is not likely to be influenced by the appeals of the venerable Queen. There is apparently practical unanimity among the English people in desiring the deposition of the Sultan, who has become a monomaniac in his love of slaughter, but, however much the English people may fume and protest, they find themselves surrounded by what appear insuperable difficulties whenever they attempt to act. Men of affairs who have given particular attention to foreign matters, like Sir Charles Dilke and Lord Rosebery, are agreed regarding the impracticability of single-handed intervention. Meanwhile Turkish rule goes on crumbling faster than ever. Constantinople is in a state of panic. A very small gathering in the street sends people into their houses, closes the shops, and sends a shiver of alarm through the European colony. The Sultan, encircled by a large body of troops and with the assurance that Russia is behind him, appears to be the only indifferent person in the whole tragedy. The only way out, apparently, is for England to give Russia a free hand.

⁂

The final outcome of the Italian campaign in Abyssinia is such as to bring contempt upon the shabby and shallow Jingoism which has had such vogue in Europe during the last few years. The defeat and slaughter of picked Italian troops, the outwitting of skilled Italian generals, the retreat from an unjustifiable invasion, the loss of prestige, have been pointed out from time to time in these columns; but Italy has suffered a further humiliation. It has not only been compelled to admit its defeat and withdraw from its untenable position, but it has also been obliged to pay a war indemnity of two million francs to King Menelek. This sum is asked, not as a price of letting the Italians go out of the country, but is delicately solicited on account of the expense involved in the support of the prisoners of war taken in Abyssinia! It is a long time since any European country has been compelled under such conditions to pay an indemnity to a half-civilized country, and it marks the completeness of the Italian disaster. The Italians are also required to draw the boundary lines of their province of Erythrea with absolute definiteness, and to remain absolutely within those lines. All this is not too much to pay for the disaster at Adowa if it forces the Italians and other European peoples to think seriously before they embark on further expeditions so devoid of moral justification and of military reasonableness as that which led an Italian army to its slaughter among the mountains of Abyssinia.

⁂

Little that is definite has been made public the past week about the supposed dynamite plot which ended in the arrest of Tynan, Bell (or Ivory), and others. The French Government has been formally requested to extradite Tynan, but it does not seem to be known whether the request is based on the old charge of his having been concerned in the Phœnix Park murders, or on a charge of engaging in the newly detected plot. Excitement in England over the arrests has subsided, and it is generally doubted whether the original statements about a plot between the Irish dynamiters and Russian Nihilists to blow up Balmoral Castle at the time of the Czar's visit will be confirmed. In fact, beyond the mere fact that the arrests have been made and that a place of manufacture for dynamite bombs has been discovered in Antwerp, which may or may not be connected with Tynan, there is nothing positively known about the matter. In this country there seems to be no sympathy whatever with the arrested persons, and the doubt has been raised whether Tynan is a genuine conspirator or a mere braggart. The day for a "physical force" party of Irish-Americans has passed away; a few wordy "patriots" remain who gather toll from the ignorant and vicious; perhaps here and there a would-be assassin may lurk; but the vast majority of Irish-Americans abhor murder and detest dynamite.

⁂

The broken-down condition of the Irish dynamiters recently granted release from penal servitude has called out a discussion in English journals that tends to offset the criticism which has been bestowed in that country upon our reformatory system at Elmira and other places. The London "Daily News," though apologetic in tone, declares that "the public is beginning to have a most uneasy feeling that the system hitherto in vogue simply takes the heart out of a man, and leaves him good for nothing in body and in soul at the end of his term." It appears from the annual report of the Prison Commissioners that some improvements are being introduced, notably a partial substitution of productive for unproductive labor as in crank-turning, etc.; but the "News" remarks, probably with an eye on America, that if this goes on the trade-unions will have something to say. There have been five cases of suicide in the year, and a considerable increase of cases of insanity in the jails. This may be due to the rigor of the law which makes doctors hesitate in certifying to lunacy, so that the jails tend to become receiving-houses for the lunatic asylums. However this may be, the "News" says that the suspicion has increased considerably that prison life, as administered under sentence to penal servitude, tends to produce insanity. As to the deterrent effect of imprisonment as conducted in England, it may be noted that, with an increasing population, the number of prisoners in jail has decreased from less than 20,000 in 1878 to somewhat over 14,000 at the last report. Since 1885 there has been no escape of any convict.

⁂

The present session of the Dominion Parliament, though called for a special purpose and with the prospect of a speedy prorogation, has been prolonged by discussions on matters of urgent importance, among them the question of Chinese immigration, and a retaliatory alien contract labor law to offset the restrictions imposed by our own law upon Canadian workmen. In regard to the former, Canadian opinion is passing through similar phases to those which resulted in the passage of the Geary Act. As might be expected, the center of disturbance is in British Columbia, where already there are 11,000 Chinese laborers as against 24,000 white. The members of Parliament from that Province are a unit in favor of excluding the Chinese by a heavy poll-tax; and the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress has just passed a resolution in favor of increasing the present tax of $50 per head to $500. In short, the problem of preserving the wage-workers of western Canada from being driven out by a horde of Chinese immigrants seems to have been suddenly precipitated in an alarming manner. It seems that Sir Henri Joly, the Minister of Inland Revenue, assured Li Hung Chang that "he would not abandon his countrymen," presumably meaning thereby that he would favor less restriction on Chinese immigration. This has provoked opposition within his own party, and also among the Conservatives. It is in the last degree unlikely that the present Liberal Government will do anything for the Chinese, and, if the tone of the best journalistic opinion means anything, the result is likely to be still further restriction. With regard to the proposed alien contract labor law far greater difficulties are encountered. The matter has been brought up in Parliament, and Mr. Laurier has spoken in a way which seems to admit the justice of the Canadian claim. It would be premature to say that he will introduce retaliatory legislation during the next parliamentary session; it is a delicate matter demanding the fullest investigation before taking such a course. Some interesting correspondence, straightforward and friendly in tone, has recently taken place between the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress and the American Federation of Labor. Mr. Samuel Gompers, on behalf of the latter, admits the hardship and injustice to Canadians resulting from the present law, but asserts that it is directed not primarily against Canadians, but against Chinese and other workmen who are smuggled into the United States by way of Canada. He truly states that, under the rules governing international treaties, the "most favored nation" clause prevents the United States from extending privileges to one nation denied to another, and that if the Governments of the United States and Canada had exclusive power to act, a satisfactory agreement could be arrived at. From the point of view of our workingmen the difficulty lies in not being able to distinguish, in many cases, between those workmen who come into the United States by way of Canana and those whose homes are in Canada. If in any way that difficulty can be removed, a satisfactory solution of this question can be gained. This, at least, seems to be the opinion of labor authorities on both sides of the line.

⁂

Surely no modern political community ever paralleled the amount of legislation in social and political reform which has been enacted by New Zealand within the past five years. In that colony the fusion of the Liberal and Labor parties shortly previous to 1891 enabled them to pass a series of radical and, thus far, apparently successful measures. The Agent-General of New Zealand, in an article in a recent English review, has summarized these reforms under five headings: Finance, Land, Constitutional Reform, Labor, and Law Reform. It is quite impracticable to indicate in a brief space the main incidents of the struggle which attended the passage of these measures, or even to enumerate the measures themselves, but the leading changes may be indicated. In the first place the property tax, an annual impost of a penny in the pound sterling of every citizen's possessions, less his debts and an exemption of £500, was abolished, and has been replaced by a progressive land tax and a progressive income tax. Then came an act authorizing government leases of crown lands in perpetuity, with periodical revisions of rent. This measure has been very successful. Among the constitutional changes are the abolition of the life tenure of the members of the nominative Upper Chamber, and the substitution of a seven years' term. Then, again, the electoral principle of one-man-one-vote has been carried out to its ultimate issue by a registration clause providing that no voter can register on more than one roll. The greatest change of all has been the admission of women to the franchise, with results by no means alarming thus far, the women voting very much according to the political affiliations of their husbands, brothers, fathers, and sons. The labor laws have also been changed, mostly in the interest of the workingman. An Industrial Conciliation and Arbitration Bill has also been passed. It is significant that few complaints are heard of ill effects from all this radical legislation, and that the prosperity and contentment of the people have apparently increased.

⁂

The successful operation of the tramways in Glasgow is full of encouragement to the advocates of municipal ownership and operation of street railways in this country. The Committee of Councils having charge of the matter report that for the second year of the experiment the receipts were $1,618,387, and the operating expenses $1,215,373; leaving a balance of $403,014, which was disposed of as follows: to interest on capital, $61,258; depreciation written off against capital, $86,198; renewal fund, $82,280; sinking fund, $51,023; general reserve fund, $78,695; and payments to former lessees, $43,560. This result has been achieved at the same time that the fares were reduced. For the 86,462,594 passengers who were carried, the average fare was 1⅞ cents a passenger. The Committee report that its principal difficulty is to provide for the continuously increasing volume of business. Negotiations are now in progress looking toward the introduction of some means of mechanical traction. The tramways cover 35 miles of double track, and require 4,082 horses. The employees are clothed at the expense of the department, and a friendly society has been established among them, with 1,474 members. In concluding their report the Council Committee say: "The financial results for the year's operation have been most encouraging, and prove beyond all question that the Corporation Tramways have the approval and the support of the citizens. From the accounts published herewith it will be seen that this new business undertaken by the Corporation is being conducted on sound commercial lines. All the plant has been fully maintained out of the revenue, and, after writing off capital an ample amount for depreciation, considerable sums have been placed to the general reserve fund and the reserve fund for permanent way renewals. The item of preliminary expenses remains at the original figure, as it is not considered necessary to write off this sum, the sinking fund itself being sufficient to wipe it out. Over and above the ordinary obligations to the city in the payment of taxes, water, gas, etc., the tramways undertaking is proving a great benefit to the general finances of the Corporation, and no pains will be spared to maintain the efficiency of the department now so successfully established."

⁂

The Alaskan boundary question has entered upon a somewhat acute phase, owing to the recent action of the Canadian surveyors in locating the one hundred and forty-first meridian so as to throw two hundred gold-mines, including the rich placer-mines contained in a strip from three to eight miles wide, into Canadian territory. The Canadian Government has a force of mounted police there, and the regulations enforced by them are stricter than those to which the American owners and workers of these mines have been accustomed. Of course our Government may not accept the Canadian survey, and trouble may result from the resistance of our miners to a jurisdiction which they are not likely to recognize. The mounted police cannot enforce the report of the Canadian surveyors; but for that very reason our Government should hasten the progress of the question, so that the true boundaries may be defined, and the rightful jurisdiction of the United States and the Dominion respectively determined.

⁂

The disputed Presidential election in Chili has been settled, and without a revolution. The question was referred to Congress, which gave a decision in favor of the Conservative candidate—Federico Evrazuriz. The opposition of the Liberals was based upon charges of political corruption and intimidation against him; but, whatever the popular belief as to these charges, it found no adequate support among the Congressional majority. The Liberals were strongly tempted to rebellion, but the Government anticipated an outbreak and made military preparations. Montt, the President, who will shortly retire, has had a fairly successful term of office, and his administration has been free from scandal and corruption. The meeting of this crisis without bloodshed may prove an effective example during future disturbances of a similar kind.

⁂

It is too early to make any predictions with regard to the result of the political campaign, but several things have become much clearer during the past few weeks. It has become, in the first place, very doubtful whether the free-coinage movement has secured any large support among the farming and working people of the East. The Republican majority in Vermont might have been explained on the ground of the general conservatism of that State, but the equally phenomenal majority in Maine cannot be explained on any such ground. Maine, unlike Vermont, has passed through different phases of opinion on the currency question. The greenback movement gained very serious hold there, and it is one of the Eastern States in which the free-silver movement might have been expected to gain many adherents. On the contrary, however, Maine has cast the heaviest vote in her history in favor of the Republican ticket. It has become clear, in the second place, that this is not a sectional fight, as a good many free-silver men have very unwisely attempted to make the country believe. The issue will not be decided by the East, but by the Central West. If the free-coinage movement is defeated, as we believe it will be, it will be because the Central West—that is to say, Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, and Iowa—refuses to support the Chicago platform and the Chicago nominees. The real battle-ground is not in the East, but in these great Western States. They are to be the arbiters of the question, and if free coinage is beaten it will be beaten by a Western and not by an Eastern vote. It is fortunate, from this point of view, that the three Presidential candidates are all Western men, and that no party can any longer consistently claim to represent either Eastern or Western sentiment exclusively. The result in Arkansas, so far as it has any significance, would seem to indicate that the free-coinage sentiment is not to make a clean sweep even in the States which were practically conceded to it.

⁂

In spite of the speech of General Francis A. Walker in London, reported in these columns several months ago, it has been widely asserted that this eminent international bimetallist had become a supporter of the free-coinage movement. It seems hardly necessary to correct an impression which never had any basis in fact, in spite of the endeavor in many quarters to confuse the position of the international bimetallist with that of the supporter of free coinage. General Walker in his London speech declared that the free-coinage movement, which found its expression in the Chicago platform and the nomination of Mr. Bryan, would indefinitely postpone the introduction of international bimetallism, and there are no more vigorous and uncompromising opponents of the free-coinage movement in this country than those who, like The Outlook, believe in international bimetallism. In a letter published last week in the "Evening Post," of this city, General Walker protests against the frequently repeated charge that the movement in favor of international bimetallism has been one of the most influential factors in the development of the free-coinage movement, and, after expressing his indignation at this accusation, says: "Many causes have contributed to the present ill-omened gathering of the discontented, in all parts of the country; but in no small degree is it due to the arrogance with which the gold monometallist press has dealt with the question of the use of silver; the studied insolence with which the views of economists, statisticians, and statesmen favorable to bimetallism have been treated; the outrageous abuse to which millions of citizens of the United States have been subject from the same source." The Outlook has more than once made essentially the same statement—namely, that the height to which the free-coinage sentiment has risen in some parts of the country has been due in no small measure to the narrow, bigoted way in which the questions of coinage, banking, etc., have been presented and discussed by a group of monometallists. It has been assumed that the attempt, for instance, to secure a freer banking system, such as obtains in France or Scotland, was essentially revolutionary and dangerous, although it is generally admitted that our own banking system is in many respects ill adapted to the present needs of commerce in this country. The first duty of the hour is to settle the free-coinage question; the second will be to put our currency on a rational, intelligible basis, and to bring our banking system into conformity with the growth and the needs of the country.

⁂

The Democratic State Conventions in Connecticut and New York have indorsed the Chicago platform as well as the candidates. The Connecticut Convention nominated for Governor Mr. Joseph B. Sargent, the well-known tariff reform manufacturer of New Haven. The New York Convention with gross inconsistency nominated Mayor Thacher, of Albany, an opponent of the free coinage of silver, but nevertheless a supporter of the "regular" nominees of his party. Mayor Thacher is a close friend of Senator Hill, and his nomination was attributed to Senator Hill's influence. In the West and South the most important political happenings of the week have been the negotiations for fusion between the Democrats and Populists. In North Carolina and in Kentucky there is now the prospect of a common electoral ticket, but the matter is still unsettled. North of the Ohio River, from Ohio to the Pacific, fusion seems to be everywhere an accomplished fact. In most States the electors are divided between Mr. Sewall and Mr. Watson in proportion to the votes cast by the Democratic and Populist parties at the last election. In Oregon and North Dakota, however, all of the electors favor Mr. Watson, while in California nine out of thirteen favor him. In Kansas, Colorado, and Idaho, on the other hand, all the electors favor Mr. Sewall. Mr. Watson's campaign speeches in the West, criticising Mr. Sewall as a monopolist, have in some places strained the relations between the two parties. Mr. Bryan continues to address immense audiences on his campaign tour, and Mr. McKinley continues to address immense delegations brought to his home in Canton. On Saturday night last there were nine of these visiting delegations at Canton, and the aggregate number of visitors was estimated as high as twenty thousand. Most of the delegations are, of course, from Ohio and Pennsylvania, but two of those on Saturday—the railroad men and the telegraphers—came from Illinois. Mr. Bryan last week passed through Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, Virginia, and Maryland, delivering several speeches each day. His visit in the East is to be a very short one. He is to spend the entire month of October between West Virginia and Minnesota. This district is to be the real battle-ground of the campaign. The official returns from the Arkansas election make the Democratic plurality 55,000, as against 49,000 two years ago and 56,000 four years ago. The official returns from Maine make the Republican plurality 49,000, as against 39,000 two years ago and 13,000 four years ago.

⁂

The public schools of New York opened September 14. It was discovered at once that the pressure on the schools would be very much greater than in former years. This was due not only to the natural increase in the number of the children of school age, but to the enforcement of the compulsory school law and to the mercantile establishment inspection law, which went into effect September 1. The schools in the tenement-house districts, already overcrowded, were those in which the increase in the demands for school accommodation were greatest; the fact having been forced upon the attention of the ignorant, the indifferent, and the poverty-stricken parents that the State is a factor in the life of the child. According to the statement of Superintendent Jasper, ten or twelve school buildings, with a seating capacity of from twelve to fifteen hundred each, should be erected at once to meet the needs of the children now crowded out of the public schools of the city. The overcrowding was felt at the schools at the top as well as the bottom. The seating capacity of the Normal College provides for an entrance class of 600. The entrance class of 1896 numbers 840. The total number registered was 2,300. At the City College 1,800 boys registered—300 in excess of any previous year. The Trustees of the Normal College have notified the Board of Education that additions must be made to the Normal College before the fall term of 1897. The new school law provides for the erection of high schools, and this part of the law is favored by the majority of the present Board of Education. It is quite probable that at least one high school will be erected during the next year. The pressure on the City and Normal Colleges is a most hopeful sign. It indicates the increased valuation put upon education by wage-earners. It shows also effort by the parent of limited means to increase the period of school life for his children.

⁂

The need of free baths under the control of the city authorities was proved most conclusively during the extreme heat in New York last August. At the People's Baths, erected and maintained by the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, the number of bathers for the first fifteen days of August was 9,864, or an average of 778 per day. Of this number over one thousand were children. The bathers pay five cents each for the bath, with towel and soap. The city authorities ordered the baths on the river front kept open all night. The numbers who availed themselves of this opportunity were so large that it required the services of policemen to keep the waiting lines in order. The Legislature last March appropriated $200,000 to erect free baths in the city. The site is selected, and there the matter rests. The citizens are responsible for the delay. An influential demand for the erection of these baths at once would compel the authorities to act. The delay in the matter of the small parks is proof of what may be expected as to the completion of the public baths if the subject is treated with the same indifference by the people, who alone can compel action by the responsible powers.

⁂

There is one more convincing evidence of the value to private citizens of having at the head of municipal departments men of high principles and integrity. The enforcement of the civil service laws in the police department in New York has resulted in the department appealing to young men of intelligence, character, and physical ability to apply for the vacant positions on the police force. Eight hundred appointments will be made within the next four months, and, for the first time in its history, the city is in the position of an employer of efficient labor, instead of that of a dealer who was bound to pay for the political service that degraded one of the most important branches, if not the most important branch, of municipal government.

⁂

The Christian Citizenship Union of New Jersey, which is composed of Christian Endeavor Societies, Baptist Young People's Unions, Epworth Leagues, and Order Leagues of New Jersey—about two thousand five hundred societies altogether—issued, through its Executive Committee, which met a few days ago at Trenton, the following sensible address to voters:

"In each of eighteen counties of New Jersey a Sheriff is to be chosen at the November elections. The Sheriff practically selects the grand and petit jurors, and is guardian of the public peace and safety. With the Grand Jury must originate nearly all processes in the interest of public morality and the enforcement of law. With the petit jury rests the responsibility of rendering verdicts, and many citizens question the value and efficiency of the jury system, because of ignorant and manifestly biased jurymen selected.

"Experience has taught the people of this State that in the maintenance of law and order the shrievalty is of prime importance. The race-track gamblers used to say, 'We got the Sheriff, and they can have the rest.' At this time persons hostile to law enforcement are working to secure the election of men to this office who will do their bidding.

"The Sheriff has officially nothing to do with National issues. He has no part even in local legislation. The Christian Citizenship Union of New Jersey urges affiliated organizations and all good citizens to combine at their party primaries for the nomination of candidates for Sheriff who can be trusted to execute the laws.

"In the event of the failure of any party to nominate a trustworthy man, members of that party are urged to vote for a worthy nominee of another party, or, if there be none such, to place in the field an independent candidate. Let no law-abiding citizen be content to support a tolerably good man for this office."

Righteousness Before Peace

In days of change and uncertainty such as society is now passing through, one constantly hears the expression of regret for the "good old times" when the social order was undisturbed, the financial world placid, and the temper of mankind calm and reposeful. As a matter of fact, there never were any such tranquil times; society has always been changing, men have always been tossed to and fro like the waves of the sea. There have been, it is true, brief periods of reaction when political interest has ebbed and society has become sluggish and lethargic; but these have been negative and uninspiring periods, when life was least worth living. The periods when hope has been high, faith in human possibilities great, and interest in action and achievement intense, have been periods of movement and times of change. These have been the productive epochs in exploration, thought, invention, art, and adventure; the epochs when men have accepted life at its full value, and have lived deeply and passionately in emotion, conviction, and action. There are periods of restlessness which are disturbing without being progressive, which make men anxious without making them great in achievement. But even these periods are better than the periods of sluggish comfort and cowardly ease. It takes a great deal of movement to keep men morally and spiritually virile and vital; there is a tremendous sag downwards which must be constantly overcome by the invigoration of the higher nature. Men have never yet shown strength adequate to the temptations of easeful conditions; they have always visibly declined when the stimulus of danger and necessity has been withdrawn. In the Old Testament and in the history of all peoples God appears, not as a tranquillizer, but as a disturber of existing conditions: for the very good reason that conditions have never yet been what they ought to be. Those who long to be let alone cherish a vain hope; God will never let the human race alone until he has reorganized it on a basis of righteousness; until that time, so long as men have consciences, there will be stir, agitation, disturbance, and change. The fundamental gain of civilization lies in the fact that change, instead of being revolutionary and temporarily destructive as in earlier ages, has become evolutionary and constructive. In spite of many setbacks, false hopes, delusive schemes, and short-sighted efforts to accomplish artificially and arbitrarily that which can be accomplished only through moral reorganization, the world slowly moves forward and upward. That it does move is the evidence of a divine purpose behind its confused life, but in its very movement are involved the disorder, uneasiness, and peril of which so many complain as if they were new appearances in the life of men. In a progressive development stability is not to be sought in stationary conditions, but in the character of the change that is always taking place. The presence of God is evidenced by the fact that men are unable to rest so long as they are imperfect and the social order reflects their imperfection. Perfect peace can come only with perfect righteousness.

An Unburied Lottery

The State of Kentucky is still victimized by a lottery company. The State is not disgraced by it, because the State has done what it could for the lottery's suppression. In the new Constitution adopted five years ago the people of the State made the lottery an outlaw. But the Frankfort Lottery Company, enriched by a long-standing charter to impoverish and corrupt its patrons, sought and found refuge in the courts. In the county court at Louisville in 1892, with Mr. Carlisle for its attorney, it obtained a judgment in its favor in a suit brought by the commonwealth to prevent its further operation. This outrageous decision, directly violating the dictum of the Supreme Court of the United States that no government can make a binding contract inimical to public morals, was reversed on appeal by the Supreme Court of the State, Chief Justice Bennett declaring that the operation of a lottery was "in defiance of all law and order." The lottery company, however, did not submit, but appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. In some way not accounted for, the case has been permitted to remain undecided, and the Frankfort Lottery Company continues to defy "all law and order."

When our attention was directed to this state of affairs, we asked for corroboratory evidence. It came to us in the form of sworn affidavits from Mr. S. P. Shepard, the General Agent at Louisville of the Bankers' Life Association of Minnesota, and Mr. Frank Converse, the son of the editor of the "Christian Observer." These affidavits set forth that in order to establish beyond doubt the continued operation of the Frankfort Lottery Company, Mr. Shepard and Mr. Converse, on the 25th of August, called at one of the Louisville offices of the Company and purchased a lottery ticket reading as follows:

> THE FRANKFORT LOTTERY OF KENTUCKY
>
> The Frankfort Lottery of Kentucky, authorized by the Act of the General Assembly of Kentucky, approved March 16, 1869, and March 28, 1872, and the contract of December 31, 1875, and the amendatory contracts thereto, duly executed under said Acts.
>
> For the Benefit of the Public School of Frankfort, Ky.
>
> When the numbers on this ticket correspond with those on the register returned to the Manager, it will entitle the holder to such Prizes as may be drawn to its numbers, if demanded within three months after the drawing.
>
> 7. 9. 21.
> G 1600
>
> DECIDED BY DRAWING OF CLASS 404
>
> Office No. 42. ...., 1896.
> Third Street, near Main.
> ...., for the Management.

The lottery ticket accompanied one of the affidavits, which also contained a list of the addresses of forty lottery agents in the city of Louisville, as published in "Caron's Louisville Directory" for 1896.

That such a state of affairs should be permitted to continue in Louisville, in defiance of law, in defiance of the State Constitution, in defiance of the principle laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States, is a scandal of the first magnitude. From all over the country those who care for the suppression of the evils of the lottery, and those who protest against the still greater evil of the non-enforcement of law against moneyed institutions, ought to demand of the responsible authorities at Washington that the case against the Frankfort Lottery Company be pressed to an immediate decision.

The Higher Truthfulness

Mr. Lecky, in his "History of European Morals," speaking of different types of veracity, makes some noteworthy observations, which are in point at a time of controversy like the present. Society could not exist at all without veracity of some sort between man and man. A high value is therefore set upon it, as the cement of the social fabric. Accordingly, commercial veracity is strongly insisted on; the lack of it is visited with social opprobrium; he whose word is as good as his bond obtains the highest esteem. It is not yet so with intellectual veracity or truthful dealing with ideas, especially argument or controversy. This, as Mr. Lecky says, is a higher type, and less common even among those who are scrupulous of truth in matters of a material and immediately practical nature. For lack of it controversy is blind, partisanship bitter, and those whose common interest is to know the truth are divided by misrepresentation and distrust into hostile camps. Theologians and churchmen have set the bad example, and it is no wonder that politicians and statesmen follow it.

Some one has well said, "Truth dwells underground;" it requires mining to get at it. A man who really values truthfulness as an element of character must gauge his interest in it by his effort for it. The real truth is rarely, if ever, all on one side of a controversy. To do justice to an opponent by looking from his standpoint at his side of the question, and in a temper which fraternally credits him with an honesty of purpose to reach the truth that is equal to our own, is a sort of gymnastic exercise; but it is indispensable to moral culture. For lack of it wars, persecutions, and all sorts of pernicious discords and delusions have been the retributive scourge of States and Churches.

That it even now requires moral courage to cultivate intellectual veracity is humiliating evidence of the little progress which Christianity has made in this direction. A man who is disposed to look for whatever truth may be with either party to a burning question, and be impartially just to each, must be prepared for contemptuous epithets, as half-hearted and vacillating, a compromiser, a trimmer. But the final honor remains with him. An illustrious example is not remote in our history. The Senators who voted against their party for the acquittal of President Johnson in the impeachment trial doomed themselves thereby to exclusion from political life, but they are now remembered for it as patriots who saved the country from a most perilous precedent.

To find pure truth in human reasonings, except in the exact sciences, is as rare as to find pure metal. In men who differ constitutionally, as well as otherwise, with various mental tempers and tendencies, it is found combined, as Dr. Holmes has wittily observed, with various "basic salts"—as the "smithate" of truth in Smith and the "brownate" of truth in Brown. This is a fact which Smith and Brown must in the end allow for in their effort for intellectual veracity as partners in a common search for truth, proving all things and holding fast what is good.

It is strange that any community which has learned to insist on the supreme importance of veracity in commercial exchanges, and in stating the facts of physical science, should be less concerned for intellectual veracity in its estimates of human thoughts, motives, and characters. To redeem one's self and others from the mischievous illusions under which, in consequence, one half of the community often lives regarding the other half—like that church-going party man who insisted that his pastor, being of the other party, could not preach the pure Gospel—is surely an urgent concern for every one who knows that regard for the reality of things is essential to a truly rational life.

The Commonwealth

VIII.—The Teacher

The progress of the world sometimes seems to an impatient spirit very slow. We forget that each new generation begins life afresh and has all to learn. How far the acquired qualities of the parent are transmitted to its offspring is a disputed question among biologists; but if qualities are inherited, experience is not. The babe comes with wholly unused powers into a wholly unknown world. If it were not for the teacher, he would have to repeat all the blunders of his predecessors and learn again by the same misfortunes the lessons they had learned by theirs. By the teacher's aid he acquires some of the results of experiences which he has not suffered, and receives, through abbreviated processes, wisdom which it has taken the world generations to acquire. Earlier generations cleared away the forest, dug out the stumps, carried off the stones, plowed and subsoiled the ground, harrowed and planted it. Under the guidance of the teacher the present generation enters with its sickle and reaps a harvest which others have prepared for its reaping. The saying, "Fools learn by their own experience, wise men by the experience of others," indicates the function of the teacher in the commonwealth: it is to make available, to such as are willing to learn, the experience of past ages.

There is even now, and there was formerly much more than now, a great deal of memoriter teaching which is relatively useless. We have known of a teacher in philosophy who required, or at least expected, the pupils to repeat verbatim the pages of the text-book, and teachers in geometry who were best pleased with a similar verbal accuracy in geometrical recitations. We do not say that such memoriter exercises are absolutely useless, because, for aught we know, they may have some effect in developing a purely verbal memory, and even a purely verbal memory, though the least practically important of acquirements, is not without its uses. But this is not teaching philosophy or geometry. Such a teacher should label his class, Class in mnemonics. Philosophy is taught only when the pupil apprehends the thoughts of great thinkers who have lived before him, and thinks their thoughts after them. Geometry is taught only when the pupil perceives the logical sequences in the demonstration and understands why the conclusion is reached and why there can be no other from the premises given. The memory is a valuable faculty, but it is only a means to an end, and when it is made an end in itself it is not a valuable faculty. The memory is a convenient storehouse wherein one keeps facts and principles assorted and arranged and ready for use. If it is retentive, and keeps them carefully and effectively, and if it is responsive, ready to give them up at any moment on call, it is invaluable. But it must be discriminating; must know what to remember and what to forget; and if it retains merely words and not ideas, and those words only long enough to give a good recitation to-morrow, it is quite useless. The pupil is not a phonograph, to give out on one day what has been spoken to him the day before.

The function of the teacher, we repeat, is to give to one generation the reservoired results of the experience of past generations, and thus facilitate and expedite human development. This the true teacher does, chiefly, in two ways: first, by imparting the results of such experience—that is to say, learning; and, second, by developing, in the process, the faculties of the pupil, and thus adding to his mental power—that is, to his wisdom. No teaching is of much use, we might almost say no teaching is of any use, which does not increase either the learning or the wisdom of the pupil—either his store of knowledge or his power to make good use of such store as he possesses. Thus the study of literature, rightly conducted, first of all acquaints the student with the great thoughts of great thinkers and enables him in some measure to make them his own; secondarily, enables him to think high and noble thoughts himself, or to express clearly such thoughts as he possesses; and, finally, to perceive the real life of humanity as it is interpreted by the great revelators of human experience. The study of history makes the student acquainted with the progress of the development of the race thus far, records its various experiments, indicates its failures and its successes, and gives the pupil, if he has been truly taught, the vantage-ground of familiarity with the past in his own endeavors to add to the world's well-being in the future, prevents him from repeating the blunders of his predecessors, shows him the highway of travel, guards him from straying off into experimental side paths which lead nowhere, and prevents him from thinking himself a discoverer of a new continent when in truth he is only following in the track of a host of previous explorers. The study of natural science puts the student in possession of what the world has already learned concerning the secrets of nature, and at the same time and by the same process develops his powers both of observation and of deduction; and so enables him to pursue still further the study of nature from the vantage-ground of knowledge won by others.

Humanity is a very slow pupil. It is extraordinarily reluctant to learn from the experiences of the past. It repeats over and over again, with dismal monotony, experiments the sole value of which is to confirm by new disasters lessons taught by previous disasters. That it makes any progress, learns anything, does not continue merely trying the same experiments and repeating the same failures generation after generation, that, though very gradually, it does learn something, that each generation takes some advantage, be it ever so little, of the work of previous generations, is due to the teacher. He harvests and stores the experiences of the past for the benefit of the future.

The Outlook Vacation Fund

Previously acknowledged	$5,472 36
P. H. I	5 00
J. A. S.	5 00
Thankful	2 00
W. W., Springfield, Mass	5 00
Three Friends.	7 00
M. H., Brooklyn, N. Y	5 00
P. H. K., St. Louis, Mo	3 00
A Farmer, East Otto, N. Y	5 53
Congregational Sunday-School, Washington, Conn	25 00
The Friends' King's Daughters' Circle, Union Congregational Church, Providence, R. I	6 00
Clifton.	25 00
Y. P. S. C. E. First Congregational Church, Amherst, Mass.	10 00
Total	$5,575 80

The Spectator on the Great Lakes

" Good-by !"

A year or two ago the Spectator happened to see, in one of those vast welters of miscellany that force themselves upon us under the guise of Sunday newspapers, an item to the effect that the second greatest port in the world for the shipment of iron ore was the town of Escanaba, Michigan. The Spectator had never heard of the town of Escanaba, Michigan, and knew nothing of the Lakes as a medium for the transportation of ore. He had supposed, indeed, that the principal function of the Great Lakes was to supply water for Niagara Falls. The reading of the paragraph about Escanaba marks for the Spectator a great awakening. Before this he had imagined that, since the United States had abandoned commerce on the high seas in its own vessels, the coastwise and river traffic was the field in which our ships were mainly engaged; he found that, on the contrary, the majority of the large steam vessels of the country are now plying the waters of the Lakes. He had believed that the Suez Canal was by far the most important in the world; he learned that there is a canal officially called the " St. Mary's Falls Canal," between Lakes Superior and Huron, through which last year passed a total of 17,956 vessels, as against 3,334 through the Suez Canal; and that the total tonnage of vessels passing through the Suez Canal in the twelve months of 1895 was but 8,450,000, in round numbers, against 16,800,000,000 passing through the " Soo " Canal in the eight months of the same year during which it was open for navigation. He had wondered what had become of the American sailor and the American ship-builder who manned and built the white-winged clippers of old; he found that the American sailorman now sails the Lakes instead of the sea, and that at the beginning of this year more vessels were under contract in Lake ship-yards than had been built in the entire country during 1894 or 1895. The amazing proportions and growth of the Lake commerce are, in fact, realized by scarcely one in a hundred intelligent Americans, to whom the words "inland seas " have never taken on their full significance since they were first heard in the misty atmosphere of long-gone school-days.

Meeting a Sister Ship

⁂

Another surprise that awaited the Spectator when he had decided to take a voyage on the Great Lakes was that there are magnificent passenger vessels on the Lakes. A trip on the Lakes does not mean close confinement on a slow, deep-laden, grimy ore-carrier. Any one who will glance at the picture at the head of this column will perhaps share the Spectator's disillusionment as he gazed at the great steel steamship, spotless in her white raiment, and suggesting a beatified "commerce-destroyer," as she lay at her pier in Buffalo. Here was a vessel built exclusively for passenger traffic, carrying no freight, in every respect equal and in many respects superior to the finest transatlantic liner. Outwardly he that has eyes may see this; of the ship's interior, he that has ears may hear of her woodwork in solid mahogany; of her parlor staterooms, with brass bedsteads, cheval mirrors, Persian rugs, and private bath-rooms; of her handsome saloon cabin, with its luxuriously upholstered sofas, its Steinway piano, its carved writing-desks, and its library wherefrom one may cull, according to his taste, " American Political Ideas," " The White Company," " A Little Book of Western Verse," or a little book of Eastern verse called the " Rubaiyát"—an old friend whose acquaintance the Spectator immediately renewed; of her white and gold dining-room, wherein one might almost fancy himself at Delmonico's or the Waldorf; and, if he is so minded, of her great engines, her ice-machines, her huge cold-storage rooms, and her—no, not her cook's galley, but her chef's culinary plant. This beautiful vessel is the " North West," of the Northern Steamship Company, and is under the command of a typical yet peculiarly genial representative of the "fresh-water sailor," Captain George Minar.

" The Gazing Rustics Ranged Around "

⁂

" Inland seas " indeed are these lakes, but one does not realize this immediately on leaving Buffalo. The difficulty of getting clear of the mole that protects shipping from the storms that sometimes sweep Lake Erie reminds one of the troubles of the earliest steamboat in the same waters, when, as Schoolcraft narrates, " two miles after leaving Black Rock a very heavy rapid is encountered, in ascending which the assistance of oxen is required." Our oxen take the form of clumsy but officious little tugs, which lend their aid to nearly all large vessels. Once out on the open " sea," however, we shake ourselves free from all attendants, and rush through the shallow waters of Lake Erie at a speed of twenty miles an hour. The ordinary lake craft are not built for speed, and the only vessel on our whole three days' trip that puts us to our mettle is a handsome pleasure yacht that meets us on the picturesque waters of the Detroit River. The Lake has produced a peculiar type—or rather several types—of naval architecture. There are few exclusively sailing craft. One occasionally sees a combination of sail and steam, but as a rule a vessel's masts are used mainly for tackle, and on many, as in our own ship, there is no provision for sails. On the most novel contribution of the Lakes to the ship-building art—the whaleback—there are, of course, neither masts nor sails. The whalebacks, however, are not so numerous as the Spectator supposed they would be. The lakemen are prejudiced against them. " If I had money enough to build a ship," said one old freight captain to the Spectator, " I'd build a ship, and not one o' those blame scows!" While the whaleback is well shaped to withstand the elements, it is apparently not so well adapted for the comfort of the crew, whose quarters are very close and uncomfortable. The kind of craft which now seems to be most popular is the large three-masted iron or steel freighter, with the engines in the stern. Some of these, like the Sir Henry Bessemer, are over four hundred feet long, and carry four or five thousand tons of freight. They are ocean steamers—though never passing out of the Lakes—in all but draft. They seldom draw more than fourteen or fifteen feet, that being the usual depth of the shallowest channels.

A Lake Lighthouse

Some Types of Lake Shipping

In the "Soo" Locks

It is in the navigation of these shallow channels that the lakeman shows his skill. The lake captains, as a rule, know but little of the science of navigation. They never need to "take the sun." They steer from headland to headland, and are rarely out of sight of land. But in the art of handling their boats they are past-masters. They can bring a great ship up to a wharf, if need be, so neatly that she "wouldn't crack an egg." They are their own pilots. The "salter" gives up the command of his ship when he nears the land, and the pilot guides his vessel. That is just the time when the "laker" comes up from below and takes charge. And what an art is the management of a great ship in one of the narrow channels between the Lakes! There is an endless succession of orders such as "Starboard a little!" "Slowly!" "Stidday!" "Port engine half speed astern!" "Stop her!" "Start your starboard engine!" "Port a little!" "Faster!" "Hard over!" "Starboard!" "Catch her!" "Stid-day!" And that this is not mere sailor's jargon, but is meant for a purpose, and is necessary, every word of it, if the ship is to get safely through the tortuous channel, is emphasized by the three spars sticking out of the water near the "Sailor's Encampment," mute testimony to the necessity of caution if we would avoid a like fate.

* * *

"How do you like this life on the Lakes?" the Spectator asked of a sailor off duty one morning. The Spectator uses the word sailor advisedly, for this man had sailed on "salters" on the great Pacific. "Well," was the reply, "it's a pretty good job for the summer, but the season's short and a fellow's likely to be stranded in the winter. No, a man don't get much more of a chance to see his family here than on the 'salters.' Then the watches here are longer, and I don't like that. And I've never been forrard on this boat. On the Pacific, when you ship on a vessel, they send you over her with a 'pilot,' so you'll know the lay of things. But here you've got your own place, and don't know about anything else." This remark may indicate the "system" necessary on a vessel whose crew numbers nearly two hundred. As a rule, however, the Spectator observed less formality and less red-tapeism among the lakemen than are usually seen among the salt-water sailors. There is an air of Western democracy about these men. The messenger says to the mate, "Nine o'clock and all's well, sir," in a tone which indicates his distrust of the antiquated formula, and the mate addresses his men as "Dick" or "Bill" in an undertone which shows that he is on very friendly terms with them, and doesn't in the least desire the impersonality of the relations between officers and men on, say, a man-of-war. They are mostly well-spoken, straightforward men, these fresh-water sailors, with little of official dignity, and are not too self-important to answer sensible questions—though it does seem a little strange to them that anybody should get enthusiastic over the mere scenic attractiveness of a trip on the Lakes.

A Cool Morning on Lake Superior

* * *

The "Sailors' Encampment"

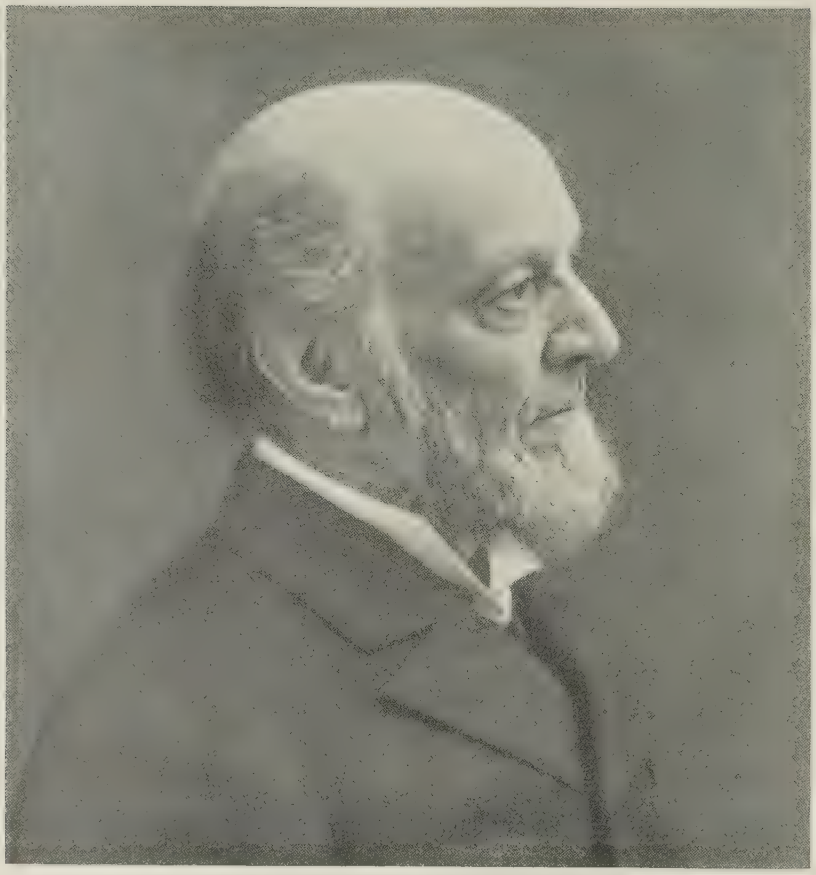
The most enjoyable part of this thousand-mile inland voyage from Buffalo to Duluth was, to the Spectator at least, the day on Lake Superior. The marvelously clear air, which seems to lend stronger lenses to our eyes as we view the passing ships and the fleecy clouds above; the fresh and bracing breeze, better than any liquid tonic, which makes us button up our overcoats and start walking-matches on deck—two laps to a quarter of a mile; the dark deep water, beautifully blue and clear as crystal, stingingly cold as we catch its spray on the lower deck when it breaks from the sharp steel beak of our mighty onward-rushing mass; above all, the sense of having around one an illimitable sea of this sparkling, precious liquid, enough to supply the cities of the world, to revivify Sahara, or to irrigate a continent if it could only be utilized—this new sensation of "water, water everywhere" and every drop good to drink—make one (saving the contradiction) almost intoxicated, inebriated with the proximity of the boundless blessings of pure water and pure air. The blessing of pure water is not, however, appreciated by the native boy to the extent which would seem natural. The Spectator saw no happy, skylarking boys bathing in these icy waters. He talked with a summer visitor on Isle Royale who had "taken a dip," but who did not wish to repeat the experience. This young man said that he had asked the Captain of a Lake Superior steamer why he carried life-preservers, the water being so cold that one could not long survive immersion. "Oh," was the nonchalant reply, "we carry the corks so that it will be easier to recover the bodies!" It is said that Superior's waters do not give up their dead, on account of their depth and coldness.

In "Little Venice"

* * *

Ocean voyages usually grow monotonous; not so a trip on a fast steamer on the Lakes, for there is a constant succession of novelties to rouse the attention. It may be historic Mackinac, with its picturesque headlands and its decadent fort, last year finally abandoned by the Government; it may be the St. Clair River, with its "little Venice" of cottages and clubhouses, the resort of Detroit's water-loving citizens; or a glimpse into Canada, with a hint of French and Indian in such an inn as the "Ashiganikaning, Leon Bellair, Prop.;" or a view of the famous copper country on Lake Superior, with the smoke rising from the "Calumet and Hecla," the richest copper-mines in the world; or here and there a whaleback, a lumber-barge, or a "sandsucker;" it may be, at night, the vast dim luminosity on the far horizon that indicates some large city, like Cleveland or Duluth, soon to appear to the groups of watchers on deck; it may be the antics of the eager newsboys at Detroit, throwing their rolled-up papers to the high hurricane deck of the steamer, and nimbly catching the profitable nickel in return; lastly, it may be the great Government locks at Sault Ste. Marie Canal—the canal which every year passes thirty per cent. more freight and twice as many vessels as enter and leave New York Harbor—where the passenger has an opportunity to go ashore and stretch his legs and wonder at the huge locks and their mechanism, and, if he chooses, to take an exciting trip in a canoe through the "Soo" rapids. And if this is not enough, the insatiable seeker for recreation may play shuffleboard on the ship's deck, or pitch quoits, or—take kodak pictures, or talk with his fellow-passengers, or write letters, or even (if he gets just a little weary of excitement after the long day) stretch himself out on a steamer chair on deck at night and look at the quiet stars, and the rippling waters, and the dim shores, and—be still. In any event, the tourist who makes the trip of the Lakes is sure to come back a wiser, healthier, happier man, with new ideas as to ocean travel in his own land, so to speak, and with a memory full of pleasant reminiscences to hearten him for his daily work.

Duluth High School (Head of the Lakes)



John H. Vincent.

The Founder of the Chautauqua Movement

By William R. Harper, D.D.

President of the University of Chicago

IT is a difficult and delicate task to write about one's friend, one's colleague, one's honored chief. It is difficult because, however strong may be the desire to appear and to be impartial, the temptation comes at every step to consider things from a special point of view. The task is delicate because one hesitates to reveal to the public his inmost feelings; in other words, to tell the whole truth as he regards it. The task, however, has been undertaken, and, though difficult and delicate, must be accomplished. There may be disadvantages in the study of a living subject, but surely there are also advantages, if it has been one's privilege to know the "subject" intimately and for a long period.

Is it true that one's early environment is a foreshadowing of later life? But what are the elements which enter into childhood's environment? It seems to me that all are included under two words—home and education.

The early home life of John H. Vincent was in many respects ideal. It was likewise exceptionally well adapted to his particular temperament. The principal elements which constituted this life were, in climactic order, an atmosphere of calm and quiet, characterized by religious vigor, sturdy adherence to principle, and high intellectual ideals; a father of Huguenot descent and Huguenot character, strong and sympathetic, zealous for right living and religion, stimulating in the highest degree the best elements in the character of his children; a mother whom the son himself calls "an incarnation of consistency, fidelity, self-sacrifice, and serenity," who "never uttered a rash or foolish word."

His education, while not as formal as he himself has always wished it might have been, was, after all, an education of true and broad type. It included elements which even the best school life may not furnish. One can easily understand how every day spent in this home life was a day of educational progress. With a strong emphasis laid upon intellectual culture, with a library carefully selected and continually used, with the frequent visits of ministers and prominent persons, in accordance with Southern ideas of hospitality and entertainment, the whole surroundings were educative in the best sense. There was also specific training in the earliest years; under a governess in the Pennsylvania home after leaving Alabama, and in public school, in Milton Academy, and in the preparatory department of Lewisburg University. A discipline as valuable as any other was secured during four years of teaching, beginning with his fifteenth year, and in this first independent work there was shown an exhibition of spirit which explains much that became prominently characteristic in later life.

When almost ready to enter college, the young Vincent was persuaded by unwise friends to give up the thought of a college course and to enter at once upon his life-work of preaching. To use his own words, "college was abandoned through the pressure of church influence and of personal conscientious conviction." Beginning to preach at the age of nineteen, his study henceforward was carried on in connection with pastoral work. It is an interesting fact that during the early years of his ministerial life he was impelled by his own ambition to undertake severe courses of study, including practically all the subjects of the college course. Realizing that his work henceforward must be done by himself and without the aid of technical teachers, he seems to have entered upon it with all the greater vigor because of the lack of direct assistance. Strangely enough, his instinct proved to be a correct guide. Nineteen men out of twenty who undertake to direct their own studies during this period of life waste the greater part of their time. It was not so with the founder of the Chautauqua movement. The ideals which had been placed before him in his earlier days, the conviction that in the providence of God he was to accomplish something—these, together with his unerring instinct, led him through a most vigorous and thorough discipline. Yet he himself says that the lack of a college education has been for him throughout life the "thorn in the flesh;" "one can scarcely conceive of the grief, made up of regret, discouragement, and mortification, which this fact occasioned me through most of the years of my mature life." It was only after a prolonged struggle that at last he gave up the thought of a college course. During this period of struggle, "effort after effort was made to bring conscience and circumstances into line with ambition and to break loose from the active ministry in order to complete a college course."

Can any one doubt that the Chautauqua movement owes its existence in large measure to the fact that its founder did not have the privileges of a college course of study, and to the almost morbid feeling which had its origin in this deprivation? In the history of his mature life one can see almost at every step the influence of this feeling. Every effort was put forth to secure that which would serve as a substitute for the much-desired college training of which he was deprived. It was out of this struggle—a lifelong struggle—that Chautauqua, in the broadest sense of the term, was born.

But before we leave this earlier life, which contained, indeed, the germ of all that followed, notice should be taken of the tendencies which manifested themselves most clearly, and of the ideas which seem to have exerted greatest influence upon his mind. Before he had reached the age of twenty-one, every important characteristic of his later career had already exhibited itself. He had shown himself to be an indefatigable student, working then, as he has worked throughout life, whenever occasion or opportunity presented itself, occupying every moment of leisure for the acquisition of some new line of thought, for the mastery of some new author. The standard fixed in these years never afterward suffered change. He had likewise already developed the methods of the teacher, beginning at the age of fifteen, and continuing the work through four years. Here was gained an experience in the art of presenting truth for the instruction of others, which has more clearly characterized him than perhaps any other American preacher of modern times. If we had before us that picture of John H. Vincent in his earliest years, with his school gathered about him, not in the school-house, but in the grove, the pupils seated very comfortably upon the rough seats which he and they had provided, we should have indeed a picture of Chautauqua in miniature. But stronger than the tendency to be a student, more marked than the ability to teach, was the religious tendency of his mind, and his ability to preach. He was told that for this great work he had been set apart in infancy by his mother. It was his conscientious regard for what seemed to be a call from Heaven that led him to sacrifice his intellectual ambitions and undertake the work of the ministry. There is a tradition that while still a child the disposition to preach had manifested itself. The deep spirituality of his nature, the peculiar strength of the religious feeling which controlled him, the marked simplicity of his faith—these pointed unmistakably toward the work which, after all, was to be uppermost in his life. Throughout this period the influences to which he responded most easily, and by which he was most thoroughly controlled, were those of religion and of the natural world about him. The example and teaching of father and mother, together with a God-given appreciation of the value of religious faith and life, formed a character which was to continue its development in the same lines for many decades. But in close connection with this was the influence exerted upon him by nature. Again I use his own words: "Nature was full of wonder to me, and wielded a strange influence over my life. The stars, the night-winds, the thunder, the clouds piled up like towers at sunset, the ripples on the bosom of the river, the dark line of the Montour mountains in full view from my house—all these, and everything else in nature, took hold upon me, filling me with unrest and longing that grew at times into a sort of torture. Everything had religious relations and intimations, and my own life during these earlier years was often morbid, and sometimes wretched." All this must not be forgotten in our effort to estimate his later life.

THE STUDY, TOPEKA

THE PARLOR, TOPEKA

The special fields of work in which John H. Vincent has shown his power are the varied fields of religious and educational activity. In 1866 he became interested in Sunday-school work, and soon began to give his whole attention to the subject. But he never became a Sunday-school "hobbyist," for he always treated the subject, not as something isolated, but rather in its relation to the home, the pulpit, and the pastorate. Few, perhaps, are aware of his relationship to the earliest Sunday-school lesson-leaves and Sunday-school helps. He originated in outline a detailed lesson-leaf and periodical note system as published by the "Sunday-School Teacher," afterwards called the "National Sunday-School Teacher." He founded the "Northwestern Sunday-School Quarterly," afterwards changed to the "Chicago Teacher," a monthly, from which developed the International lesson system which has played so prominent a part in Bible study throughout the Protestant world. A little later he inaugurated the Berean system of lessons. Nothing shows the spirit of the man better than an address (given in 1871), recommending the home Sunday-school, from which the following brief extract is taken: "Visit the homes of the people and organize Sunday-schools there. We say to our Western farmer, If you live on the border, ten miles from every other human being, organize a Sunday-school. If there are only two persons in your house, open a Sunday-school. Sit down and read a portion of God's Word together, talk about it, memorize it, honor it. Save one or two dollars and send for a library of six or eight books. Give your little gem of a home Sunday-school a name, report its existence, seek God's blessing, and keep at work fifty-two Sabbaths a year." In this same connection, in speaking of "window-sill gardens," he says: "If but two or three families live within reach, get them together for a Sunday-school. We know it will require faith and forbearance, patience and love, but this may be had in unlimited measure. On window-sills of the fifth story of crowded tenement-houses in the city we have seen flower-boxes filled with earth, green vines springing up from them and shading the windows. In Palestine we have seen flowers, green grass, and frequent shrubs blooming in tiny clefts and in thin crevices, on the rock and on narrow terraces. Despise not the day of small things. Verdure and bloom and fruit may come where there is just soil enough for them to grow. Despise not this little cluster of insignificant houses in out-of-the-way country places. Where you can get a handful of children or adults, organize a Sunday-school. A Shakespeare, a Milton, a Whitefield, a Peabody, may be there. But of this be sure: where five lowly souls are, there are five immortals, redeemed by the blood of Christ, and although their names are never known beyond the limited neighborhood in which they were born, you may register their names in the Book of Life. There they will shine forever." To measure his influence in the work of the Sunday-school, it is only necessary to recall the fact that for twenty-two years he was Secretary of the Sunday-School Department of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Directly and indirectly, his work in the Church has been one of greatest influence. Nor has this influence been limited in any way to the denomination with which he is identified. In the Sunday-school institute, in the pulpit, and, indeed, everywhere, he has been recognized as contributing to the progress and advancement of the Church at large in all its branches. When, in 1888, he was elected Bishop in the Methodist Episcopal Church, the feeling was general that one who belonged to all the denominations had now been set apart for special work in a single denomination, and that consequently there had been taken away from the other denominations that which rightly belonged to them. This feeling even yet exists.

The literary work of Chautauqua's founder can only be mentioned in a word. More than a score of volumes from his pen have been published. These books, always read with eagerness, include a discussion of technical as well as practical questions, pedagogical as well as ecclesiastical topics, exegetical as well as homiletical material, secular as well as Biblical history. No more charming pages have been written by a traveler than those which are to be found in the brochures, "To Old Bethlehem" and "In Search of His Grave." In the domain of college work his influence has been most widely exerted, both directly and indirectly. There is no institution of learning in America to which John H. Vincent is not a most welcome visitor. His three years of service at Harvard as preacher, where his success has given him without question a position next to that of Phillips Brooks, his sermons from time to time at Yale University, which have been received most graciously by the students in spite of the compulsory chapel attendance, his sermons and addresses at Cornell University and at the University of Chicago, his lectures at the Johns Hopkins University, have indicated his power over college students and his ability to interest them in the subject of religion. By voice, by pen, and by the Chautauqua service he has devoted his energies unceasingly to the cause of higher education. His service in that cause has been all the more zealous because of his appreciation of the loss incurred in early life by reason of his failure to receive a college education.

EPISCOPAL RESIDENCE, TOPEKA

THE MAIN RECITATION HALL, CHAUTAUQUA

But the friends of Bishop Vincent to-day will agree that his greatest work has been done at and in connection with Chautauqua. If the word Chautauqua signified only the local Chautauqua with its Assembly, its Sunday-School Normal, its Schools of Sacred Literature, its Schools of Philosophy, Ancient Literature, Modern Literature, Mathematics, and Science, its School of Physical Culture, its schools of practical work in every line of effort, and its platform lectures given by men of every country and of highest position, the work would have been a great work, and more than sufficient to assure a lasting fame. But it will be remembered that the local Chautauqua is really something small and insignificant when compared with the world-wide Chautauqua. When we recall the scores of Chautauqua Assemblies established throughout the United States, the Oxford summer meeting established on the basis of the Chautauqua idea, the hundreds of thousands of readers who have been connected with the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle, the tens of thousands of homes into which a new light has penetrated as a result of the Chautauqua idea, the hundreds of thousands of books which have been bought and read by those who were eager for a learning which had been denied them, we obtain a faint conception of the meaning and significance of the term Chautauqua.

Bishop Vincent

THE HALL IN THE GROVE, CHAUTAUQUA

For what will Bishop Vincent's name stand in the far-distant future? As what will he be best known? As student, preacher, or teacher? I do not hesitate to say that his fame will go down to our children's children as a teacher and an educator. His work has influenced for good the cause of education more strongly than that of any man living today. What are the ideas which he has emphasized? The answer may be given briefly: (1) Education and life are inseparable, indeed identical, and consequently this thing called education is something which should be continuous, never ceasing, lasting as long as life lasts. What is life but a period of training for something higher and beyond? Education is also something which should be symmetrical, running parallel with life itself and adapted to the needs and necessities of life. His mother's doctrine, reiterated by his father, he tells us, was, "Education without religious faith and life is valueless." That this doctrine sank deep into the heart of the son his whole life bears testimony. Still, education must be broad and comprehensive, not a little here and a little there, but something everywhere, and to be regarded as ideal only in proportion as it makes one able to deal with the problems of life, and brings him into contact with all the culture of the higher life of civilization. (2) Education is not to be confined to formal study. It includes this, but it includes much more. Books alone are insufficient. One must come in contact with people, and especially with "the ablest men and women, specialists, scientists, littérateurs," "great teachers who know how to inspire and quicken minds," and from whom a special inspiration may be gained for the doing of special service. One must travel at home and abroad, and bring himself into contact with the localities in which the great lives of the world have been lived and its great events enacted. Perhaps more may be gained than in any other way from personal thought and meditation, in hours during which one is able to examine himself and hold before his soul a mirror in which shall be reflected his inner life and thought. (3) Education is not limited to any place or places. It should be the highest work of the home, and the entire policy of the home life should be directed towards the encouragement of that kind of living which shall be essentially educative in its character. It will of course be the exclusive work of the school; but outside of school, at the desk, in the factory, anywhere and everywhere, the desire to secure it should be the most intense desire of the human heart. (4) Education shall not be restricted in time. At no stage in life should one feel that his education has been finished. There is no age at which the work of education is impossible. Every man should be a student every day through all the days of life. Very striking are the words with which Bishop Vincent closes his article in the "Forum," "How I was Educated:" "I am in school now as a student every day, and unfinished curricula reach out into undefined futures. I shall never 'finish' my education."

LANDING PIER ON LAKE CHAUTAUQUA

TENT COLLEGE AT CHAUTAUQUA

BY THE LAKESIDE

These are the principles which underlie the Chautauqua movement; the factors which have entered into that movement to make it so great a success; the ideas for which the founder of Chautauqua has stood and to-day stands. Does some one suggest that these ideas are commonplace; that every one accepts them; that, indeed, they have never been denied? This, perhaps, may be true, but it is Chautauqua's founder who has made possible for many the realization of these ideas, who has laid such emphasis upon them, and given them such prominence that to-day they are the common property of all. Their extended prevalence, it should be remembered, is due in large measure to the world-wide work of Chautauqua.

In conclusion, no one who has been associated with Bishop Vincent has failed to observe two striking characteristics, both of which are closely related to what has already been said, both of which would be expected in a man of his antecedents. As he grows older in life he does not grow narrower. His views are constantly expanding, and his interest in the work that is going on about him increases every day. This is explained by his constant reading and studying, which have become a life habit. At the same time he stands loyally by what he believes to be the fundamental truths of his Church and his theology. No one is in doubt as to his position upon every essential question. This double characteristic which presents itself so clearly is perhaps the truest index of his character.

No man ever heard Bishop Vincent speak without respecting him. No man ever came into close touch with him without loving him.

ON THE LAKE

Three Poems

A Lesson from Nature

One lesson, Nature, let me learn of thee,
One lesson which in every wind is blown,
One lesson of two duties kept at one,
Though the loud world proclaim their enmity—
Of toil unsevered from tranquillity!
Of labor, that in lasting fruit outgrows
Far noisier schemes, accomplished in repose—
Too great for haste, too high for rivalry!
Yes, while on earth a thousand discords ring,
Man's senseless uproar mingling with his toil,
Still do thy quiet ministers move on,
Their glorious tasks in silence perfecting!
Still working, blaming still our vain turmoil,
Laborers that shall not fail when man is gone.

—Matthew Arnold.

Work

What are we set on earth for? Say, to toil;
Nor seek to leave thy tending of the vines,
For all the heat o' the day, till it declines,
And death's mild curfew shall from work assoil.
God did anoint thee with his odorous oil,
To wrestle, not to reign; and he assigns
All thy tears over, like pure crystallines,
For younger fellow-workers of the soil
To wear for amulets. So others shall Take patience, labor, to their heart and hand,
From thy hand, and thy heart, and thy brave cheer,
And God's grace fructify through thee to all.
The least flower, with a brimming cup, may stand,
And share its dewdrop with another near.

—Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

Theocritus

O Singer of the field and fold,
Theocritus! Pan's pipe was thine,—
Thine was the happier age of gold!

For thee the scent of new-turned mold,
The beehives, and the murmuring pine,
O Singer of the field and fold!

Thou sang'st the simple feasts of old,
The beechen bowl made glad with wine,—
Thine was the happier age of gold!

Thou bad'st the rustic loves be told,
Thou bad'st the tuneful reeds combine,
O Singer of the field and fold!

And round thee, ever-laughing, rolled
The blithe and blue Sicilian brine, —
Thine was the happier age of gold!

To-day our songs are faint and cold,
Our Northern suns too sadly shine;
O Singer of the field and fold,
Thine was the happier age of gold!

—Austin Dobson.

"RURAL SIMPLICITY"
Bramber Church, England

The Rural Church

I.—"A Cathedral in a Bandbox"

By J. Cleveland Cady

IT is related that a few years ago the good people of a pretty village, not remote from the great metropolis, having with considerable effort and sacrifice secured a few thousand dollars for the building of a rural church, went to an eminent architect for advice and designs. Their committee were quite aflame with schemes and ideas for the new building—much, indeed, as the private citizen is apt to be when contemplating the erection of a house for his own family. Many of them had sought the available books on Church Architecture, and fastened upon some especial feature or features that seemed to them supremely desirable. One hoped that "whatever else might be lacking, the church would have a plenty of gargoyles, as they were the most charming features of any church." Another greatly admired flying buttresses, and desired to have one or two, "to give it such a cathedral effect," and, when a more practical brother remonstrated that they were unsuitable for their little church, as they were the constructive features of great vaulted naves, replied that "they were remarkable triumphs of construction, and one would certainly be a very educational feature in the town." Still another desired the highest spire in the county, urging that it could be cheaply done in slate, and so "not only be a lofty landmark, but a monument to their economy and ability to make much out of little." A member who was specially interested in matters ecclesiastical longed for "nave, aisles, transept, and an ambulatory—an ambulatory, if possible."

The committee presented their ideas very fully to the eminent architect, who heard them patiently, and when they had concluded said: "Did I understand you to say that you had seventy thousand dollars to begin with?"

"Oh, no!" exclaimed the chairman, "we have seven thousand in all. It's not a large church that we want—only a little village church to seat two or three hundred persons."

"Oh! I see," replied the architect—"you want a cathedral in a bandbox."

This desire for a "cathedral in a bandbox" has for a long time been the bane of our rural churches. It is not always a Gothic cathedral which is desired, but, whatever may be its style, it is apt to be a building of a too pretentious type for the means in hand, the community, or the uses required. This naturally leads to an unsubstantial and tawdry structure—perhaps the most despicable combination that can be thought of. The moldings and ornaments, which on account of expense cannot be carried out in solid material, are executed in some inferior substance or in imitation of the genuine, and so the whole affair is disgraced, not only by poor material and work, but by the evident desire for ostentation, even if attained by a mockery, and by the fact that, if it teaches the community any lesson in connection with the worship of God, it is that display is the most desirable of attainments, and in the church, as in the world, "keeping up appearances," however false, is essential to success.

Some time ago, as the writer was journeying through a beautiful portion of New England, far from railroads and works that reminded of the active forces of the time, but where mountain and lake scenery were of marvelous loveliness, upon passing around the side of a mountain he came in view of a little hamlet nestling in the hills—a scene that must once have been one of rare charm, but which was now quite spoiled by a church that had recently been erected.

It was a cruciform building with a large square tower at the intersection of nave and transepts. The roof of the tower (which presented quite an extensive surface from any point of view) was covered with tiles which seemed to be of the brightest scarlet, and which, of course, had nothing in common with the natural surroundings, but was always asserting itself in the most positive manner, giving the "rash gazer" constant provocation to "wipe his eye."

Another extremely inharmonious and staring color effect, even at a distance, was the glazing of the windows, which were showily done in opalescent glass, a material which, however fine in its interior effect, is liable to distressing exterior results unless managed with great care. Here the crude blues and whites of the "art glass," as tradesmen nowadays delight to call it, did their best to vie with the scarlet tile of the tower, and, it must be confessed, with no mean success.

The nearer approach to the building did not reveal any mitigating features. The elaborate cornice of the central tower proved to be of galvanized iron, painted to match the stone of the walls; the greatly foliated window-tracery was of wood, the joints and cracks of which were opening in many places; the ornate cappings of buttresses and pinnacles were of cement or artificial stone; the showy, clumsy finials and crestings were of cast iron, but gilded in so generous a manner that they added still more to the glaring effect of the building.

Later inquiry brought out these facts: that the summer boarders in this lovely mountain region desired a house of worship, had contributed liberally towards it, and, finally, the large subscription of a wealthy lady completed the amount deemed necessary; that it was thought a fitting and happy thing to make it a memorial to a home missionary who had spent his life—a most laborious and self-denying one—in that part of the country; that the fashioning of the building had been put in the hands of a young architect who was summering in the neighborhood; that it was soon likely to be closed, as it was some five thousand dollars in debt, it having been found that so much "elegance" could not be secured for the sum contemplated.

This story of a village church is not an unusual one. In the failure to take a simple type of building which could be admirably and solidly built within the means at disposal, which would from its very simplicity be likely to harmonize with its natural surroundings and add to their charms, many a pretty countryside has had its beauty ruined by a building of a style so pretentious as to be unfitted for its place and purpose, and so inherently expensive that it could be built only in a cheap and flimsy manner, even then running its founders into debt.

How often, as we journey in England or France, we are strongly attracted by the village churches, until at length we come to watch for them as among the most pleasing objects to be met! They seem so simple, so effective, so suited to their sites, and so in harmony with nature generally. Not only are the most refined and cultivated charmed by them, but every one declares them "picturesque" and "lovely," and has a feeling that they could not be other than they are without a distinct loss to the little town or hamlet.

And what are the factors from which the little buildings receive this beauty and interest?

Usually low, massive walls of rugged stone; an immense roof that surmounts them, with few or possibly no features to break its surface (which gets quite enough relief from its rough, deep-toned covering); a few simple but well-located windows, and occasionally the walls between them strengthened by bold, irregular buttresses. Very likely there may be a low, sturdy stone tower connected with the building at some unexpected point, or growing out of its composition—often, however, seeming quite an accidental matter.

Who has not met with such buildings again and again, and longed to transport them to his own neighborhood, or at least reproduce their like?

They were sometimes the crowning glory of the town. They had lasted for numberless decades, and deserve as many in the future, gathering around them the associations, affection, and interests of generation after generation. They cannot become out of fashion, for they have never entered into the passing fancies and fads of the time. Their reasonableness, simplicity, and honesty have in them the elements of the best taste, and must always command admiring respect. The most of these churches were less expensive to build than the New England church described in the early portion of this article. Their few simple and solid features cost less than the aggregation of trashy ones that made the latter distressing.

What, then, is the important lesson taught in regard to rural churches by the good and bad examples we have considered? Is it that we should build only very simple and ingenuous buildings, but very real and solid?

Is it not, rather, that no scheme of building should be attempted that cannot be carried out thoroughly and appropriately?

If there is ample means to build grandly, as has been the case in many of the foreign towns, it is a subject of congratulation for the place and the public at large; the building, if carried out in a monumental manner, becomes a distinguishing feature of the town and does it great honor; but if, as is often the case, only moderate means are available, and our rule of procedure necessitates a very simple style of building, we have already seen that simplicity and beauty go hand in hand, and that, when excellent in their way, the humbler as well as the grander buildings are objects of general admiration—are often famous. The only requisite is that each should be excellent in its own way.

Moderate means is not the greatest of misfortunes if used in the right direction. The trouble comes when that is attempted which is not in keeping with the means or circumstances of the case—when the attempt is made to build "a cathedral in a bandbox."

Margaret Ogilvy

A Visit to Mr. Barrie's Mother

By Ellen Painter Cunningham

The light of Mr. J. M. Barrie's literary success shone from one of the first signal-fires kindled by the recently rising School of Scotch Authors. As it was Mr. Barrie's mother, Margaret Ogilvy, who, from her memory's retentive stores, fed the flames of his genius with many fagots of facts, and as it was also she who fanned the sparks of his earliest achievement with the inspiring breath of encouragement and appreciation, it is indeed appropriate, at this season of the first anniversary of her death—the 3d of September—for Mr. Barrie to illumine her memory with the reflected light of his fame, by publishing "Margaret Ogilvy," in her honor. The affectionate appropriateness of this tribute is best understood by those who best knew the perfect sympathy of their relations, the afterglow of which may perhaps receive a more personal tinge of coloring from these few reminiscences of an American's visit to Mrs. Barrie and her surroundings—"Thrums."

MARGARET OGILVY
(Mrs. Barrie)

MR BARRIE'S FATHER

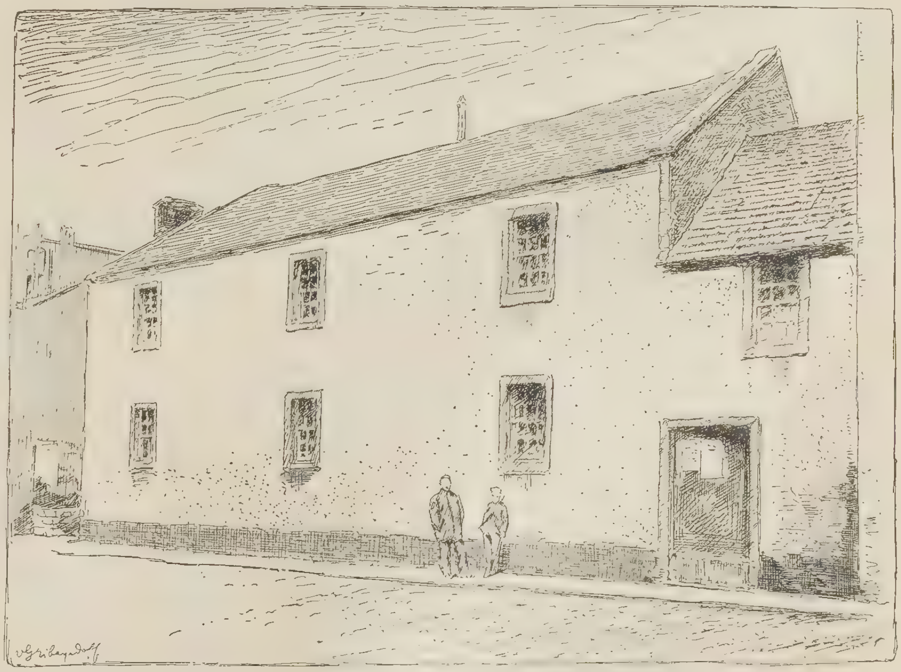
Kirriemuir—"Thrums"—located sixty-odd miles north of Edinburgh, was visited even in the summer of 1890 by 3,500 pilgrims, who voiced a small part of the Scotch applause. A local guide-book has now been published, and one of Scotland's best photographers has taken pictures of the famous village, to satisfy the demands of enthusiastic visitors. In 1891 it was the privilege of the writer, in company with two Scotch friends, to be shown the Barrie landmarks of the town by one of its former provosts, Mr. Ogilvie, who knew the Barrie family. The epicurean sightseer, accustomed to picturesque fare, finds little to suit his taste here. The streets are treeless and relentlessly monotonous, unenlivened by the gay flowering window-boxes which are so familiar a sight in humblest English homes.

A small eye of a window is quite a common feature, and lends an architectural squint to the village countenance. Typifying the Scotch propensity for presenting the most unattractive aspect possible, the small red sandstone dwellings apparently "turn their backs on the public," being generally entered through a rear garden, and with no door opening upon the street. Any one accustomed to the American version of "tenement" would be surprised to hear that term applied to the row of two-storied houses (in one of which Mr. Barrie was born) to distinguish them from the ordinary one-storied cottages.

Mr. Barrie asserts that many of the "Thrums" weavers "lived and died 'Thoreaus' without knowing it," and he had every opportunity for forming this opinion, as his father, still living, hale and hearty at eighty years of age, was a hand-loom manufacturer who employed several men, and carried on the weaving on the first floor of his dwelling. In former times, during the dark Northern winter days, often one weaver read aloud some paper, thus supplying his companions with topics for discussion, while a small hanging "cruizee," primitive in its whale-oil and rush pith, feebly furnished artificial light; but it is told how mischievous "laddies," not more contented then than now with the sober light of knowledge and philosophy, would delight in slyly cutting the "cruizee's" string, momentarily illuminating the darkened scene by a flash of fun!—one more glimpse of "Thrums" villagers, who, if philosophical and humorous, are also, it appears, eminently independent and self-respecting, for a shoemaker who, in consequence of his friendship for one of her Majesty's gillies, had received repeated orders to make shoes for the Queen—the condition of satisfaction, comfort, being complied with—still sturdily refused to consider himself or his work improved by royal patronage (thus differing from London's gayly emblazoned shopkeepers of Piccadilly and Regent Street), and scorned to placard his shop "Bootmaker to the Queen"! .

The "Auld Licht Kirk" building and the Town Hall in the market-place especially demanded attention, for they echoed loudest with the public life of the past. The Town Hall still stands; from the outside stairway of which, according to an old custom, the sales for the coming week were formerly announced on Sunday.

The "Auld Licht Kirk" building, demolished since the writer's visit to it, was built of stone, painted white, and its form in nowise suggested ecclesiastical affairs. The floor was of stone and earth. Several hundred people could be accommodated, but the attendance had dwindled to thirty or forty faithful souls, who dauntlessly aspired to a new edifice. The minister's pew, located in a corner near the entrance, was the only one upholstered, contained a cloth-covered center-table, and could be closed by a narrow door. When the building was torn down, Mr. Barrie purchased the old pulpit and precentor's desk—the latter being the identical one from which "Lang Tammas"—such a conspicuous figure in "The Little Minister"—used to run his neck forward as he gauged the keynote for the Psalms.



THE AULD LICHT KIRK

Not far from the little cottage "on the brae," reputed to contain the original "Window of Thrums," one finds the rose-grown latter-day home of Mr. Barrie's parents, where he returned every summer to visit. Mr. Ogilvie (the before-mentioned host of the party) having already obtained permission to bring us, his acquaintances, to call, we passed through the little garden to the two-storied stone house. Miss Barrie, a daughter who lived at home, opened the door and conducted us upstairs to the sitting-room. The home was suggestive of the literary son—in the pen-and-ink sketch of himself, in the hundreds of books (mostly reviewed by him) filling one end of the library downstairs, and in the photographs of his friends—viz., Mrs. Oliphant, Thomas Hardy, and George Meredith. Grant Allen, another friend, was one of the earliest and stanchest heralds of Mr. Barrie's rising reputation. A print of Thomas Carlyle reminds one that Mr. Barrie, when a boy, used to see him occasionally in Dumfries, and is reported to credit Carlyle with having been "the only author who ever influenced him." A few flowers and an etching of one of Orchardson's pictures gave additional touches of distinctive refinement to the sitting-room.

THE WINDOW IN THRUMS

Mrs. Barrie received us with great cordiality, being particularly interested in the fact that one visitor was an American, from whom she requested a card to show her son—presumably as a proof of how widely his renown had traveled. She was vivacious and chatty, speaking such "broad" Scotch, however, that even a young Scotch woman of the party could not altogether understand the following anecdote related of a certain Babbie, in response to an inquiry about the incident, which occurred in the days when the women of the "Auld Lichts" wore the "mutch," a double-frilled white cap with black ribbons. A clever Scotch friend, who heard Mrs. Barrie, wrote down what she said, which ran about as follows: "I mind fine o' that, for I saw'd mysel'. Ye see, it was in the auld days when they gae oot the line. Ye ken, efter the minister had gaen oot the Psalm, the precentor read oot the first line, and then they sang it; an' syne the second line, an' so on, for the benefit o' them that couldna read. Ah, weel, they chaenged that, and sang the Psalm richt through. But Babbie couldna pit up wi' that awa, and so, when the Psalm was ridden, she used to loup up from her seat and make for the door. But some mischievous laddies, ae Sabbath, nailed up the door, and sae when Babbie tried to get oot she couldna win, but buit bide, whether she likit it or no." Mrs. Barrie seemed to relish the amusing discomfiture of the "mutched" heroine so keenly that it was easy to believe that her son had been obliged to desist from reading her the most humorous parts of his writings, because they brought on the haoust (cough). Regretting her son's absence, Mrs. Barrie affectionately produced from folds of tissue-paper a photograph of him taken when he was only five or six years old, and already the forehead, so striking a feature in maturity, dominated his face.

On parting from Mrs. Barrie she gave the writer photographs of herself and husband, saying of her own, as she almost misspelled her name in the excitement of writing it, "Ye mauna make it marrow (match) o' me!" Indeed, no photograph could give a satisfactory idea of her face, for the pale gray eyes and large mobile mouth responded to every thought and feeling. The picture of Mr. Barrie's father showed that his nationality would be patent the world over.

Whatever is known of Mrs. Barrie's assistance of and influence upon her son, several instances of his reciprocal interest in her life have not been generally mentioned—namely, that he always attended church with her whenever she was able to go out, and also that, in spite of the distractions of London and the absorbing joys of newly wedded life, for two years before her death he wrote daily, keeping his beloved old mother in touch with the outside world. The climax of tender, persistent consideration was that, although Mr. Barrie's handwriting is usually rather illegible, he took the trouble to write plainly enough for his mother to read his letters herself.

Surely the constant devotion of Mr. Barrie to his mother must give a luster to his fame as bright as the golden broom blossoms crowning his native braes; and if one wanders outside Kirriemuir for a farewell view of the foothills of the beautiful blue Grampians—royally blue in the distance—perhaps one could not honor Mrs. Barrie's memory better than by pausing beside the "wishing stone" mentioned in "The Little Minister," and wishing that the relations between all mothers and sons, famous or obscure, on whichever side of the Atlantic, may be more unswervingly loving and sympathetic because of those between Mrs. Barrie and her son.

JAMES M. BARRIE

❧

The Chicago "Times-Herald" says: "In the proffered use of another half million dollars' worth of property, the University of Chicago is now in the way to possess the most splendid inland lake biological station in the world. This magnificent supplement to the Hull gift of $1,000,000 for biological laboratories is due to Mrs. Edward Roby, E. A. Shedd, and C. R. Shedd, owners of the property. It makes possible for the University to control all the land and water it desires of the 3,000 acres around Wolf Lake and the channel connecting it with Lake Michigan. To secure such a station, Professor Whitman, head professor of zoölogy, has labored ever since he came to the University."

The Children in the Public Library

By John Cotton Dana

Librarian of Denver Public Library, President of American Library Association

WHAT to do with the children in the free public library is still one of the unsettled problems in library economy. For the comfort of elder readers it is certainly desirable that children should not come in large numbers into the main part of any library in which the public is given access to the shelves. It is desirable also, and for the same reasons, that they should be admitted only to a moderate degree to the main reference-rooms or reading-rooms of any library. On the other hand, if they are chiefly confined to a room of their own, one containing only the books in all classes which their elders think adapted to children's use, they will lose some of the advantages which would come from access to and contact with books intended primarily for older needs than their own. And when we consider the horrid dreariness of most of the books—and especially of those outside of fiction—which well-meaning souls have written for children, the possible loss in this direction seems very great and very deplorable.

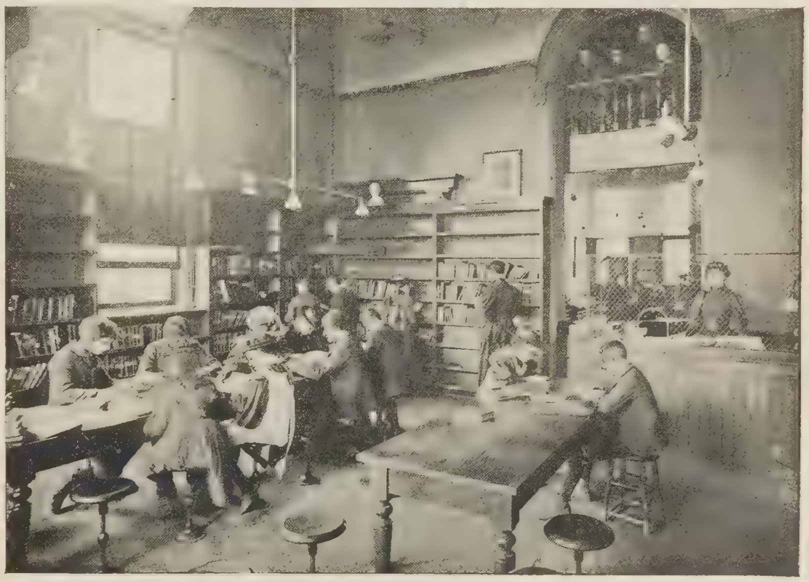
The following account of one library's experience is designed, not as an answer to the question of how to manage childish visitors, but as showing one way of doing it. It also casts some light on the question of the trustworthiness of the younger patrons of a library.

The plan shown herewith is that of the front part of the free public library in a Western town of about 120,000 people. It is open twelve hours every day in the year to both borrowers and readers. The whole library contained, September 1, 1894, about 22,000 volumes; December 24, 1895, it contained about 27,000 volumes. The total number of visits paid to the library, by readers and book-borrowers, old and young, on each day between the two dates given, was about one thousand.

Visitors are admitted freely to all parts of the library, and are permitted to handle, examine, and select their books at will, except English adult fiction—and this exception is made only because of lack of room. This English adult fiction is kept on the shelves immediately in the rear of the delivery counter, shown in the plan. Access to the main library is through the unlocked gate and the swinging doors seen at the left of the delivery-counter, near the door of the Librarian's office. The gate is simply a piece of pine so hung that it lightly closes itself. Borrowers' cards are issued to any adult resident of the city who can give a good account of himself or herself. Children get a card after having an application slip signed by parent, teacher, or any responsible resident.

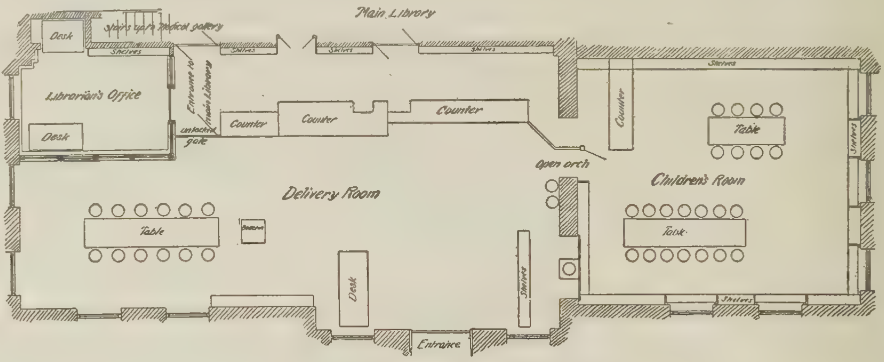
The children's room, it will be seen, is at the right of the delivery-room. Across the open arch which leads into it there is no gate of any kind. The gate seen in the illustration closes the passageway to the rear of the counter. Nearly all charging of books is done at the middle one of the three sections into which, it will be seen, the counter in the delivery-room is divided. One attendant is nearly always behind the counter, though there are often intervals of a few moments when no attendant is in sight. The counter in the children's room was designed to be used by a special attendant in that room. There is no such attendant. The counter is used for other than book-charging purposes for a short time each evening, and at no other time. An occasional excursion into the children's room from behind the main counter, to aid visitors in finding books, or to get books asked for on slips at the main counter, is all the visitation and watching this room receives during library hours. It has shelves on its four sides. On these shelves, arranged at such a height that they can be easily reached by a child of ordinary height, were placed, on the 1st of September, 1894, about 3,000 volumes, of which 60 per cent. were fiction, and the rest miscellaneous books in every department of knowledge, all selected with special reference to their fitness for young people. Maintaining approximately this proportion, these books were gradually increased in number to about 6,500 by the 24th of December, 1895.

Of these books there is no catalogue, either in print or on cards, which can be well used by children. It is very doubtful, judging by experience with certain special lists of children's books of one kind and another, whether young people will pay any attention to a catalogue of their books, if they can get at the books themselves, unless they are constantly guided and persuaded to use it by a skillful attendant. The equipment of the room is: the books mentioned; the two tables and the stools shown; a number of pictures cut from art journals, mounted on white cardboard, and hung in the space in the upper part of the bookcases unoccupied by books; and a few casts. The pictures are changed from time to time, simply to add to their interest.



CHILDREN'S ROOM, PUBLIC LIBRARY, DENVER

Children enter the library, and, after securing a card—there is no age limit—are generally directed to the children's room. If for any reason they wish to go into the main book and reading rooms, they are permitted to do so; though some slight restriction is placed on their visits to this part of the library, in that, during the busy part of the day, they are sometimes made to give good reason for wishing to go in. All but a very few are abundantly satisfied with their own books in their own room. They go to their own room; find out for themselves, or have pointed out to them by an attendant, the method of the arrangement of the books—the system is quite simple; browse about until they find what suits them; perhaps spend ten minutes, half an hour, two hours, in reading and looking at pictures in one book or another; and take the books they have selected out of their room, across one side of the delivery-room, to the center part of the delivery-counter. They hand their books and cards over the counter, have the proper charges made, and take the books away. When the counter is left with no attendant, or when the attendants who are there are busy, and especially when the front of the counter is filled—as it often is on afternoons—with people waiting for books, it is absolutely impossible for attendants to keep any careful check on the ingoings and outcomings of children from their room. Nothing could be easier than for a child so disposed to walk into the library, into the children's room, load himself with books under his coat, and walk out again.



PLAN OF THE PUBLIC LIBRARY, DENVER

During the sixteen months from September 1, 1894, to December 24, 1895, there were lent, for home use, out of this room 90,000 volumes. A rough estimate would indicate that during this same period at least 140,000 visits were paid to this room, chiefly by children. Out of the main library, and over the same counter, there were lent, between the dates given, 180,000 volumes. On checking over the books in the room, at the end of this sixteen months of use, there were found missing 123 books. The total cost to the library of these 123 books was probably not over $175. To have kept an attendant in the children's room, not allowing access to the shelves, making the attendant look up all books as asked for, and compelling the children to select from catalogues, would have cost, at the lowest estimate, for these sixteen months, a thousand dollars. To have kept an attendant in the room to watch the children—the latter being admitted to the shelves—and see that none of them carried books away without having a record made of them, would not have prevented all loss, and would also have cost at least a thousand dollars. It is confidently expected that at least 50 per cent. of these 123 books will turn up in the course of the next twelve months. The library is very free in lending books in quantity to any one for special purposes, and especially to teachers for school use. It has not infrequently happened that teachers and others have been found to have come into the library, made inquiries about certain books, gone to the shelves, found them, and quietly walked out with them without having any records made. This is done in carelessness and forgetfulness, not with any intent to deceive. Between the teachers, the children, and other people, it is safe to suppose, as suggested, that at least half of these 123 books have been carried off in this innocent way, and will, in the course of time, be returned.

VIEW IN GENERAL BOOK ROOM, PUBLIC LIBRARY, DENVER

It is not easy to make an estimate of the value of this children's room to the community, any more than it is easy to make an estimate which shall be definite and precise of the value of a free public library itself to any community. Certainly it has been highly appreciated. The young people, from little tots who cannot read, to young men and women, have manifestly enjoyed its privileges. At the close of school in the afternoon, on Saturdays, and on Sundays, it is more than full for many hours in the day. Its smallness, relatively to the large number of children visiting it, has made it difficult to keep it as quiet as a larger room could be kept, even with a larger number of children. Close contact with one another among young folks is not conducive to entire peace. It is an interesting and instructive place to watch. It looks to be a helpful institution. It is a manifest improvement on the city street corner. It seems to justify itself every day it is open. Many people in the community have remarked upon it with admiration, and, as yet, from no one has come any adverse criticism. If public libraries are of value, this form of a children's department must be, if not the ideal thing, certainly an ideal thing.

❧

Living Waters

By Caroline S. Spencer

There are some hearts like wells, green-mossed and deep
As ever summer saw;
And cool their water is—yea, cool and sweet—
But you must come to draw.
They hoard not, yet they rest in calm content,
And not unsought will give;
They can be quiet with their wealth unspent,
So self-contained they live.

And there are some like springs, that bubbling burst
To follow dusty ways,
And run with offered cup to quench his thirst
Where the tired traveler strays;
That never ask the meadows if they want
What is their joy to give;
Unasked, their lives to other life they grant,
So self-bestowed they live!

And One is like the ocean, deep and wide,
Wherein all waters fall;
That girdles the broad earth, and draws the tide,
Feeding and bearing all;
That broods the mists, that sends the clouds abroad,
That takes, again to give;—
Even the great and loving heart of God,
Whereby all love doth live. —Selected.

Basket-Ball at Smith College

By Elizabeth Fisher Read

THE game of basket-ball was adopted at Smith College four years ago, and was directly incorporated into the work of the departments of physical training. All work done in basket-ball is under the immediate supervision of the department, and in connection with the regular gymnasium work. During the first and second years this work is compulsory for all students. The classes meet, in small divisions, four half-hours a week, from November to Easter. One afternoon a week is given to basket-ball, so that every girl in college has a practical acquaintance with the game, and has learned by falls and tumbles how to appreciate good playing.

During the winter the games are played in the Alumnæ Gymnasium. The floor of the gymnasium is marked off into three divisions, each of which forms the territory of a certain number of the players on each side. In each of the end divisions is a goal—an eighteen-inch cylinder or basket, the mouth of which is ten feet from the floor. The object of the game is to get the ball into the basket. At Smith a regulation Rugby football is used. Each basket is protected by three "homes"—players on the side to which that goal belongs, whose object is to get the ball into the basket. In the same territory stand three "guards," players on the other side, who try to prevent their opponents from scoring. In the middle division the "centers," four in number, play. The center players on each side try to get the ball when the referee puts it into play by tossing it out among them, and to pass it along from one member of the team to another, until it reaches the homes, and a goal is scored. The side scoring the most goals in forty minutes wins the game. The game is played in two halves of twenty minutes each, with ten minutes' intermission.

The game was at first considered an absurdity, as so many things were distinctly forbidden that there seemed to be no game left at all. The ball cannot be kicked or struck with the fists; no player can run with it, or hold it except with her hands; there can be no pushing, tripping, or shoving. In view of these restrictions, no interest or excitement seemed possible. Yet even these ordinary rules have been still further modified at Smith without decreasing the interest of the game. The additional limitations have only made the game more scientific. The rules adopted by the Y. M. C. A. provide for eight kinds of fouls—those made by striking the ball with the fist, kicking it, running with it, holding it with anything but the hands, holding, striking, pushing, or shouldering an opponent, needless rough play, touching the ball when put into play by any one except a center, and addressing the umpire or referee by any one but the captains. Under these rules it is possible for a player to hold the ball in his hands until he can decide what to do with it, or to bounce it indefinitely until matters arrange themselves to his satisfaction. At Smith, however, it was considered that by this hesitancy one of the best results of the game—the training in quick, decisive judgment—was lost. Any one can tell where to throw the ball after thinking two or three minutes about it; the value of the game lies in the training it gives, in knowing, at once, on the instant, what to do with it. Accordingly two more acts were made fouls—holding the ball longer than three seconds, and bouncing it more than three times, or lower than the knee. Under this arrangement rapidity of thought and action are essential to success. A player has to throw the ball to some one else before it is fairly in her hands.

GUARDING THE THROW INTO THE BASKET

The division of the ground into sections is also an arrangement peculiar to Smith. Each player can play only on her own territory; if she gets out of bounds, it constitutes a foul. This adjustment is more scientific, because it gives each player an especial thing to do. She knows just what part of the game she has to see to, and is confident that the other players on her side will attend to the playing in their divisions. Greater concentration of purpose and a less extensive responsibility are thus secured. Each player is responsible for a definite thing.

The culminating point of the gymnasium work is the annual basket-ball game between the teams of the first and second classes. A position on the class team is a highly coveted honor. The hope of getting on it makes the students more regular in their gymnasium work than they might otherwise be. The weekly practice work brings about the recognition of ability, and insures the selection of those students that are best able to uphold the honor of their class. About a month before the match game is played, a first and a second, or substitute, teams are chosen in each class. In order to equalize the contest, and offset the greater experience of the second class, the juniors are allowed to coach the first class team. Until this year, however, their greater experience in playing the game and in working with each other have enabled the second class to beat, in spite of the junior coaching. This year, however, owing to a combination of circumstances, the first class won the game by a close score.

BASKET-BALL IN THE SMITH COLLEGE GYMNASIUM

The game is played in the Alumnæ Gymnasium, usually on the Saturday before the Easter vacation. On that day the interior of the gymnasium presents a very interesting appearance. On the stage at one end of the hall the Faculty and guests from the city are seated. They usually appear wearing the colors of one side or the other. Great rivalry is displayed by the members of the two classes in inducing popular members of the Faculty to wear their colors. Often members of the Amherst Faculty are present. The parents of the students living in or near Northampton show their interest in the game and in the welfare of their daughters' class by lending their moral support to the occasion. Each team uses one of the small dressing-rooms on each side of the stage.

The students are massed on the running-track—the second class, with their natural supporters, the seniors, on the one side, with the first class and the juniors opposite them. The railings and pillars on each side are decorated with the colors of the side whose stronghold it is, and the students themselves are so well provided with neckties, scarfs, banners, umbrellas, and even dresses of their class colors that the effect from the floor is almost that of a solid bank of color.

While waiting for the teams to come out, the students while away the time by singing songs gotten up for the occasion. These songs consist of lines appropriate to the situation, in praise of the class or the team, set to some popular melody. From time to time both sides join in singing some song of general interest. As each member of the Faculty comes in, he is greeted with cheers and with his verse of the "Faculty song." During the actual playing no singing is permitted, but in the intermission it is renewed with increased vigor, the winning side trying to express their approval and pleasure, the losers trying to cheer up their team to greater efforts. After the game cheers, songs, and a triumphal parade end the contest.

The game is carried on in a friendly spirit throughout. Naturally each side strains every nerve to win, but that no bad feeling is caused is shown by the fact that the two teams have a supper together in the evening, at which good fellowship reigns.

During the spring term no gymnasium work is required, so that whatever playing is done is entirely voluntary. In spite of the fresher attractions spring at Smith affords, in the shape of walks among the hills and meadows with which Northampton is surrounded, in spite of mountain-climbing and tennis and the Walking Club, the members of the basket-ball teams still manage to find time for an occasional game. In the spring the playing is done on a ground laid out on the campus. The pictures accompanying this article were taken on this out-of-door ground. The gymnasium suit shown in the pictures is the dress worn by all the gymnasium classes. It consists of a blouse with Turkish trousers. These out-of-door games are very popular with the students. The ground is nearly always surrounded by interested spectators when a game is going on.

A SURE GOAL

When it became a recognized principle in colleges for women that physical training was as necessary for them as for men, the question arose, What form should this training take? Should Vassar and Smith attempt to give their students physical training identical with that offered in Harvard and Yale? Those who considered a women's college as necessarily inferior to a college for men, unless it offers the same courses in all departments, naturally extended this principle to physical training, and regarded as amateur and inefficient all training that did not follow exactly the lines of men's athletic work.

PUTTING THE BALL IN PLAY

This principle, however, has never been recognized at Smith. From the beginning the college policy has been, not to duplicate the means of development offered in men's colleges, but to provide courses and methods of study that should do for women what the men's courses did for them. Emphasis has been put, not on the resemblances between men and women, but rather on the differences. The effort has not been to turn out new women, capable of doing anything man can do, from walking thirty miles to solving the problems of higher mathematics. Instead of this the college has tried to develop its students along natural womanly lines, not along the lines that would naturally be followed in training men. Instead of the methods natural and proper in a college for men, and resulting in a system of athletics, there is in operation at Smith College a method equally natural and proper for a college for women, but resulting in physical training. Yet, while it was obvious that men's sports could not be adopted bodily in a women's college, it was nevertheless felt that some of the benefits resulting from these sports would be of equal value to women. A man who has learned to play football knows how to meet a crisis. From the effort to devise some form of training that would secure to women this ability among other advantages, while at the same time avoiding the undesirable features of football, the game of basket-ball above described has resulted.

The Sweetest Flower

By Priscilla Leonard

Among the summer's lavish store
 Each heart knows some familiar flower,
 Dearest of all, whose subtle power
Unlocks, with fragrant key, the door
 Of memory, and wakes again
 A bygone joy, a bygone pain,
So keen, so sweet, that days long dead
 Live with intensest life once more,
And we, with trembling footsteps, tread
 The unforgotten ways of yore.
Ah! other flowers may fairer be,
But these alone, unfadingly,
 Our youth, our past, to us restore.

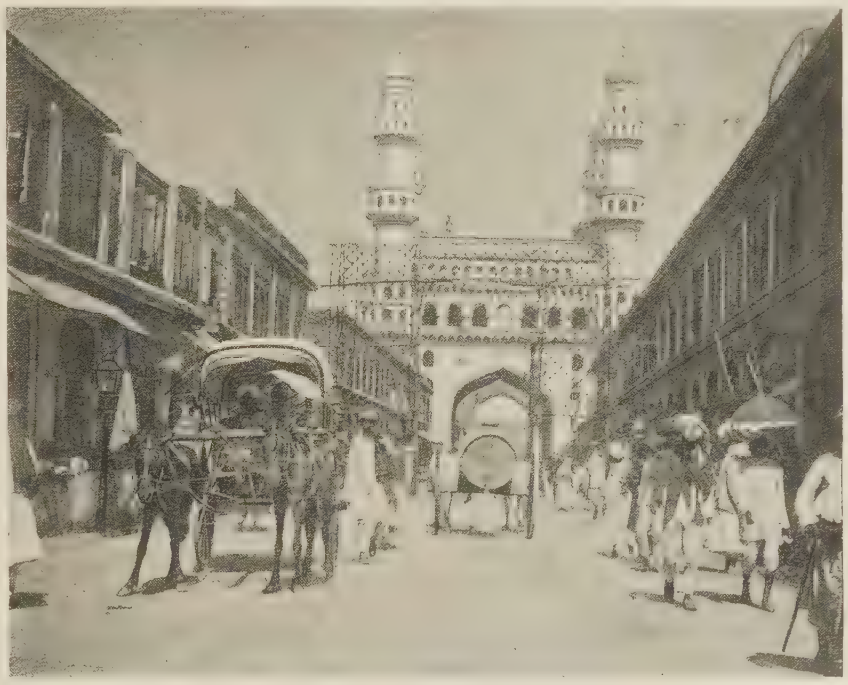
Hyderabad

By William Frederick Dix

A VISIT to the independent principality of Hyderabad, in southern India, is a plunge into mediævalism. The government of a prince who is practically a despot, the power of feudal lords or rajahs, the lack of strength in any central power, the free, adventurous life, the gorgeous costumes of the people, the pageants of petty rulers and their suites—all these bewilder the traveler. As he passes through the thronged streets of the capital, elbowed by Afghans and Khurds from the north, by Bengali, Brahmins, and Punjabi, all garbed in glittering brocade or brilliant cloths from Kashmir, or in pure white, all armed with sword, dagger, and enormous pistols, he feels that he is indeed living in the days of chivalry or of the Arabian Nights.

Hyderabad, the country, is in the center of southern India, and is still free from British control, although a British "Resident" lives in the capital, and it is said that before the Nizam ever does anything important "he has a chat with him." This prince has always been friendly to England, and England has followed the wise policy of giving him, at least in appearance, autonomy for his country, which has about ten million inhabitants.

Hyderabad, the city, is the capital, and is a walled city of about three hundred and fifty thousand people, and is entered by thirteen gates. From the railroad that runs diagonally across India from Madras to Bombay, a branch road has been built, through the country of Hyderabad (which is about equal in size to Ireland), to its capital in its center. Of all places in India, this dazzling city is the most turbulent and unsafe. Within its walls each man is his own guardian. The two ruling classes of society, the Mohammedans and the Hindus, are at enmity with each other, and petty chieftains coming down in quest of adventure from the wild districts of the north, with their bold retainers, eager for a fray on any excuse, make life exceedingly interesting, for there is almost no police or military surveillance.



CHAR MINAR, IN THE CENTER OF THE CITY—HYDERABAD

From a Photograph by the Author

As these maharajahs, rajahs, and chieftains vie with each other in the splendor of their apparel and the number and magnificence of their weapons, the streets, lined with rose-colored buildings carved in arabesque designs and thronged with scarlet-caparisoned elephants, with camels, and with chariots drawn by white bullocks, and tongas with two horses, are more brilliant and spectacular than can be described.

In the town itself there is no place where the European traveler may stop, but six miles away a Eurasian has a comfortable bungalow for the entertainment of the infrequent visitor.

In the morning one is called early by his khitmighar, who has slept at his door-sill. A native servant is indispensable; he attends to all his master's personal wants, acting as a valet, table servant, and courier. He buys and cooks his own food, and at night, when all are asleep, he unfolds his turban, wraps himself in its generous folds, stretches himself outside the doorway, and finds surcease from the day's labors in the temporary Nirvana of night.

At seven o'clock he arouses his master, and bears in a tray with the tea, toast, and plantain of chotta hazree or "little breakfast." Not waiting for the more substantial meal at nine, we enter the tonga or two-wheeled, basket-roofed cart and are driven over the level, dusty road to the city. It is a continuous settlement, with huts, bungalows, rows of bazaars, and an occasional mosque of Mohammedan architecture, with beautiful white arabesque doorways and graceful minarets spearing up into the blue. A shallow lake or so are passed, with gray storks flapping lazily away as we approach, and a muddy river with innumerable dhobies and dhoba beating wet linen upon the rocks. These washermen and women dip the clothes in the none-too-crystalline water, swing them in the air in a circle above their heads, and slap them against the stones. They are dried by being spread upon the dusty banks. These people form a caste by themselves, and clothing is always washed in this manner throughout the land.

This river is the Moosa, and a picturesque scene it is. The water lies in pools and little branching streams among the sand strips, and in the brown waters are huge elephants wallowing and lying upon their sides, being scrubbed by their keepers, and everywhere the crouching dhobies with the white linen twinkling over their heads.

A great creamy wall appears suddenly before us, and a massive gate with heavy oaken portals, studded with spikes to keep hostile elephants of war from butting their heads against them. The ponies' hoofs ring out sharply upon a stone pavement, and then—Hyderabad, hot, dusty, crowded, kaleidoscopic, and bewildering. A city without one single European element, of ever-changing scenes, and a populace representing all the races of India, fierce, wild, armed, and kept in check only by the lawless army of the Nizam, who, next to the Sultan of Turkey, is the most powerful Mohammedan ruler in the world.

The streets are straight and wide, dusty and crowded; there is none of the tangle and darkness of an Oriental city with its high buildings and narrow, sinuous alleys; this is not Oriental, it is—Hyderabad.

The main street extends before us straight away from the gate, meeting midway a similar street at right angles to it, which cuts the city, likewise, from wall to wall. At the junction of the two the great Char Minar, a lofty white tower used for storing grain in case of a famine, pins the city to earth in its very center. Upon each side of us as we approach it are the low, two-storied, flat-roofed buildings, each with its open bazaar in front, shaded by gay canopies and awnings. In the bazaars are cotton cloths woven upon hand-looms, robes of tinsel, of dyed silk, and of cloth-of-gold. Here and there we see a bit of kinkob of beautiful texture, with strands of pure gold shot through it. In some bazaars are turbans, jeweled slippers, soft camel's-hairs and cheddars from Kashmir, and brocades gorgeous beyond description. Many of the arched doorways are decorated with scimetars, shields of translucent elephant's hide, daggers wrought with gold and having blades that by means of a spring in the handle separate into three parts, opening within the wound. Others have pious inscriptions from the Koran upon the handle, and a scalloped edge to the blade, so that the wound, when inflicted, will not heal. In many are stores of rice and grain, spices, sugar-cane, and flat loaves of bread. In others are golden nose-rings, circlets for the arm and the ankle, and ornaments for the nose, the ears, the fingers, and the toes.

A SOLDIER OF THE NIZAM
From a Photograph by the Author

The poorer classes wear scanty costumes. The women have strips of bright-colored cotton cloths about their waists, draped into a short skirt, and they wear short jackets. The men wear white turbans and loin-cloths. The Afghans, Khurds, Punjabi, and Persians have their distinguishing costumes, and every man carries a sashful of swords and pistols. Many carry swords, long and curved, in their hands; some have ancient, long-barreled, smooth-bore guns over their shoulders. Every one wears either the turban or the fez, and these two significant head-gears represent the key-note of much of the violence and lawlessness.

The vehicles are most peculiar. The gharrie is a two-wheeled, box-like affair drawn by a pony or hump-necked bullock. Under the canopy, upon the floor, squats the occupant. Country carts with solid wooden wheels and palm-thatched canopy are drawn by bullocks or hideous black buffaloes. Occasionally we meet a most remarkable chariot having a flat body over four wheels and a high canvas tent held up by four poles, the whole affair dusty, creaking, ramshackly, and unpainted. Elephants are frequent, with red blankets and two or three riders. In front of the howdah, between the ears, crouches the mahout, who guides the beast with his heels and goads him with an instrument very like a short boat-hook. Palanquins are carried by four dhoolies, and, if women are within them, are covered with gay drapery. The dhoolies grunt a weird song as they shuffle along, and sometimes servants armed with spears run at each side and in front to clear a way through the throng. Nawabs and ministers of state ride in landaus of European make and in coaches, but they are decked out gorgeously, lined with white satin within and covered on the outside with red quilted cloths. Often a troop of eight or ten lance-carrying sepoys ride in front on horseback, and as many more bring up the rear. Once in a while a camel passes laden with farm produce.

Now and then we make a hasty visit to a bazaar to buy a particularly fascinating old shield or a bit of old brocade, but we attract too much attention to remain long from the tonga, and it is safer to keep moving. There are no interiors of great interest to the traveler, the mosques are small, and the palace of the Nizam, with its gardens and zenanas of three hundred women and seven thousand servants, is not open to inspection.

So at noon we take our tiffin in a shady grove outside the walls, and as the cool of the evening begins to be felt, we retrace our way to the little bungalow that gives us safe shelter for the night.

One morning our servant comes in and with a profound salaam inquires: "Does the sahib wish his chotta hazree?"

No, the sahib desires above all things just then to continue in repose. The bed is not too hard, the punkah wallah is slumberously pulling the swinging fan above the bed, suspended from the ceiling, the rats have ceased their nocturnal peregrinations, and even the cawing of the crows sounds far away.

"Does the sahib desire that the dhobie shall take his linen to the river?"

There is method in this insistent and slumber-dispelling

A GROUP OF NATIVES
From a Photograph by the Author

questioning. The dhobie himself appears at the doorway and humbly inquires:

"Molly golly poggle woggle doodle, Sahib?"—at least that is about the way it sounds. The "sweep" is pouring fresh cold water into the wooden tub in the bath cell adjoining, and there is nothing for it but to rise and allow the punkah wallah to enjoy the profits of his all-night's work—eight annas, or sixteen cents in our money.

There is to be a great event in the city to-day, and it behooves us to start betimes. In two hours we are again in Hyderabad. The streets have now more than ever, if that is possible, a gala appearance. People in all stations of life are coming in from the surrounding country. The bazaars and squares are thronged, and towards noon a brightly garbed stream of humanity is moving in the direction of a large park outside the wall. There is to be a great attraction here to-day, and expectation runs high.

Just as there are many Oriental customs and productions that seem fantastic and strange to us, so many things which seem commonplace to Western races are wonderful to those who live in the other hemisphere. We prize Oriental rugs and hangings and weapons as being rare and beautiful, and they, on the other hand, hold articles that are cheap enough to us in high estimation. Nothing delights an Indian nawab or nobleman so much as to have at least one or two rooms in his palace furnished in gaudy Brussels carpets, glaring chromos, mechanical clocks, and gilt furniture. A billiard-table there is like an Arabian horse here. And so to-day the English balloonist, who is actually to soar above the tree-tops in his wonderful vehicle, is looked upon as little less than a god.

Some of the nobles are promenading on foot. Behind each walk his retainers, one bearing upon a velvet cushion his sword, another his golden drinking-vessel, and so on. When the nawabs meet, each salaams effusively, and the servants of one salaam to the servants of the other. They wear brocade coats of purple, red, blue, pink, yellow, and orange, gold belts, sashes, and scimetars with jeweled hilts and enameled scabbards. Their trousers are of white muslin, their turbans of cloth-of-gold, soft silk, or embroidery. The Parseés and Persians dress in darker colors, and their head-dresses are small and dark. Sepoys with long lances and red turbans strut about; military adventurers, bearded and with long, flowing hair; groups of servants in strange liveries, palanquins whose curtains shelter the ladies—all these help make up the throng. In one place stands a hunter with a hooded falcon upon his arm, with leash and red hood over its eyes.

The throng suddenly separates, and the chariot of the Nizam himself appears—Oozoorbasha he is called by his subjects. The sepoy guard clears the way, and he is seen sitting in great dignity. He has long black hair, an irregular beard, piercing eyes, and a cold, haughty countenance. He is twenty-five years old, and is considered rather a weak man. His revenues amount to ten millions a year.

And now the open field is surrounded with as gorgeous a throng as the sun ever shone upon, the balloon is inflated after many delays, the balloonist enters it, and the cords are cut. The balloon rises perhaps two hundred feet, flaps over the trees for a few minutes, and sinks to the ground. Great is the enthusiasm! The crowd is in ecstasies. Never was there so wonderful a phenomenon! And as the low sun enlarges into an immense flat red disk as it sinks into the haze, the city of Hyderabad is again thronged with its brilliant populace returning from the park.

Through the twilight we drive homeward. Here and there are lean, dark figures, naked and heavy-moving, still plodding behind the wooden plow, toiling in their sterile farms. The cool shelter of the banyan woods, or the pleasures within those shining walls behind us, are not for them. In the arid river basins the dhobies still are beating the linen wearily, and as we pass through the ragged, forlorn villages a few lepers solicit alms in dumb misery. The huts are of mud, with thatched roofs; and squalor, labor, ignorance, and disease are their inmates. Hyderabad, the jewel of India, with its ruby walls, still glows in the red light of sunset, but its setting is dark and the shadows are black—black and unfathomable.

KATE CARNEGIE[1]

By Ian Maclaren

Author of "Beside the Bonnie Brier-Bush," "The Days of Auld Lang Syne," etc., etc.

CHAPTER XIX.—THE FEAR OF GOD

It was the way of the Free Kirk that the assisting minister at the Sacrament should sit behind the Communion Table during the sermon, and the congregation, without giving the faintest sign of observation, could estimate its effect on his face. When Doctor Dowbiggin composed himself to listen as became a Church leader of substantial build—his hands folded before him and his eyes fixed on the far window—and was so arrested by the opening passage of Cunningham's sermon on Justification by Faith that he visibly started, and afterwards sat sideways with his ears cocked, Drumtochty, while doubtful whether any Muirtown man could appreciate the subtlety of their minister, had a higher idea of the Doctor; and when the Free Kirk minister of Kildrummie—a stout man and given to agricultural pursuits—went fast asleep under a masterly discussion of the priesthood of Melchisedek, Drumtochty's opinion of the intellectual condition of Kildrummie was confirmed beyond argument.

During his ministry of more than twenty years the Rabbi had never preached at Drumtochty—being fearful that he might injure the minister who invited him, or might be so restricted in time as to lead astray by ill-balanced statements—and as the keenest curiosity would never have induced any man to go from the Glen to worship in another parish, the Free Kirk minister of Kilbogie was still unjudged in Drumtochty. They were not sorry to have the opportunity at last, for they had suffered not a little at the hands of Kilbogie in past years, and the coming event disturbed the flow of business at Muirtown market.

"Ye're tae hae the Doctor at laist," Mains said to Netherton—letting the luck-penny on a transaction in seed-corn stand over—"an' a'm jidgin' the time's no been lost. He's plainer an' easier tae follow then he wes at the affgo. Ma word"—contemplating the exercise before the Glen—"but ye 'ill aye get eneuch here and there tae cairry hame." Which shows what a man the Rabbi was, that on the strength of his possession a parish like Kilbogie could speak after this fashion to Drumtochty.

"He 'ill hae a fair trial, Mains"—Netherton's tone was distinctly severe—"an' mony a trial he's hed in his day, they say: wes't three an' twenty kirks he preached in, afore ye took him? But mind ye, length's nae standard in Drumtochty; na, na, it's no hoo muckle wind a man hes, but what like is the stuff that comes. It's bushels doon bye, but it's wecht up bye."

Any prejudice against the Rabbi, created by the boasting of a foolish parish not worthy of him, was reduced by his venerable appearance before the pulpit, and quite dispelled by his unfeigned delight in Carmichael's conduct of the "preliminaries." Twice he nodded approval to the reading of the hundredth Psalm, and although he stood with covered face during the prayer, he emerged full of sympathy. As his boy read the 53d of Isaiah the old man was moved well-nigh to tears, and on the giving out of the text from the parable of the Prodigal Son, the Rabbi closed his eyes with great expectation as one about to be fed with the finest of the wheat.

---

[1] Copyright, 1896, by John Watson.

Carmichael has kept the sermon unto this day, and as often as he finds himself growing hard or supercilious, reads it from beginning to end. It is his hair shirt, to be worn from time to time next his soul for the wrongness in it and the mischief it did. He cannot understand how he could have said such things on a Sacrament morning and in the presence of the Rabbi, but indeed they were inevitable. When two tides meet, there is ever a cruel commotion, and ships are apt to be dashed on the rocks, and Carmichael's mind was in a "jabble" that day. The new culture, with its wider views of God and man, was fighting with the robust Calvinism in which every Scot is saturated, and the result was neither peace nor charity. Personally the lad was kindly and good-natured, intellectually he had become arrogant, intolerant, acrid, flinging out at old-fashioned views, giving quite unnecessary challenges, arguing with imaginary antagonists. It has ever seemed to me, although I suppose that history is against me, that if it be laid on any one to advocate a new view that will startle people, he ought of all men to be conciliatory and persuasive; but Carmichael was, at least in this time of fermentation, very exasperating and pugnacious, and so he drove the Rabbi to the only hard action of his life, wherein the old man suffered most, and which may be said to have led to his death.

Carmichael, like the Rabbi, had intended to preach that morning on the love of God, and thought he was doing so with some power. What he did was to take the Fatherhood of God and use it as a stick to beat Pharisees with, and under Pharisees he let it be seen that he included every person who still believed in the inflexible action of the moral laws and the austere majesty of God. Many good things he no doubt said, but each had an edge, and it cut deeply into the people of the old school. Had he seen the Rabbi, it would not have been possible for him to continue, but he was conscious only of Lachlan Campbell, with whom he had then a feud, and who, he imagined, had come to criticise him. So he went on his rasping way that Sacrament morning, as when one harrows the spring earth with iron teeth, exciting himself with every sentence to fresh crudities of thought and extravagances of opposition. But it flashed on him that he had spoken foolishly only when he came down from the pulpit, and found the Rabbi a shrunken figure in his chair before the Holy Table.

Discerning people, like Elspeth Macfadyen, saw the whole tragedy from beginning to end, and felt the pity of it keenly. For a while the Rabbi waited with fond confidence—for was not he to hear the best-loved of his boys?—and he caught eagerly at a gracious expression, as if it had fallen from one of the Fathers. Anything in the line of faith would have pleased the Rabbi that day, who was as a little child and full of charity, in spite of his fierce doctrines. By and by the light died away from his eyes as when a cloud comes over the face of the sun and the Glen grows cold and dreary. He opened his eyes and was amazed—looking at the people and questioning them what had happened to their minister. Suddenly he flushed as a person struck by a friend, and then, as one blow followed another, he covered his face with both hands, sinking lower and lower in his chair, till even that decorous people were almost shaken in their attention.

When Carmichael gave him the cup in the Sacrament the Rabbi's hand shook, and he spilled some drops of the wine upon his beard, which all that day showed like blood on the silvery whiteness. Afterwards he spake in his turn to the communicants, and distinguished the true people of God from the multitude—to whom he held out no hope—by so many and stringent marks that Donald Menzies refused the Sacrament with a lamentable groan. And when the Sacrament was over and the time came for Carmichael to shake hands with the assisting minister in the vestry, the Rabbi had vanished, and he had no speech with him till they went through the garden together—very bleak it seemed in the winter dusk—unto the sermon that closed the services of the day.

"God's hand is heavy in anger on us both this day, John," and Carmichael was arrested by the awe and sorrow in the Rabbi's voice, "else . . . you had not spoken as you did this forenoon, nor would necessity be laid on me to speak . . . as I must this night.

"His ways are all goodness and truth, but they are oftentimes encompassed with darkness, and the burden He has laid on me is . . . almost more than I can bear; it will be heavy for you also.

"You will drink the wine of astonishment this night, and it will be strange if you do not . . . turn from the hand that pours it out, but you will not refuse the truth or . . . hate the preacher," and at the vestry door the Rabbi looked wistfully at Carmichael.

During the interval the lad had been ill at ease, suspecting from the Rabbi's manner at the Table, and the solemnity of his address, that he disapproved of the action sermon, but he did not for a moment imagine that the situation was serious. It is one of the disabilities of good-natured and emotional people, without much deepness of earth, to belittle the convictions and resolutions of strong natures, and to suppose that they can be talked away by a few pleasant, coaxing words.

The Rabbi had often yielded to Carmichael and his other boys in the ordinary affairs of life—in meat and drink and clothing, even unto the continuance of his snuffing. He had been most manageable and pliable—as a child in their hands—and so Carmichael was quite confident that he could make matters right with the old man about a question of doctrine as easily as about the duty of a midday meal. Certain bright and superficial people will learn only by some solitary experience that faith is reserved in friendship, and that the most heroic souls are those which count all things loss—even the smile of those they love—for the eternal. For a moment Carmichael was shaken as if a new Rabbi were before him; then he remembered the study of Kilbogie and all things that had happened therein, and his spirits rose.

"How dare you suggest such wickedness, Rabbi, that any of us should ever criticise or complain of anything you say? Whatever you give us will be right, and do us good, and in the evening you will tell me all I said wrong."

Saunderson looked at Carmichael for ten seconds as one who has not been understood, and sighed. Then he went down the kirk after the beadle, and the people marked how he walked like a man who was afraid he might fall, and, turning a corner, he supported himself on the end of a pew. As he crept up the pulpit stairs Elspeth gave James a look, and, although well accustomed to the slowness of his understanding, was amazed that he did not catch the point. Even a man might have seen that this was not the same minister that came in to the Sacrament with hope in his very step.

"A'm no here tae say 'that a kent what wes comin'" —Elspeth, like all experts, was strictly truthful—"for the like o' that wes never heard in Drumtochty, and, noo that Doctor Saunderson is awa, will never be heard again in Scotland. A jaloused that vials wud be opened, an' a wesna wrang, but ma certes"—and that remarkable woman left you to understand that no words in human speech could even hint at the contents of the vials.

When the Rabbi gave out his text, "Vessels of wrath," in a low, awestruck voice, Carmichael began to be afraid, but after a little he chid himself for foolishness. During half an hour the Rabbi traced the doctrine of the Divine Sovereignty through Holy Scripture with a characteristic wealth of allusion to Fathers ancient and reforming, and once or twice he paused as if he would have taken up certain matters at greater length, but restrained himself, simply asserting the Pauline character of St. Augustine's thinking, and exposing the looseness of Clement of Alexandria with a wave of the hand, as one hurrying on to his destination.

"Dear old Rabbi"—Carmichael congratulated himself in his pew—"what need he have made so many apologies for his subject? He is going to enjoy himself, and he is sure to say something beautiful before he is done." But he was distinctly conscious all the same of a wish that the Rabbi were done and all . . . well, uncertainty over. For there was a note of anxiety, almost of horror, in the Rabbi's voice, and he had not let the Fathers go so lightly unless under severe constraint. What was it? Surely he would not attack their minister in face of his people. . . . The Rabbi do that, who was in all his ways a gentleman? Yet . . . and then the Rabbi abruptly quitted historical exposition and announced that he would speak on four heads. Twice Carmichael, from his corner behind the curtains, saw the old man open his mouth as if to speak, and when at last he began he was quivering visibly, and he had grasped the outer corners of the desk with such intensity that the tassels which hung therefrom—one of the minor glories of the Free Kirk—were held in the palm of his hand, the long red tags escaping from between his white wasted fingers. A pulpit lamp came between Carmichael and the Rabbi's face, but he could see the straining hand, which did not relax till it was lifted in the last awful appeal, and the white and red had a gruesome fascination. It seemed as if one had clutched a rich cluster of full, rich, tender grapes and was pressing them in an agony till their life ran out in streams of blood and dripped upon the heads of the choir sitting beneath in their fresh, hopeful youth. And it also came to Carmichael with pathetic conviction even then that every one was about to suffer, but the Rabbi more than them all together. While the preacher was strengthening his heart for the work before him, Carmichael's eye was attracted by the landscape that he could see through the opposite window. The ground sloped upward from the kirk to a pine wood that fringed the great muir, and it was covered with snow on which the moon was beginning to shed her faint, weird light. Within, the light from the upright lamps was falling on the ruddy, contented faces of men and women and little children, but without it was one cold, merciless whiteness like unto the justice of God, with black shadows of judgment.

"This is the message which I have to deliver unto you in the name of the Lord, and even as Jonah was sent to Nineveh after a strange discipline with a word of mercy, so am I constrained against my will to carry a word of searching and trembling.

"First"—and between the heads the Rabbi paused as one whose breath had failed him—"every man belongs absolutely to God by his creation.

"Second. The purpose of God about each man precedes his creation.

"Third. Some are destined to Salvation, and some to Damnation.

"Fourth"—here the hard breathing became a sob—"each man's lot is unto the glory of God."

It was not only skilled theologians like Lachlan Campbell and Burnbrae, but even mere amateurs, who understood that they were that night to be conducted to the farthest limit of Calvinism, and that, whoever fell behind through the hardness of the way, their guide would not flinch.

As the Rabbi gave the people a brief space wherein to grasp his heads in their significance, Carmichael remembered a vivid incident in the Presbytery of Muirtown, when an English evangelist had addressed that reverend and austere court with exhilarating confidence—explaining the extreme simplicity of the Christian faith, and showing how a minister ought to preach. Various good men were delighted, and asked many questions of the evangelist—who had kept a baby-linen shop for twenty years, and was unspoiled by the slightest trace of theology—but the Rabbi arose and demolished his "teaching," convicting him of heresy at every turn, till there was not left one stone upon another.

"But surely fear belongs to the Old Testament dispensation," said the unabashed little man to the Rabbi afterwards. "'Rejoice,' you know, my friend, 'and again I say rejoice.'"

"If it be the will of God that such a man as I should ever stand on the sea of glass mingled with fire, then this tongue will be lifted with the best, but so long as my feet are still in the fearful pit it becometh me to bow my head."

"Then you don't believe in assurance?" but already the evangelist was quailing before the Rabbi.

"Verily, there is no man that hath not heard of that precious gift, and none who does not covet it greatly, but there be two degrees of assurance"—here the Rabbi looked sternly at the happy, rotund little figure—"and it is with the first you must begin, and what you need to get is assurance of your damnation."

One of the boys read an account of this incident—thinly veiled—in a reported address of the evangelist, in which the Rabbi—being, as it was inferred, beaten in Scriptural argument—was very penitent and begged his teacher's pardon with streaming tears. What really happened was different, and so absolutely conclusive that Doctor Dowbiggin gave it as his opinion "that a valuable lesson had been read to unauthorized teachers of religion."

Carmichael recognized the same note in the sermon, and saw another man than he knew, as the Rabbi, in a low voice, without heat or declamation, with frequent pauses and labored breathing, as of one toiling up a hill, argued the absolute supremacy of God and the utter helplessness of man. One hand ever pressed the grapes, but with the other the old man wiped the perspiration that rolled in beads down his face. A painful stillness fell on the people as they felt themselves caught in the meshes of this inexorable net and dragged ever nearer to the abyss. Carmichael, who had been leaning forward in his place, tore himself away from the preacher with an effort, and moved where he could see the congregation. Campbell was drinking in every word, as one for the first time in his life perfectly satisfied. Menzies was huddled into a heap in the top of his pew, as one justly blasted by the anger of the Eternal. Men were white beneath the tan, and it was evident that some of the women would soon fall a-weeping. Children had crept close to their mothers under a vague sense of danger, and a girl in the choir watched the preacher with dilated eyeballs, like an animal fascinated by terror.

"It is as a sword piercing the heart to receive this truth, but it is a truth and must be believed. There are hundreds of thousands in the past who were born and lived and died and were damned for the glory of God. There are hundreds of thousands in this day who have been born and are living and shall die and be damned for the glory of God. There are hundreds of thousands in the future who shall be born and shall live and shall die and shall be damned for the glory of God. All according to the will of God, and none dare say nay nor change the purpose of the Eternal." For some time the oil in the lamps had been failing—since the Rabbi had been speaking for nigh two hours—and as he came to an end of this passage the light began to flicker and die. First a lamp at the end of Burnbrae's pew went out, and then another in the front. The preacher made as though he would have spoken, but was silent, and the congregation watched four lamps sink into darkness at intervals of half a minute. There remained only the two pulpit lamps, and in their light the people saw the Rabbi lift his right hand for the first time.

"Shall . . . not . . . the . . . Judge . . . of all the earth . . . do . . . right?" The two lamps went out together, and a great sigh rose from the people. At the back of the kirk a child wailed, and somewhere in the front a woman's voice—it was never proved to be Elspeth Macfadyen—said audibly, "God have mercy upon us!" The Rabbi had sunk back into the seat and buried his face in his hands, and through the window over his head the moonlight was pouring into the church like unto the far-off radiance from the White Throne.

When Carmichael led the Rabbi into the manse he could feel the old man trembling from head to foot, and he would touch neither meat nor drink, nor would he speak for a space.

"Are you there, John?"—and he put out his hand to Carmichael, who had placed him in the big study chair, and was sitting beside him in silence.

"I dare not withdraw nor change any word that I spake in the name of the Lord this day, but . . . it is my infirmity. . . . I wish I had never been born."

"It was awful," said Carmichael, and the Rabbi's head again fell on his breast.

"John"—and Saunderson looked up—"I would give ten thousand worlds to stand in the shoes of that good man who conveyed me from Kilbogie yesterday, and with whom I had very pleasant fellowship concerning the patience of the saints.

"It becometh not any human being to judge his neighbor, but it seemed to me from many signs that he was within the election of God, and even as we spoke of Polycarp and the martyrs who have overcome by the blood of the Lamb, it came unto me with much power, 'Lo, here is one beside you whose name is written in the Lamb's Book of Life, and who shall enter through the gates into the city;' and grace was given me to rejoice in his joy, but I . . . "—and Carmichael could have wept for the despair in the Rabbi's voice.

"Dear Rabbi!"—for once the confidence of youth was smitten at the sight of a spiritual conflict beyond its depth —"you are surely . . . depreciating yourself. . . . Burnbrae is a good man, but compared with you . . . is not this like to the depression of Elijah?" Carmichael knew, however, he was not fit for such work, and had better have held his peace.

"It may be that I understand the letter of Holy Scripture better than some of God's children, although I be but a babe even in this poor knowledge, but such gifts are only as the small dust of the balance. He will have mercy on whom He will have mercy.

"John," said the Rabbi suddenly, and with strong feeling, "was it your thought this night, as I declared the sovereignty of God, that I judged myself of the elect, and was speaking as one himself hidden forever in the secret place of God?"

"I . . . did not know," stammered Carmichael, whose utter horror at the unrelenting sermon had been tempered only by his love for the preacher.

"You did me wrong, John, for then had I not dared to speak at all after that fashion; it is not for a vessel of mercy filled unto overflowing with the love of God to exalt himself above the vessels . . . for whom there is no mercy. But he may plead with them who are in like case with himself to . . . acknowledge the Divine Justice."

Then the pathos of the situation overcame Carmichael, and he went over to the bookcase and leaned his head against certain volumes, because they were weighty and would not yield. Next day he noticed that one of them was a Latin Calvin that had traveled over Europe in learned company, and the other a battered copy of Jonathan Edwards that had come from the house of an Ayrshire farmer.

"Forgive me that I have troubled you with the concerns of my soul, John"—the Rabbi could stand only with an effort—"they ought to be between a man and his God. There is another work laid to my hand for which there is no power in me now. During the night I shall ask whether the cup may not pass from me, but if not, the will of God be done."

Carmichael slept but little, and every time he woke the thought was heavy upon him that on the other side of a narrow wall the holiest man he knew was wrestling in darkness of soul, and that he had added to the bitterness of the agony.

CHAPTER XX.—THE WOUNDS OF A FRIEND

Winter has certain mornings which redeem weeks of misconduct, when the hoar-frost during the night has resilvered every branch and braced the snow upon the ground, and the sun rises in ruddy strength and drives out of sight every cloud and mist, and moves all day through an expanse of unbroken blue, and is reflected from the dazzling whiteness of the earth as from a mirror. Such a sight calls a man from sleep with authority, and makes his blood tingle, and puts new heart in him, and banishes the troubles of the night. Other mornings winter joins in the conspiracy of principalities and powers to daunt and crush the human soul. No sun is to be seen, and the gray atmosphere casts down the heart, the wind moans and whistles in fitful gusts, the black clouds hang low in threatening masses, now and again a flake of snow drifts in the wind. A storm is near at hand—not the thunder-shower of summer, with warm rain and the kindly sun in ambush, but dark and blinding snow, through which even a gamekeeper cannot see six yards, and in which weary travelers lie down to rest and die.

The melancholy of this kind of day had fallen on Saunderson, whose face was ashen, and who held Carmichael's hand with such anxious affection that it was impossible to inquire how he had slept, and would have been a banality to remark upon the weather. After the Rabbi had been compelled to swallow a cup of milk by way of breakfast, it was evident that he was ready for speech.

"What is it, Rabbi?" as soon as they were again settled in the study. "If you did not . . . like my sermon, tell me at once. You know that I am one of your boys, and you ought to . . . help me." Perhaps it was inseparable from his youth, with its buoyancy and self-satisfaction, and his training in a college whose members knew only by rumor of the existence of other places of theological learning, that Carmichael had a distinct sense of humility and charity. Had it been a matter of scholastic lore, of course neither he nor more than six men in Scotland could have met the Rabbi in the gate. With regard to modern thought, Carmichael knew that the good Rabbi had not read "Ecce Homo," and was hardly—well, . . . up to date. He would not for the world hint such a thing to the dear old man, or even argue with him; but it was flattering to remember that the attack could be merely one of blunderbusses, in which the modern thinker would at last intervene and save the ancient scholar from humiliation.

"Well, Rabbi?" and Carmichael tried to make it easy.

"Before I say what is on my heart, John, you will grant an old man who loves you one favor. So far as in you lies you will bear with me if that which I say, and still more that which my conscience will compel me to do, is hard to flesh and blood."

"Didn't we settle that last night in the vestry?" and Carmichael was impatient; "is it that you do not agree with the doctrine of the Divine Fatherhood? We younger men are resolved to base Christian doctrine on the actual Scriptures, and to ignore mere tradition."

"An excellent rule, my dear friend," cried the Rabbi, wonderfully quickened by the challenge, "and with your permission and for our mutual edification we shall briefly review all passages bearing on the subject in hand—using the original, as will doubtless be your wish, and you correcting my poor recollection."

About an hour afterwards, and when the Rabbi was only entering into the heart of the matter, Carmichael made the bitter discovery—without the Rabbi having even hinted at such a thing—that his pet sermon was a mass of boyish crudities, and this reverse of circumstances was some excuse for his pettishness.

"It does not seem to me that it is worth our time to haggle about the usage of Greek words or to count texts: I ground my position on the general meaning of the Gospels and the sense of things," and Carmichael stood on the hearth-rug in a very superior attitude.

"Let that pass, then, John, and forgive me if I appeared to battle about words, as certain scholars of the olden time were fain to do; for in truth it is rather about the hard duty before me than any imperfection in your teaching I would speak," and the Rabbi glanced nervously at the young minister.

"We are both Presbyters of Christ's Church, ordained after the order of primitive times, and there is laid on us certain heavy charges and responsibilities from which we may not shrink, as we shall answer to the Lord at the great day."

Carmichael's humiliation was lost in perplexity, and he sat down, wondering what the Rabbi intended.

"If any Presbyter should see his brother fall into one of those faults of private life that do beset us all in our present weakness, then he doth well and kindly to point it out unto his brother; and if his brother should depart from the faith as they talk together by the way, then it is a Presbyter's part to convince him of his error and restore him."

The Rabbi cast an imploring glance, but Carmichael had still no understanding.

"But if one Presbyter should teach heresy to his flock in the hearing of another . . . even though it break the other's heart, is not the path of duty fenced up on either side, verily a strait, narrow way, and hard for the feet to tread?"

"You have spoken to me, Rabbi, and . . . cleared yourself"—Carmichael was still somewhat sore—"and I'll promise not to offend you again in an action sermon."

"Albeit you intend it not so, yet are you making it harder for me to speak. . . . See you not . . . that I . . . that necessity is laid on me to declare this matter to my brother Presbyters in court assembled . . . but not in hearing of the people?" Then there was a stillness in the room, and the Rabbi, although he had closed his eyes, was conscious of the amazement on the young man's face.

"Do you mean to say," speaking very slowly, as one taken utterly aback, "that our Rabbi would come to my . . . to the Sacrament and hear me preach, and . . . report me for heresy to the Presbytery? Rabbi, I know we don't agree about some things, and perhaps I was a little . . . annoyed a few minutes ago because you . . . know far more than I do, but that is nothing. For you to prosecute one of your boys and be the witness yourself, . . . Rabbi, you can't mean it; . . . say it's a mistake."

The old man only gave a deep sigh.

"If it were Dowbiggin or . . . any man except you, I wouldn't care one straw, rather enjoy the debate, but you whom we have loved and looked up to and boasted about, why, it's like . . . a father turning against his sons."

The Rabbi made no sign.

"You live too much alone, Rabbi," and Carmichael began again as the sense of the tragedy grew on him, "and nurse your conscience till it gets over-tender; no other man would dream of . . . prosecuting a . . . fellow-minister in such circumstances. You have spoken to me like a father, surely that is enough," and in his honest heat the young fellow knelt down by the Rabbi's chair and took his hand.

A tear rolled down the Rabbi's cheek, and he looked fondly at the lad.

"Your words pierce me as sharp swords, John; spare me, for I can do none otherwise; all night I wrestled for release, but in vain."

Carmichael had a sudden revulsion of feeling, such as befalls emotional and ill-disciplined natures when they are disappointed and mortified.

"Very good, Doctor Saunderson"—Carmichael rose awkwardly and stood on the hearth-rug again, an elbow on the mantelpiece—"you must do as you please and think right. I am sorry that I . . . pressed you so far, but it was on grounds of our . . . friendship.

"Perhaps you will tell me as soon as you can what you propose to do, and when you will bring . . . this matter before the Presbytery. My sermon was fully written, and . . . is at your disposal."

While this cold rain beat on the Rabbi's head he moved not, but at its close he looked at Carmichael with the appeal of a dumb animal in his eyes.

"The first meeting of Presbytery is on Monday, but you would no doubt consider that too soon; is there anything about dates in the order of procedure for heresy?" and Carmichael made as though he would go over to the shelves for a law book.

"John," cried the Rabbi—his voice full of tears—rising and following the foolish lad, "is this all you have in your heart to say unto me? Surely, as I stand before you, it is not my desire to do this thing, for I would rather cut off my right hand.

"God hath not been pleased to give me many friends, and He only knows how you and the others have comforted my heart. I lie not, John, but speak the truth, that there is nothing, unto life itself, I would not give for your good, who have been as the apple of my eye unto me."

Carmichael hardened himself, torn between a savage sense of satisfaction that the Rabbi was suffering for his foolishness and an inclination of his better self to respond to the old man's love.

"If there be a breach between us, it will not be for you as it must be for me. You have many friends, and may God add unto them good men and faithful; but I shall lose my one earthly joy and consolation when your feet are no longer heard on my threshold and your face no longer brings light to my room. And, John, even this thing which I am constrained to do is yet of love, as . . . you shall confess one day."

Carmichael's pride alone resisted, and it was melting fast. Had he even looked at the dear face, he must have given way, but he kept his shoulder to the Rabbi, and at that moment the sound of wheels passing the corner of the manse gave him an ungracious way of escape.

"That is Burnbrae's dog-cart . . . Doctor Saunderson, and I think he will not wish to keep his horse standing in the snow, so unless you will stay all night, as it's going to drift . . . Then perhaps it would be better . . . Can I assist you in packing?" How formal it all sounded, and he allowed the Rabbi to go upstairs alone, with the result that various things of the old man's are in Carmichael's house unto this day.

Another chance was given the lad when the Rabbi would have bidden him good-by at the door, beseeching that he should not come out into the drift, and still another when Burnbrae, being concerned about his passenger's appearance, who seemed ill fitted to face a storm, wrapped him in a plaid; and he had one more when the old man leant out of the dog-cart and took Carmichael's hand in both of his, but only said, "God bless you for all you've been to me, and forgive me for all wherein I have failed you." And they did not meet again till that never-to-be-forgotten sederunt of the Free Kirk Presbytery of Muirtown, when the minister of Kilbogie accused the minister of Drumtochty of teaching the Linlathen heresy of the Fatherhood of God in a sermon before the Sacrament.

Among all the institutions of the North a Presbytery is the most characteristic, and affords a standing illustration of the contradictions of a superbly logical people. It is so anti-clerical a court that for every clergyman there must also be a layman—country ministers promising to bring in their elder for great occasions, and instructing him audibly how to vote—and so fiercely clerical that if the most pious and intelligent elder dared to administer a sacrament he would be at once tried and censured for sacrilege. So careful is a Presbytery to prevent the beginnings of Papacy that it insists upon each of its members occupying the chair in turn, and dismisses him again into private life as soon as he has mastered his duties; but so imbued is it with the idea of authority that whatever decision may be given by some lad of twenty-five in the chair—duly instructed, however, by the clerk below—will be rigidly obeyed. When a Presbytery has nothing else to do, it dearly loves to pass a general condemnation on sacerdotalism, in which the tyranny of prelates and the foolishness of vestments will be fully exposed; but a Presbytery wields a power at which a bishop's hair would stand on end, and Doctor Dowbiggin once made Carmichael leave the Communion Table and go into the vestry to put on his bands.

When a Presbytery is in its lighter moods, it gives itself to points of order with a skill and relish beyond the Southern imagination. It did not matter how harmless, even infantile, might be the proposal placed before the court by such a man as MacWheep of Pitscourie, he would hardly have got past an apology for his presumption in venturing to speak at all, before a member of Presbytery—who had reduced his congregation to an irreducible minimum by the woodenness of his preaching—would inquire whether the speech of "our esteemed brother was not ultra vires," or something else as awful. MacWheep would at once sit down with the air of one taken red-handed in crime, and the court would debate the point till every authority had taken his fill, when the clerk would submit to the moderator, with a fine blend of deference and infallibility, that Mr. MacWheep was perfectly within his rights; and then, as that estimable person had lost any thread he ever possessed, the Presbytery would pass to the next business—with the high spirit of men returning from a holiday. Carmichael used, indeed, to relate how in a great stress of business some one moved that the Presbytery should adjourn for dinner, and the court argued for seventy minutes, with many precedents, whether such a motion—touching as it did the standing orders—could even be discussed, and, with an unnecessary prodigality of testimony, he used to give perorations which improved with every telling.

The love of law diffused through the Presbytery became incarnate in the clerk, who was one of the most finished specimens of his class in the Scottish Kirk. His sedate appearance, bald, polished head, fringed with pure white hair, shrewd face, with neatly cut side whiskers, his suggestion of unerring accuracy and inexhaustible memory, his attitude for exposition—holding his glasses in his left hand and enforcing his decision with the little finger of the right hand—carried conviction even to the most disorderly. Ecclesiastical radicals, boiling over with new schemes and boasting to admiring circles of MacWheeps that they would not be browbeaten by red-tape officials, would become ungrammatical before that firm gaze, and end in abject surrender. Self-contained and self-sufficing, the clerk took no part in debate, save at the critical moment to lay down the law, but wrote his minutes unmoved through torrents of speech on every subject, from the Sustentation Fund to the Union between England and Scotland, and even under the picturesque eloquence of foreign deputies, whom he invariably requested to write their names on a sheet of paper. On two occasions only he ceased from writing: when Dr. Dowbiggin discussed a method of procedure—then he watched him over his spectacles in hope of a nice point; or when some enthusiastic brother would urge the Presbytery to issue an injunction on the sin of Sabbath walking—then the clerk would abandon his pen in visible despair, and, sitting sideways on his chair and supporting his head by that same little finger, would face the Presbytery with an expression of reverent curiosity on his face why the Creator was pleased to create such a man. His preaching was distinguished for orderliness, and was much sought after for Fast days. It turned largely on the use of prepositions and the scope of conjunctions, so that the clerk could prove the doctrine of Vicarious Sacrifice from "instead," and Retribution from "as" in the Lord's Prayer, emphasizing and confirming everything by that wonderful finger, which seemed to be designed by Providence for delicate distinctions, just as another man's fist served for popular declamation. His pulpit masterpiece was a lecture on the Council of Jerusalem, in which its whole proceedings were reviewed by the rules of the Free Kirk Book of Order, and a searching and edifying discourse concluded with two lessons. First: That no ecclesiastical body can conduct its proceedings without officials. Second: That such men ought to be accepted as a special gift of Providence.

The general opinion among good people was that the clerk's preaching was rather for upbuilding than arousing, but it is still remembered by the survivors of the old Presbytery that when MacWheep organized a conference on "The state of religion in our congregations," and it was meandering in strange directions, the clerk, who utilized such seasons for the writing of letters, rose amid a keen revival of interest—it was supposed that he detected an irregularity in the proceedings—and offered his contribution. "It did not become him to boast," he said, "but he had seen marvelous things in his day: under his unworthy ministry three church officers had been converted to Christianity," and this experience was so final that the conference immediately closed.

Times there were, however, when the Presbytery rose to its height and was invested with an undeniable spiritual dignity. Its members, taken one by one, consisted of farmers, shepherds, tradesmen, and one or two professional men, with some twenty ministers, only two or three of whom were known beyond their parishes. Yet those men had no doubt that as soon as they were constituted in the name of Christ, they held their authority from the Son of God and Saviour of the world, and they bore themselves in spiritual matters as his servants. No kindly feeling of neighborliness or any fear of man could hinder them from inquiring into the religious condition of a parish or dealing faithfully with an erring minister. They had power to ordain, and laid hands on the bent head of some young probationer with much solemnity; they had also power to take away the orders they had given, and he had been hardened indeed beyond hope who could be present and not tremble when the Moderator, standing in his place, with the Presbytery around, and speaking in the name of the Head of the Church, deposed an unworthy brother from the holy ministry. MacWheep was a "cratur," and much given to twaddle, but when it was his duty once to rebuke a fellow-minister for quarreling with his people, he was delivered from himself, and spake with such grave wisdom as he has never shown before or since.

When the Presbytery assembled to receive a statement from Doctor Saunderson "re error in doctrine by a brother Presbyter," even a stranger might have noticed that its members were weighted with a sense of responsibility, and although a discussion arose on the attempt of a desultory member to introduce a deputy charged with the subject of the lost ten tribes, yet it was promptly squelched by the clerk, who intimated, with much gravity, that the court had met in hunc effectum, viz., to hear Doctor Saunderson, and that the court could not, in consistence with law, take up any other business, not even—here Carmichael professed to detect a flicker of the clerkly eyelids—the disappearance of the ten tribes.

It was the last time that the Rabbi ever spoke in public, and it is now agreed that the deliverance was a fit memorial of the most learned scholar that has ever been known in those parts. He began by showing that Christian doctrine has taken various shapes, some more and some less in accordance with the deposit of truth given by Christ and the holy Apostles, and especially that the doctrine of Grace had been differently conceived by two eminent theologians, Calvin and Arminius, and his exposition was so lucid that the clerk gave it as his opinion that the two systems were understood by certain members of the court for the first time that day. Afterwards the Rabbi vindicated and glorified Calvinism from the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, from the Fathers, from the Reformation Divines, from the later creeds, till the brain of the Presbytery reeled through the wealth of allusion and quotation, all in the tongues of the learned. Then he dealt with the theology of Mr. Erskine of Linlathen, and showed how it was undermining the very foundations of Calvinism; yet the Rabbi spake so tenderly of our Scottish Maurice that the Presbytery knew not whether it ought to condemn Erskine as a heretic or love him as a saint. Having thus brought the court face to face with the issues involved, the Rabbi gave a sketch of a certain sermon he had heard while assisting "a learned and much-beloved brother at the Sacrament," and Carmichael was amazed at the transfiguration of his very youthful performance, which now figured as a profound and edifying discourse, for whose excellent qualities the speaker had not adequate words. This fine discourse was, however, to a certain degree marred by an unfortunate, no doubt temporary, leaning to the teaching of Mr. Erskine, whose beautiful piety, which was to himself in his worldliness and unprofitableness a salutary rebuke, had exercised its just fascination upon his much more spiritual brother. Finally the Rabbi left the matter in the hands of the Presbytery, declaring that he had cleared his conscience, and that the minister was one—here he was painfully overcome—dear to him as a son, and to whose many labors and singular graces he could bear full testimony, the Rev. John Carmichael, of Drumtochty. The Presbytery was slow and pedantic, but was not insensible to a spiritual situation, and there was a murmur of sympathy when the Rabbi sat down—much exhausted, and never having allowed himself to look once at Carmichael.

Then arose a self-made man, who considered orthodoxy and capital to be bound up together, and especially identified any departure from sovereignty with that pestilent form of Socialism which demanded equal chances for every man. He was only a plain layman, he said, and perhaps he ought not to speak in the presence of so many reverend gentlemen, but he was very grateful to Doctor Saunderson for his honorable and straightforward conduct. It would be better for the Church if there were more like him, and he would just like to ask Mr. Carmichael one or two questions. Did he sign the Confession?—that was one; and had he kept it?—that was two; and the last was, When did he propose to go? He knew something about building contracts, and he had heard of a penalty when a contract was broken. There was just one thing more he would like to say—if there was less loose theology in the pulpit there would be more money in the plate. The shame of the Rabbi during this harangue was pitiable to behold.

Then a stalwart arose on the other side, and a young gentleman who had just escaped from a college debating society wished to know what century we were living in, warned the last speaker that the progress of theological science would not be hindered by mercenary threats, advised Doctor Saunderson to read a certain German called Ritschl—as if he had been speaking to a babe in arms—and was refreshing himself with a Latin quotation, when the Rabbi, in utter absence of mind, corrected a false quantity aloud.

"Moderator," the old man apologized in much confusion, "I wot not what I did, and I pray my reverend brother, whose interesting address I have interrupted by this unmannerliness, to grant me his pardon, for my tongue simply obeyed my ear." Which untoward incident brought the modern to an end, as by a stroke of ironical fate. It seemed to the clerk that little good to any one concerned was to come out of this debate, and he signaled to Doctor Dowbiggin, with whom he had dined the night before, and concocted a motion over their wine. Whereupon that astute man explained to the court that he did not desire to curtail the valuable discussion, from which he personally had derived much profit, but he had ventured to draw up a motion, simply for the guidance of the House—it was said by the Rabbi's boys that the Doctor's success as an ecclesiastic was largely due to the skillful use of such phrases—and then he read: "Whereas the Church is set in all her courts for the defense of the truth, whereas it is reported that various erroneous doctrines are being promulgated in books and other public prints, whereas it has been stated that one of the ministers of this Presbytery has used words that might be supposed to give sanction to a certain view which appears to conflict with statements contained in the standards of the Church, the Presbytery of Muirtown declares, first of all, its unshaken adherence to the said standards, secondly deplores the existence in any quarter of notions contradictory or subversive of said standards, thirdly thanks Doctor Saunderson for the vigilance he has shown in the cause of sound doctrine, fourthly calls upon all ministers within the bounds to have a care that they create no offense by their teaching, and finally enjoins all parties concerned to cultivate peace and charity."

This motion was seconded by the clerk and carried unanimously—Carmichael being compelled to silence by the two wise men for his own sake and theirs—and was declared to be a conspicuous victory both by the self-made man and the modern, which was another tribute to the ecclesiastical gifts of Doctor Dowbiggin and the clerk of the Presbytery of Muirtown.

[To be continued in the October Magazine Number of The Outlook]

Perplexing Providences[1]

By the Rev. John Watson, M.A., D.D.

No one can read the Old Testament without observing that its writers are gravely concerned about the way in which Providence treats the righteous man. They take for granted that he ought to be favored of God, and that the unrighteous man ought to suffer; but it appears as if God shone upon the wicked and frowned on the good. The Psalmist complains bitterly that vile men are exalted. The prophets mention as one of the signs of the golden age that the churl shall no longer be counted bountiful. The Book of Job is a profound discussion of the apparent contradiction of justice, and the writer of Ecclesiastes almost lost hope of a world where the same lot is assigned to saint and sinner. When the righteous are blessed or when the unrighteous are punished, a load is lifted from the conscience and reason of these thinkers, and it appears as if their faith would hardly have any trial were this mystery of government solved. Let every man get his due, then

God's in his heaven,
All's right with the world.

Perhaps the West can hardly appreciate the force of this complaint to the full, because it has not felt its pressure. We have not known what it is to be wronged and robbed, to be cruelly oppressed, and to suffer the last outrage in our homes without protection or redress. While the hope of justice remains, a man can endure; when justice sides with the criminal, the victim's blood turns to gall. The fierce energy of the West has wrought salvation, breaking to pieces the power of the tyrant, compelling equal laws, surrounding justice with a wall of fire, casting an invincible shield over the helpless. Certain passages of the Bible are obsolete for the West, and are to us hardly intelligible. Our fathers knew their meaning. There are Christians in the East to-day that will still read them with passion. These passages are the litany of the poor, of the helpless, of women and children, the appeal of all miserables to a silent God, who will not move, who seems not to care, who has, notwithstanding, been partaker of the human Gethsemane, and himself inspired the passion of this cry.

We of the West have our own quarrel with Providence—although it be on a minor scale—and it frets our souls at a time and dashes the sweetness of faith. It appears as if, through carelessness or blindness, certain individuals had been confused in the arrangement of affairs, so that A receives the recompense of B, and B is condemned to the lot of A. One man is honorable, high-spirited, religious, faithful. His word is certain, his friends trust him unto death, his family adore him, the world counts him righteous. Here is one who surely will have riches and power and honor and comfort, who will be crowned with fame before all the people. And instead thereof his whole life is a struggle with poverty, trials, and obscurity. He is not called to dignity, but to pity. Another man is selfish, tricky, merciless, mercenary, whose word goes for nothing, who has done base things, whom no one in private respects. He ought to be an object of contempt—left alone in his place till he repents and does righteousness. Yet because the fellow has plausible manners and a fluent tongue and a cunning intellect, he too often wins his way with the multitude and retains their suffrages and lives at his ease. As he drives into the city, the mud from this intriguer's carriage-wheels defiles the coat of the righteous man. This contrast may not be common, but it does occur, and it raises questions—about the fairness of Providence.

This immoral situation makes good living harder for us all, and surely any artificial hindrance is scarcely needed. Many of us are bitterly conscious of the temptation to do less than our best, and require every enforcement of virtue. Here before our eyes is a parable, teaching us in so many words that integrity and piety are only the high road to failure, and that showy and unscrupulous methods are the passport to success. There are some whom no allurements can seduce from the way of righteousness, and whom the sight of the low estate of goodness will only establish in their integrity. Other some are ready enough to hearken to any voice which declares that the gods do not see behind, but are as easily deceived as foolish people. Is it not dangerous for the individual that the way of unrighteousness be laid out as a primrose path, while the way of honor is narrow and strait?

Is not this confusion of lots also like a misdirection from the bench and an injustice to society? If there be a sense of the distinction between goodness and badness in the community, does it not require the support and sanctions of the Eternal? Do we not as nations turn to history to read the downfall of iniquity and the victory of righteousness? Are we not in social life ever on the alert for convincing illustrations of that unseen power which shapes human life according to the law written in our conscience? What a wanton blow to our poor perplexed consciences to see a despicable person, whose hand we would not take in the way of friendship, selected for a crown, and a saint who has been an inspiration to us in the conflict of the soul allotted a cross! Can our commonwealth be blamed if it follow the lead of Providence and set rascals on high and hold the children of the kingdom in scorn?

---

[1] Copyright, 1896, by John Watson.

So it comes to pass that we begin by being concerned about good men, and end by being concerned about God. Is He also careless whether one choose the higher or lower way, whether he feed or mortify his evil self? Are men and cowards, vain and proud persons, the same to Him as the men of the Beatitudes? This is a very serious question, vital and final. If God be on the right side, then there is not a good man anywhere who will not hold up his head; if God goes over to the enemy, then it seems no use that the rest of us continue the fight—let us fling away our scruples and join in the general scramble. Of course we know what God has said: his words are in the Law of Moses and in the Sermon on the Mount; they are graven on our hearts. We also see what God does, and his deeds and his words do not correspond. This is the problem of Providence, and it is not light. We ought carefully to remember that Providence has not finished its work with those two men and their affairs. It is at the foot of the page the figures are added, and till the columns are filled up no one can say whether the debtor or creditor side has the advantage. Life has many surprises, and some of them are very cheering. Knaves come oftentimes to shame and beggary, much to the relief of society; just men suddenly win their rights, to every one's delight. Wickedness may succeed to-day and to-morrow, and be made a hissing and a reproach the third day. Honor may be set in the pillory and be pelted by the rascal multitude for a day and be clothed in purple and borne to her throne at eve of sun. And if this happy event come not to pass in our time, then the figures will be carried over the page, and the balance will be struck on the other side. Dives and Lazarus in this world may seem an argument against Providence; the argument has to be modified when you meet the two men in the next world. God has an infinite patience, and does not make haste; it will be soon enough to judge his ways when they are complete.

Is it not also our misfortune to be dazzled by the glitter of this world and to identify the rewards of God with material prosperity? If one be rich and increased in goods, if he hold high station in Church or State, then is it not evident that God has blessed him? If one live in a small house and his name be not known two streets away, then surely God has not blessed him. Could any standard be more shallow, deceptive, unbelieving, ungodly? It would seem as if the New Testament had never been written and Jesus had never lived in Nazareth! If the teaching of Jesus goes for anything, worldly success is no sign of divine approval, but is rather a very trying discipline; hardship is no evidence that God is disowning a man, but, maybe, the most convincing gift of his fatherly love. Joseph of Arimathea was no dearer to Christ than St. John, and although Nero lived in a palace and wore the purple, while St. Paul was chained to a soldier and imprisoned in the barracks, the Apostle had not been willing to change places with the Emperor. When God is pleased and wishes to bless the men he loves, his hands have other gifts than silver and gold.

It is more than probable, moreover, that the accounts are being squared here and now, but that our eyes are holden. Is it absolutely certain that our Dives rejoices as one on whom God's face is shining? What of the reprobation of good men, of the gnawing misery of self-contempt, of the conscious impoverishment of the soul, of the haunting dread of the future? Are there none who would give all they have won by years of scheming and self-degradation for a quiet conscience and a good character? Does it go without saying that our Lazarus is miserable because he is not clothed in fine linen and does not dine sumptuously every day? May he not have his own consolations? Surely it is no mean compensation for a severe life and narrow circumstances to be able to look every man in the face, to have the loyal friendship of six honest men, to leave an unstained name as the heritage of his children, to hear God say in the stillness of the soul, "Well done, my son."

Delinquent, Defective, and Dependent Classes in the United States

III.—Dependent Classes[1]

By F. W. Hewes

The drawing on the opposite page presents an interesting study of two widely differing elements of population. The first may be called the hopeless poor. The second consists largely of diseased and disabled persons receiving aid from public and private benevolence.

Exhibit No. 1 (at the right-hand upper corner of the drawing) consists of a pair of measuring-bars, which show that the census report divides the 97,265 paupers into two parts. Almost exactly three-fourths of them were found sheltered in almshouses, while the other one-fourth are those "permanently supported at public expense at their own homes or with private families."

Distribution.—Exhibit No. 2 portrays the geographical distribution of the almshouse poor, and shows (as in the case of insanity, studied in the second paper) that the North Atlantic section has a much larger proportion than any other part of the United States.[2]

The reason for this larger proportion of paupers—as well as of insane and criminals—is undoubtedly, in large measure, that found in the study of the criminal element, viz., the presence of the most undesirable portion of the foreign-born population, which remains in the seacoast towns, while the more thrifty portion finds its way westward, settling in the agricultural States.

This view is in part corroborated by the very long bar in exhibit No. 3, which shows that a much greater portion of the foreign-born element finds its way into almshouses than of either native-born white or colored persons in the country, as a whole.

The very small circle of the South Central section, and the slightly larger one of the South Atlantic section, are in strong contrast with that of the North Atlantic and Middle States. It appears clear that either the South has fewer poor, or that almshouses are not so abundantly supplied.

Before leaving exhibit No. 3 it is worth while to note that if our population were made up wholly of native-born white persons our proportion of paupers would be only about two-thirds what it is, for the bar portraying native-born white is marked 798, while the actual average, including all classes, is 1,166, as recorded on the United States circle just above No. 3. The chief element making up the larger percentage is clearly the excessively large proportion of the foreign-born population, as shown by that bar of No. 3.[1]

Decrease.—That large and growing class of people at the North who are in favor of a very careful public and private expenditure for the support of the poor will be pleased to note the sharp downward pitch of the upper slant line in No. 4. This downward pitch indicates an important decrease in the proportion of paupers in the North Atlantic section between 1880 and 1890. This would seem to

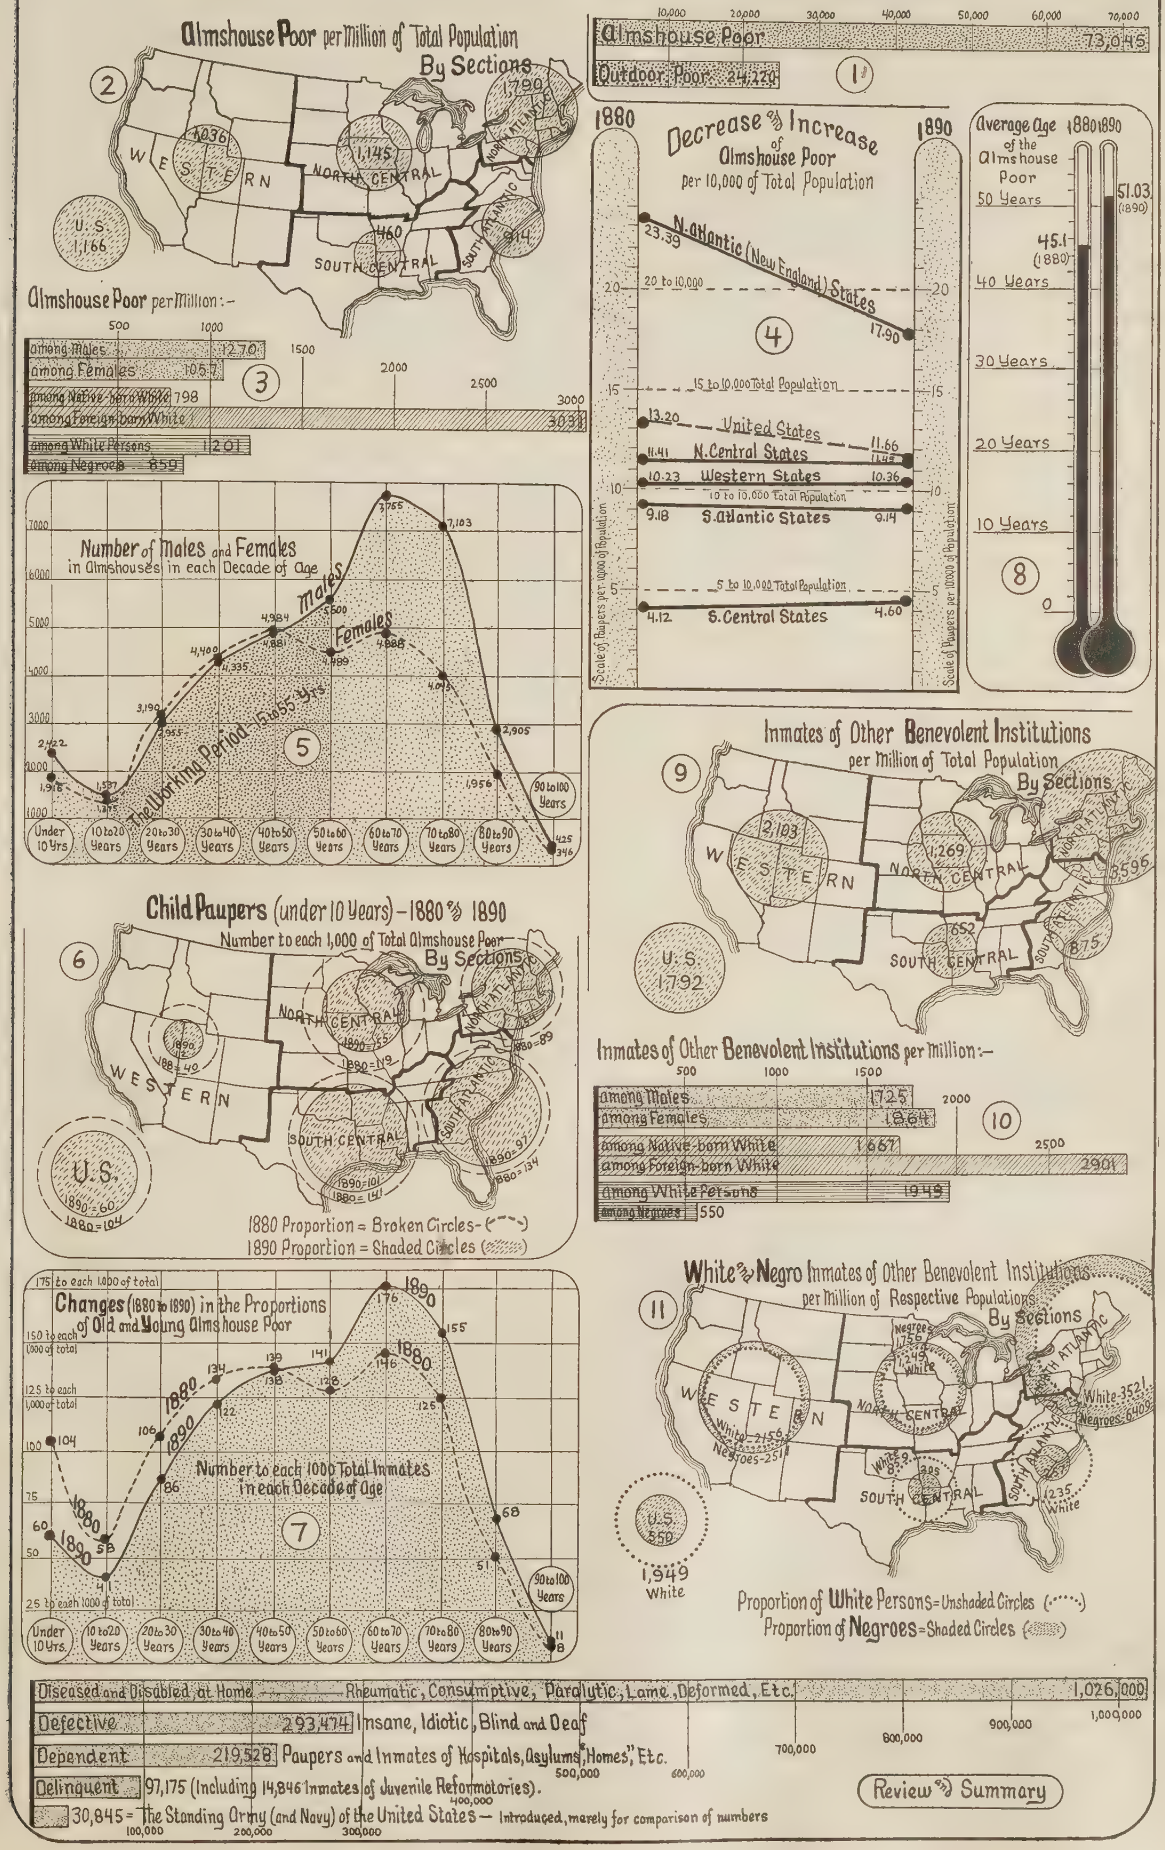
---

[1] For the preceding papers see The Outlook for March 7 and September 5.

[2] This is also equally true of the outdoor poor. In fact, all data concerning the outdoor poor correspond very closely to that of the almshouse poor, so that what is presented regarding the almshouse poor may properly be taken as representing the whole.

[1] It is to be kept in mind that the greater age of the foreign-born population counts against them.

DEPENDENT CLASSES IN THE UNITED STATES



indicate a more discriminating and restrictive policy in that portion of the United States.

Were a like reduction indicated in each of the other sections, then it might be attributed to the effect of the business prosperity which prevailed throughout the country in that decade. Since, however, the four other slant lines show only trifling changes, the decrease in the Eastern section must come from some local influence, and that influence probably the one already noted.

Male and Female.—The population of the country, as a whole, has a few more males than females; and since wage-earning offers much more ample employment to males than females (the census reports showing nearly five times as many males as females employed), it would be natural to expect a much smaller proportion of male than female paupers. An examination of No. 5 shows, however, that during what may be termed the wage-earning period of life there is only a slightly smaller proportion. After the wage-earning period the excess of male paupers is remarkable. Must this be taken to mean that men are naturally much more ready to become paupers than are women?

Another remarkable fact presented in No. 5 is that the number of paupers is so much less in the second decade of life than in the first. This would seem to indicate a larger proportion of self-supporting population between ten and twenty years of age than at any other period of life. Not less remarkable is the sudden increase of paupers in the third decade (twenty to thirty years of age). It seems astonishing that so many so quickly drop out of the self-supporting ranks.

Child Paupers.—A very gratifying result is presented in No. 6, where the larger (broken) map circles show how great were the proportions of paupers under ten years of age in 1880—at the close of the 1873–79 panic; and the smaller (shaded) circles show the reduction to 1890, covering ten years of prosperity. The United States circle (off the lower left-hand corner of the map) marks a reduction from 104 to 60 per million, or over forty per cent. The five pairs of section circles show that the reduction was very general all through the country, reaching over fifty per cent. in the North Central and seventy per cent. in the Western division; where at the same time even the 1880 proportion was much smaller than in any other part of the country.

It looks very much as if this general improvement were due to the business prosperity of that decade. It was also undoubtedly aided by the efforts of philanthropic persons and societies to remove dependent children from almshouses to "homes" and other better institutions.

The diagram lines show that in both 1880 and 1890 there was a larger proportion of paupers between sixty and seventy years of age than at any other period of life. They also show an increase from 146 to 176 in a thousand, during the ten years, in this seventh decade of life, which indicates that the average age of all paupers advances considerably. This fact is portrayed by the two thermometers of No. 8, near the upper right-hand corner of the drawing.

Benevolent Institutions.—Besides the numerous recipients of benevolence and charity already studied in this and the preceding paper, the census found 112,263 persons in other benevolent institutions—" National, State, county, city, and private; in hospitals, orphan asylums, church benevolent institutions, homes for aged women, homes for children, and all places of such character." Exhibit No. 9 gives the geographical distribution of these persons, and calls attention to the much larger provision made for these needy ones in the North Atlantic section than elsewhere. The remarkably small circles of the South show either a much less generous provision or a much smaller need.

Negroes.—The very small proportion of the negro population represented in these benevolent institutions raises the inquiry whether prejudice against that race operates to exclude them. It is scarcely reasonable to suppose that there are so very few among them needing this kind of aid. The people of the North charge those of the South with a lack of humanity toward the negro. The people of the South make just as earnest a counter charge, and claim that in practice the Northerners are the guilty ones.

The data have, therefore, been analyzed to ascertain how this class of benevolence is distributed, between white persons and negroes, in each of the five sections of the country. The result is shown in No. 11. Beginning with the North Atlantic section, it is clearly evident that the negroes of that section have much more than their equal share in the benefits provided; for while the white population of that section have about three and a half (3.521) persons to each thousand white persons, in these benevolent institutions the negroes have nearly six and a half (6.409) persons to each thousand negroes. Either the negroes of that section are much more needy than the white population, or prejudice is greatly in their favor. The circles of the North Central and Western sections show similar conditions existing in those two sections.

The opposite conditions, shown even more emphatically in the two Southern sections, point out one of two facts. Either the negroes are not nearly as needy in the South or certain forces are against them.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW

The three papers hereby concluded have brought under brief examination the afflicted and disturbing elements of population, sheltered in organized institutions. This is, however, only a part of the count. Besides all these there are in their own homes a still larger number of persons who through disease or other disability are unable to follow their ordinary occupations. The census of 1890 approximated those afflicted at 1,026,000 persons.

A set of measuring-bars at the foot of the drawing compares these several great "armies" with the standing army of the United States, and thereby leaves the reader to his own ponderings regarding the disturbing and disturbed elements of the population of our country.

Books and Authors

The Bible as Literature [1]

It was inevitable that the fresh and independent study of the Bible which has been carried forward with such enthusiasm of late years, and which, in spite of some rash conclusions, has been so beneficent in its influence, should eventually awaken a new appreciation of the unique collection of writings which compose the Book as literature. Webster is reported to have said that one evidence of the divine origin of the Christian religion was furnished by the fact that it has survived the written sermon; he might have added that one evidence of the unique spiritual quality and value of the Bible is to be found in the fact that it has searched, inspired, and consoled so many noble men and women, and written itself so largely into the experience and history of a large part of the world, despite the arbitrary way in which it has been divided, the mechanical method by which it has been treated, the indifference shown to its beauty and integrity of form. Through the fog of literal interpretation, and in spite of absurd and mechanical arrangement, the soul of the Bible has still found its way to the soul of humanity. The study of recent years will bear fruit in a repossession of a body of literature full of a beauty which has been obscured, and characterized by a variety which has been almost obliterated. The soul shines with a new splendor now that men are able to see with what harmonious beauty of form it is matched.

The recovery of the Bible of literature was certain to come, but it has found in Professor Richard G. Moulton an interpreter of very unusual gifts. A student and scholar of wide learning, Professor Moulton has also a very genuine feeling for literature and a very notable gift of dramatic interpretation. His study of the Greek and Shakespearean dramas has born fruit in two suggestive books, while his brilliant qualities as an expositor of literary themes have not only charmed audiences in many parts of the country, but have awakened an intelligent and abiding interest in the serious study of literature. Coming from an English university, with an established reputation as a University Extension lecturer, Professor Moulton, by reason of his position in the University of Chicago, has become one of us if warmth of welcome and wide respect can effect a change of citizenship.

The Bible has long been the subject of reverent and intelligent study by Professor Moulton—study which has borne valuable fruit in his "Literary Study of the Bible," which bears the imprint of Messrs. D. C. Heath & Co., and still more important fruit in the series of well-printed and convenient little volumes which are now coming from the press of the Macmillan Company. The purpose of this series is well expressed in its general title, "The Modern Reader's Bible: A Series of Works from the Sacred Scriptures Presented in Modern Literary Form." The earlier work is a comment upon and exposition of the literary quality and form of the Bible; these volumes present the Bible in the literary forms which, in the judgment of the editor, it ought to wear. The effect of these changes back to the original poems under which the sacred writings first appeared will be, for the vast majority of readers, a surprise and delight; they will feel as if they had come upon new spiritual and intellectual treasures, and they will appreciate for the first time how much the Bible has suffered from the hands of those who have treated it without reference to its literary quality. In view of the significance and possible results of Professor Moulton's undertaking, it is not too much to pronounce it one of the most important spiritual and literary events of the times. It is part of the renaissance of Biblical study; but it may mean, and in our judgment it does mean, the renewal of a fresh and deep impression of the beauty and power of the supreme spiritual writing of the world.

---

[1] The Modern Reader's Bible. 15 vols. 50 cents a volume. The Macmillan Company, New York.

The plan involves primarily the proper arrangement of the printed page, the recognition of the distinction between prose and verse, the use of the different metrical forms, the insertion of the names of speakers in dialogue, and the introduction of titles to such compositions as essays and discourses. The series, so far as announced, is to include fifteen volumes: four devoted to the Wisdom literature, and including books of selections from the Proverbs, Ecclesiasticus, Ecclesiastes, and the Book of Job; one containing the orations and songs of Moses, Deuteronomy; one made up of Biblical Idyls, containing Solomon's Song and the epic lyrics of Ruth, Esther, and Tobit; a History Series in five volumes, devoted to Genesis, Exodus, The Judges, The Kings, and The Chronicles; and a Prophecy Series, presenting Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and The Minor Prophets. It is very much to be hoped that the reception given to the series will insure its completion. Each volume contains a very valuable introductory study of the book presented as a piece of literature; and this series of essays, summing up the results of Professor Moulton's long study, form a contribution of no small importance to the literature relating to the Bible. Each volume is also furnished with notes. The text used throughout the series is that of the Revised Version, the marginal readings being usually preferred.

Professor Moulton's skill and judgment have been subjected to very severe tests in the arrangement and treatment of a series of works in prose and verse of such diverse quality and character, but his success has been notable; for he has brought to his task ample knowledge, genuine literary feeling, and deep reverence. It is impossible to do justice to his work by quotation; his rendering of the Book of Job, for instance, must be read entire, with the Introduction, to gain the full and rich impression of that noble poem—the greatest poem, in many ways, in the literature of the world. Two selections may, however, give a hint of Professor Moulton's method, and of the value and charm of the results attained by it. The Song of Solomon is divided into seven Idyls, the second of which Dr. Moulton entitles "The Bride's Reminiscence of the Courtship:"

THE INTERRUPTED VISIT.—THE BIRDS

The voice of my beloved! behold he cometh
Leaping upon the mountains,
Skipping upon the hills.
My beloved is like a roe or a young hart:
Behold, he standeth behind our wall,
He looketh in at the windows,
He showeth himself through the lattice.
My beloved spake, and said unto me:
"Rise up, my love, my fair one,
And come away.

For, lo, the winter is past,
The rain is over and gone;
The flowers appear on the earth;
The time of the singing of birds is come,
And the voice of the turtle is heard in our land
The fig-tree ripeneth her green figs,
And the vines are in blossom.
They give forth their fragrance.
Arise, my love, my fair one,
And come away.

Oh my dove, that art in the clefts of the rocks,
In the court of the steep place,
Let me see thy countenance,
Let me hear thy voice;

For sweet is thy voice,
And thy countenance is comely."

VOICES OF THE BROTHERS (heard interrupting).

"Take us the foxes,
The little foxes that spoil the vineyards;
For our vineyards are in blossom."

My beloved is mine, and I am his;
He feedeth his flocks among the lilies,
Until the day break, and the shadows flee away,
Turn, my beloved, and be thou like a roe or a young hart
Upon the mountains of separation.

Two selections from "The Proverbs," in the Wisdom Series, bring out other aspects of Dr. Moulton's work:

THE TWO PATHS—A SONNET

Hear, O my son, and receive my sayings;
And the years of thy life shall be many.
I have taught thee in the way of wisdom;
I have led thee in paths of uprightness.
When thou goest, thy steps shall not be straitened;
And if thou runnest, thou shalt not stumble.
Take fast hold of instruction;
Let her not go:
Keep her;
For she is thy life.

Enter not into the path of the wicked,
And walk not in the way of evil men.
Avoid it,
Pass not by it;
Turn from it,
And pass on.
For they sleep not, except they have done mischief;
And their sleep is taken away, unless they cause some to fall.
For they eat the bread of wickedness,
And drink the wine of violence.

But the path of the righteous is as the light of dawn,
That shineth more and more unto the perfect day.
The way of the wicked is as darkness;
They know not at what they stumble.

WISDOM AND HEALTH—A SONNET

My son, attend to my words;
Incline thine ear unto my sayings.
Let them not depart from thine eyes;
Keep them in the midst of thine heart.
For they are life unto those that find them,
And health to all their flesh.

Keep thy Heart above all that thou guardest,
For out of it are the issues of life.

Put away from thee a froward Mouth,
And perverse lips put far from thee.

Let thine Eyes look right on,
And let thine eyelids look straight before thee.

Make level the path of thy Feet,
And let all thy ways be established.
Turn not to the right hand nor to the left
Remove thy foot from evil.

Essays in Criticism [1]

The deepest impression that one receives from Mr. Edmund Gosse's essays in literary criticism is that of his candor. He is not, like Mr. Zangwill, prone to sacrifice accuracy of expression (and good nature to boot) to the opportunity of making an epigram. Mr. Zangwill's critical sense is acute, but he has the spirit of the soi disant François Arouet hovering over him. Mr. Gosse is genial and generous. His own literary successes have put him in a good humor with the sorry phantasm we call the world. He dedicates this collection of his critical reviews to Mr. Thomas Hardy, and calls it "Critical Kit-Kats." The felicity of the title titillates. Mr. Gosse paints us kit-kat portraits of Mrs. Browning, Keats, Beddoes, Fitzgerald, Walt Whitman, Tolstoï, Christina Rossetti, Lord de Tabley, Toru Dutt, Pater, and Stevenson; he draws from life mostly, and he sketches cleverly. It is clear that he does not get as much pleasure out of profound emotions and subtle thought in literature as he does out of perfection of form. To take an instance or two—it is queer that he should select as the best of the Rubaiyát of Omar-Fitzgerald the lines beginning:

Alas, that spring should vanish with the rose!

and

Thus with a loaf of bread beneath the bough.

Likewise, when he comes to speak of Hérèdia—of whom, by the way, Mr. Gosse gives us the only biographical account that has been published—it is the quatorzain beginning that Mr. Gosse selects as a sample, instead of that on "Jason and Medea," or that on "The Sphynx," or "The Awaking of the God." Mr. Gosse instinctively flees mysticism and metaphysics. No wonder, therefore, that he should enthusiastically adore M. José Maria de Hérèdia. Who that has reveled in the sumptuosity of "Les Trophées" will blame Mr. Gosse, who is entirely right in proclaiming the Cuban Frenchman, the latest of the Forty Immortals, as the greatest poetic artist now living? Hérèdia's sonnets are as complete, we venture to say, as Petrarch's. They have not the heart of Shakespeare's, not the philosophy of Wordsworth's, nor the subtlety of Dante Rossetti's, but they have a perfection of form that is unsurpassable; they are the fine gold chiseling of a Cellini, or they are the relievos of a Donatello of letters. There is a tender sympathy in his touch when Mr. Gosse tells us his story of the late Mr. Pater. If Mr. Pater had any fault, it was a love for preciosity of style, euphuism. It is a difficulty that took possession of him when he perpetrated those interminable sentences in his "Plato and Platonism." Mr. Gosse says that when Pater was at the nadir of his religious faith he most admired the Roman Catholic Church. When Mr. Gosse was in America, he visited Walt Whitman, and frankly he tells us that he went to scoff and remained to—admire. Naturally the formlessness of Whitman's vaticinations would repel him, but the personality of the prophet of Camden was irresistibly attractive. Since it is not generally known how the exquisite sequence of love-poems that Mrs. Browning addressed to her husband came to be named "Sonnets from the Portuguese," here is the explanation in Mr. Gosse's own words:

Au milieu de l'écume arrétant son essor

---

[1] Critical Kit-Kats. By Edmund Gosse. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York. $1.50.

> During the months of their brief courtship, closing, as all the world knows, in the clandestine flight and romantic wedding of September 12, 1846, neither poet showed any verses to the other. Mr. Browning, in particular, had not the smallest notion that the circumstances of their betrothal had led Miss Barrett into any artistic expression of feeling. As little did he suspect it during their honeymoon in Paris, or during their first crowded weeks in Italy. They settled at length in Pisa, and, being quitted by Mrs. Jamieson and her niece, in a very calm and happy mood, the young couple took up each his or her separate work. Their custom was, Mr. Browning said, to write alone, and not to show each other what they had written. This was a rule which he sometimes broke through, but she never. He had the habit of working in a downstairs room, where their meals were spread, while Mrs. Browning studied in a room on the floor above.
>
> One day, early in 1847, their breakfast being over, Mrs. Browning went upstairs while her husband stood at the window watching the street till the table should be cleared. He was presently aware of some one behind him, although the servant was gone. It was Mrs. Browning, who held him by the shoulder to prevent his turning to look at her, and at the same time pushed a packet of papers into the pocket of his coat. She told him to read that and to tear it up if he did not like it, and then she fled again to her own room. Mr. Browning settled himself at the table and unfolded the parcel. It contained the series of sonnets which have now become so illustrious. As he read, his emotion and delight may be conceived. Before he had finished, it was impossible for him to restrain himself, and, regardless of his promise, he rushed upstairs and stormed that guarded citadel. He was early conscious that these were treasures not to be kept from the world. "I dared not reserve to myself," he said, "the finest sonnets written in any language since Shakespeare's." When it was determined to publish the sonnets in the volumes of 1850, the question of a title arose. The name which was ultimately chosen, "Sonnets from the Portuguese," was invented by Mr. Browning as an ingenious device to veil the true authorship, and yet to suggest kinship with that beautiful lyric called "Caterina to Camoens," in which so similar a passion had been expressed. Long before he ever heard of these poems, Mr. Browning called his wife his "own little Portuguese," and so, when she proposed "Sonnets Translated from the Bosnian," he, catching at the happy thought of "translated," replied: "No, not Bosnian—that means nothing—but from the Portuguese! They are Caterina's sonnets!" And so, in half a joke, half a conceit, the famous title was invented.

The average American reader will not find in the writings of the Lord de Tabley and of Miss Rossetti the charm that Mr. Gosse feels. We allow for the element of personal friendship in his opinion. They were poets, pleasing at times, but, notwithstanding all that their coterie did to get the world to admire them, they remain minor poets. Yet we all shall always, or at least for a long time, remember that Miss Rossetti wrote "The Goblin Market."

No one ought to find fault with Mr. Gosse for what he has not said, because he has disarmed the antagonist by the modest title of his book. He has sketched his portraits, and one can imagine him waving his hand along the row and saying, "People whom I have known." In fact, he tells us in his preface that what he has written about the sonnets of Mrs. Browning was laid upon him as a duty by his friend the late Robert Browning, "writer of plays."

New Books

[The books mentioned under this head and under that of Books Received include all received by The Outlook during the week ending September 11. This weekly report of current literature will be supplemented by fuller reviews of the more important works.]

Mr. B. L. Farjeon has not of late years printed anything as good as his first two or three stories, which had a good deal of human sympathy, though they had also distinct reminscences of Dickens's worst faults, and marked the author as a devoted disciple, in style, of the greater novelist. The Betrayal of John Fordham is full of improbabilities. It begins with the persecution of a husband by his dipsomaniacal wife, who seems to find almost every one willing to help her in her insane plots, and it ends in a sensational and intricate network of crime and detection. (R. F. Fenno & Co., New York.)——Tyne Folk is an excellent descriptive title for Dr. Joseph Parker's collection of character sketches of Northumberland people. The book has acuteness, vitality, and humor. (The F. H. Revell Company, New York.)

A new edition has been published by Charles Scribner's Sons, of this city, of Mrs. Burnett's ever fresh and readable story That Lass o' Lowrie's, which many people still consider the author's strongest work in fiction. The same firm send us in a new edition Mr. J. G. Holland's Sevenoaks and Arthur Bonnicastle. This edition is very prettily bound; perhaps it is too much to expect fine paper in volumes costing seventy-five cents each, but in these books the paper is so poor that the type-impression is not as good as it should be. As to the stories themselves, they have already been read by hundreds of thousands, and maintain their popularity. They have very obvious faults, but they possess the great merit of sincerity and high purpose. "Sevenoaks" has much the stronger story interest; perhaps "Arthur Bonnicastle" is more suggestive to thought. Also from the same publishers come two volumes in the series "Stories by English Authors;" Germany and The Sea are the titles; they include short stories by Stevenson, Black, Miss Harraden, W. C. Russell, Walter Besant, and others.——Jean Porter Rudd's The Tower of the Old Schloss is a pretty and simple story of German life. (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.)——We are glad to see a new edition of Mayne Reid's The Boy Hunters and The Bush Boys. These are among the best of this famous writer's books for boys, and belong to that class of his works which is as far removed as possible from certain volumes bearing his name which are nothing but sensational trash. These two books pleased the boys of a generation, or two generations, ago, and may well please the boys of to-day. (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.)——Another boys' book is The Mystery of Lost River Canyon, by Harry Castlemon. Like all this writer's books, the story is somewhat overcrowded with incident, and the boy hero is one of those extraordinary creatures who, in books, accomplish anything and everything desired. (H. T. Coates & Co., Philadelphia.)——Anne K. Benedict's The Hathaways' Sister is a pleasantly told story of child life in New England, in which the religious element is present, but is not over-intrusive. (American Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia.)

A work of vast learning and of immense value as furnishing material for systematic study of anthropology is The History of Mankind, by Professor Friedrich Ratzel, the first volume of which has just been translated from the second German edition by Mr. A. J. Butler. An interesting introduction is furnished by Dr. E. B. Tylor. The work when completed will really comprise a history of the progress of civilization. It follows the beginnings of language, religion, industrial arts, family customs, ornamentation, house-building, superstitions, tool-making, property distinctions, war methods, and many other characteristic phases of the life of the early races. The book is fully and completely illustrated; some of the illustrations are unpleasant to the eye—particularly the frontispiece—and it seems to us might, without slighting the scientific aspect of the work, have been subordinated in relative prominence. (The Macmillan Company, New York.)

Dr. W. J. Rolfe, in Shakespeare the Boy, has reconstructed, with marvelous patience and a skill belonging only to a thorough Shakespearean scholar, the youthful life of the great dramatist. As is well known, the objective material open to Dr. Rolfe was very slight indeed, but from scores of allusions in the plays themselves the author has been able to work out most satisfactorily an account of what the boy Shakespeare must have seen and known. Some of these articles originally appeared in "The Youth's Companion," but very much new matter has been added. The book is written for the reading of boys, but will interest older people. It is well illustrated. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)

In Literary Landmarks of Venice Mr. Laurence Hutton has done for the "Queen of the Adriatic" what he formerly did so satisfactorily for London and Edinburgh. To use his own words, his volume is "intended to be a record of the Animated Residences of Genius which are still existing in Venice." Naturally the material is not as abundant as in Mr. Hutton's former volumes of "Literary Landmarks." It is, however, extremely interesting in its character, and the information which Mr. Hutton has collected with his usual accuracy and care is presented in a thoroughly readable form. The book is charmingly illustrated. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)

Mrs. Margaret Sangster always writes with sympathetic feeling. In the volume of little talks entitled With My Neighbors she enters into the home and personal side of the life of women and young girls, and, with her accustomed charm of style, talks in a most friendly, suggestive, and often inspiring way. The book is one which must do much good, and is the more valuable because it is absolutely free from pretentiousness or assumption of superiority. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)——From the same firm comes Mr. Will Carleton's The Old Infant, and Similar Stories. We confess that the humor of these stories seems to us drawn out very thin.——Mr. George A. Hibbard has aptly described Lenox in the series of little books relating to American summer resorts, published by Charles Scribner's Sons, of this city. The characteristic pleasures of the place are described briefly, and excellent illustrations accompany the text.——Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons have added Washington Irving's Columbus to their excellent series on "The Heroes of the Nation."——Three Old Maids in Hawaii is a book of travel by Ellen B. Maxwell. There is a good deal of useful information contained in the book, but we are inclined to think that it would have been more acceptable to most readers if the slight form of fiction had not been attempted. (Eaton & Mains, New York.)

The Christian Democracy: A History of its Suppression and Revival, by John McDowell Leavitt, D.D., LL.D., reviews the gradual transformation of the Church from a brotherhood to an ecclesiastical despotism, and its gradual change during the last few centuries from an ecclesiastical despotism toward a brotherhood. In a chapter upon Anglicanism the author criticises keenly the claims of the Protestant Episcopal Church to catholicity. This Church, he says, a century ago was the dominant one in more than half of our States, but to-day it holds but one-twenty-fifth of the aggregate membership of American Protestant Churches. The author believes that the desire of certain men for an elaborate ritual will be gratified when the Church Universal is established, but the Church Universal, he holds, will establish unity by allowing a large measure of diversity. (Eaton & Mains, New York.)

Elements of Psychology, by George Groom Robertson, edited by Caroline A. F. Rhys Davids, is a condensation of notes upon lectures delivered by Professor Robertson at University College, London, between 1870 and 1892. Miss Davids was assisted in her work by twenty-five former students under Professor Robertson, who lent her the notes they had taken of his lectures. (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.)

Nature and Christ, by Joseph Agar Beet, D.D., is a series of lectures delivered by the Professor of Systematic Theology at Wesleyan College, Richmond, England, before the Ocean Grove Summer School of Theology in August of last year. The thought of the volume is that the revelation of God in nature, in Christ, and in our own souls is essentially one. (Eaton & Mains, New York.)——The Perfect Whole, by Horatio W. Dresser, is a deeply religious essay upon the conduct and meaning of life, by one who has experienced the peace and joy that come from the belief that one Divine Spirit is working in all things and through all things. The volume lays no claim to originality of thought, but there is always original thought where there is such freshness and depth of feeling. (George H. Ellis, Boston.)——The Inspiration of History, by James Mulchahey, S.T.D., is a series of essays upon the inspiration of history in man's sense of his relationship toward God. The history which has been thus inspired is not confined to that chronicled in the Old and New Testaments, but continues wherever religion is truly "the life of God in the soul of man." (Thomas Whittaker, New York.) Through Egypt to Palestine, by Lee S. Smith, is based upon the author's letters to the Pittsburg "Christian Advocate." The volume is amply illustrated from photographs he took during his travels. (Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.)

The Evolution of an Empire: A Brief Historical Sketch of the United States, by Mary Platt Parmele, is a healthful attempt to describe the development of the United States without encumbering the mind of the reader with a mass of chronological detail. Memory, the author holds, is intended to be the handmaid of the higher faculties, but in the study of American history it has been enthroned above the other faculties. She endeavors to discuss only those events which have really influenced the life of the people of our country. (William B. Harrison, New York.)

New Essays Concerning Human Understanding, by Gottfried Wilhelm Leibnitz, translated, with notes, by Alfred Gideon Langley, embodies the labor of years on the part of the translator and editor as well as the philosopher whose criticism upon Locke is now presented to English readers. We shall give the book further notice hereafter. (The Macmillan Company, New York.)

The Holy Spirit in the New Testament Scriptures, by William Campbell Scofield, is a commentary upon the two hundred and fifteen passages in the New Testament in which reference is made to the Holy Spirit. (Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.)——Evolution or Creation? by Professor Luther T. Townsend, D.D., is a review of the scientific theories of creation from the standpoint of one who believes in the absolute accuracy of the Mosaic narrative. Professor Townsend finds much encouragement in the waning hold of naturalism upon the leaders in the scientific world. Even if missing links shall be discovered, they will not, he believes, revive the naturalism which seemed in the ascendency a few years ago, but will merely furnish further evidence of a plan along which all the workings of nature are ordered. (Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.)

The Epworth League Reading Course for 1896–97 consists of four volumes entitled respectively The Vision of Christ in the Poets, by Charles M. Stuart; The Social Law of Service, by Professor Richard T. Ely; Torch-Bearers of Christendom, by Dr. Robert H. Doherty; and In League with Israel, by Annie Fellows Johnston. "The Torch-Bearers of Christendom" is a brief but clear review of the history of Christianity down to our own times. "In League with Israel" is the story of the conversion of a Jew through the work of the League. Professor Ely's book on "The Social Law of Service" and Mr. Stuart's on "The Vision of Christ in the Poets" are books of value to mature minds. Mr. Stuart's volume is an admirable collection of the best religious poems in our English and American literature. Most of them are by the poets of our own half-century—the Brownings, Tennyson, Whittier, Longfellow, and Lowell—and the religious life they breathe is the religious life of to-day. Professor Ely's "Social Law of Service" is, in an equal or even a greater degree, a book expressive of the religious life of our own times. It presents to the conscience of Christians one pointed question after another regarding their duties toward those to whom they are bound by the modern political and industrial organization of society. The book is one that should and will be read by pastors and adult laymen quite as much as by members of the Epworth League, for whom it is written. (Eaton & Mains, New York.)

The Story of France, as told by Thomas E. Watson, the People's party candidate for Vice-President, is an exceptionally entertaining narrative. The muse of history in her South Georgia costume signally lacks her customary dignity, but is so full of life and sympathy and humor that she gains an unwonted fascination. The author touches nothing that has not a vital interest either as illustrating the life of the age he is describing, or as affecting the life of the ages that follow. By means of concrete pictures rather than abstract generalizations he depicts the history of civilization. His own intense sympathies with the cause of the oppressed, and his constant finding of parallels between the battles against privilege in ages gone by and those to-day, make the description of the dead past read like a description of the living present. The volume before us virtually concludes with the story of Joan of Arc. It is understood that Mr. Watson took up French history because of his interest in the French Revolution. If the volume describing that epoch shall be as dramatic and as eloquent as the chapters upon the mediæval deliverers of France, the knowledge of French history may become more general on the Southern farms than it is to-day in our Northern universities.

Literary Notes

—W. H. Mallock is to edit a new London weekly modeled after the "Spectator."

—Mr. Arthur Waugh writes to the "Critic" from London:

> Mark Twain, who has been staying for the last few weeks in seclusion in Surrey, is occupied upon a volume recounting his adventures during his tour round the world. He works upon it continuously, and hopes to see it published in December. There are so many people who feel that the peculiar humor of Mr. Clemens has of late been wasted upon fields uncongenial and difficult, that the announcement that he is once more returning to the form of literature which he has made so insistently his own will be greeted with a hearty welcome.

—"There is some possibility," says the London "Echo," "that Count Tolstoï may visit England this Christmas. At any rate, he is thinking of going to Sweden some time in the autumn, and an effort will certainly be made to extend his visit to this country. Fortunately, the veteran Russian novelist and prophet, who has lately abandoned his long novel to write a semi-religious book for children, speaks English pretty fluently."

—Literary items of recent news are cabled by the New York "Tribune's" London correspondent:

> Mr. Ruskin's health has improved during the summer to such an extent that he is now revising some of his earlier works at his home among the lakes. Mr. Andrew Lang's biography of Lockhart, on which he has been at work a long time, will be published in October. Lockhart, while best known as the biographer of Sir Walter Scott, was intimate with famous men of his time, and in correspondence with many of them. He left a great mass of literary material, of which Mr. Lang has made full use. Dr. Conan Doyle has finished at Haslemere, where he is building his future home, the manuscript of a new historical novel of the French Empire. It will have the title of "Boulogne: A Story of the Empire."

Books Received

For the Week ending September 11

AMERICAN BAPTIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY, PHILADELPHIA
Benedict, Anne K. The Hathaways' Sister. 75 cts.
ARENA PUBLISHING CO., BOSTON
Waite, Carlton. A Silver Baron. 50 cts.
HENRY T. COATES & CO., PHILADELPHIA
Castlemon, Harry. The Mystery of Lost River Canyon.
THOMAS Y. CROWELL & CO., NEW YORK
Spahr, Charles B. An Essay on the Present Distribution of Wealth in the United States. $1.50.
EATON & MAINS, NEW YORK
Beet, Joseph A., D.D. Nature and Christ. 75 cts.
Maxwell, Ellen B. Three Old Maids in Hawaii. $1.50.
Leavitt, John McDowell, D.D. The Christian Democracy. $1.50.
Epworth League Reading Course, 1896–97: The Vision of Christ in the Poets, by Charles M. Stuart; The Social Law of Service, by R. T. Ely; Torch-Bearers of Christendom, by R. H. Doherty; In League with Israel, by Annie F. Johnston. $3.80 for set.
GEORGE H. ELLIS, BOSTON
Dresser, Horatio W. The Perfect Whole. $1.50.
R. F. FENNO & CO., NEW YORK
Farjeon, B. L. The Betrayal of John Fordham. $1.25.
HENRY FROWDE, NEW YORK
Bible Illustrations.
GINN & CO., BOSTON
Humphreys, Willard. Selections from Quintus Curtius's History o Alexander the Great.
HARPER & BROS., NEW YORK
Carleton, Will. The Old Infant, and Similar Stories. $1.25.
Sangster, Margaret E. With My Neighbors. $1.25.
Rolfe, William J. Shakespeare the Boy. $1.25.
Hutton, Laurence. Literary Landmarks of Venice. $1.
WILLIAM B. HARRISON, NEW YORK
Parmele, Mary P. The Evolution of an Empire. 75 cts.
J. B. LIPPINCOTT CO., PHILADELPHIA
Hungerford, Mrs. (The Duchess). A Lonely Maid. 50 cts.
LONGMANS, GREEN & CO., NEW YORK
Lyall, Edna. The Autobiography of a Truth. 30 cts.
MACMILLAN & CO., NEW YORK
Leibnitz, Gottfried Wilhelm. New Essays Concerning Human Understanding. Translated by Alfred G. Langley. $3.25.
Ratzel, Prof. Friedrich. The History of Mankind. Translated by A. J. Butler. Introduction by E. B. Tylor. Vol. I. $4.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, NEW YORK
Putnam, Irene. Songs Without Answer. $1.
Rudd, Jean Porter. The Tower of the Old Schloss. $1.25.
Irving, Washington. Columbus. $1.50.
Reid, Captain Mayne. The Bush Boys. $1.25.
Reid, Captain Mayne. The Boy Hunters. $1.25.
FLEMING H. REVELL CO., NEW YORK
Townsend, Prof. L. T., D.D. Evolution or Creation? $1.25.
Smith, Lee S. Through Egypt to Palestine. $1.25.
Lyall, Edna. How the Children Raised the Wind. 50 cts.
Scofield, William C. The Holy Spirit in the New Testament Scriptures. $1.
Parker, Joseph. Tyne Folk. 75 cts.
CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, NEW YORK
Holland, J. G. Arthur Bonnicastle. 75 cts.
Holland, J. G. Sevenoaks. 75 cts.
Stories by English Authors. The Sea. 75 cts.
Stories by English Authors. Germany. 75 cts.
Hibbard, George A. Lenox. Illustrated by W. S. V. Allen. 75 cts.
Robertson, George C. Elements of Psychology. Edited by C. A. F. Rhys Davids. $1.
Burnett, Frances Hodgson. That Lass o' Lowrie's. $1.25.
T. E. WATSON, THOMSON, GA.
Watson, Thomas E. The Story of France. Vol. I. $1.
THOMAS WHITTAKER, NEW YORK
Mulchahey, James. The Inspiration of History. $1.

The Religious World

Anglican Orders A brief dispatch from Rome announces that the Pope has issued a decision upon the question of the validity of Anglican orders. He says: "After long study, I must confirm the decrees of my predecessors that all ordinations made under the Anglican rite are absolutely invalid." It is stated that Leo XIII. embodies in his decision a perfectly natural but, under the circumstances, almost ludicrous appeal to the English clergy to return to the Roman Church, and thus obtain that validity of ordination which, as he believes, cannot otherwise be had. The whole subject has been under discussion for centuries, but, as our readers know, has recently been actively revived. When a more complete account of the Pope's declaration reaches America, we shall comment fully on this important topic.

American Board Meeting Many great leaders of religious thought in America will be in attendance at the eighty-seventh annual meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, which convenes in the First Congregational Church of Toledo, O., October 6. Dr. Richard S. Storrs, of Brooklyn, will preside over the deliberations of the body, which will be in session three days. Among the delegates to this meeting will be: Dr. William Hayes Ward; President Franklin Fisk, of the Chicago Theological Seminary; Dr. Washington Gladden, of Columbus; Dr. Daniel Bradley, of Grand Rapids; Dr. N. Boynton, of Detroit; Dr. E. P. Goodwin, Dr. F. P. Noble, and others. Between five hundred and seven hundred visitors are expected, among whom will be found prominent corporate and honorary members, missionaries, many well-known mission workers of the Woman's Board of the Interior, and no less than one hundred clergymen. The annual sermon will be preached by Dr. Edward N. Packard, of Syracuse, N. Y., Tuesday evening, October 6. Among the matters that will doubtless receive attention will be the Armenian massacres and the destruction of the missions and educational institutions at Harpoot. Mr. C. H. Whitaker is Chairman, and the Rev. George B. Brown Secretary, of the local committee of arrangements.

The Jewish Holy Season For two weeks past the Jews have been celebrating their holy season. Beginning with the 7th of September, their religious New Year, the synagogues have been crowded with devout worshipers, assembled for what may be well termed their annual revival. According to Jewish tradition it is 5,657 years since the creation of the world, this calculation having been made from the genealogies found in the Bible. The celebration of the day was most solemn, as it is considered sanctified by the memories of the year just past, together with the idea that on this day God sits in judgment upon the deeds and thoughts of men. Nine days thereafter are observed as semi-holidays, being called the "Days of Penitence," all of which form a preparation for the climax of these holy days in that holiest of Sabbaths, the Day of Atonement. It is on this day that the destiny of men is sealed by God, in accordance with the judgment passed upon the faithful and the faithless. The universality of the observance of this holy season is its most striking feature. The most orthodox and the extreme radical alike listen to the stirring blast of the cornet and the traditional melodies of the fast-day, pitched in a minor key. Many of these airs are thousands of years old, and are marked by a weird harmony especially affecting to those associating them with previous days of similar tenor. As a reaction from this period of fasting and humiliation, the Feast of Tabernacles follows, four days after the "Day of Atonement." It is the Harvest Festival or Thanksgiving Feast of the Jews. While they are commanded to erect booths of evergreen as a reminder of the mode of life in the Wilderness, the special characteristic of the Feast is the distribution of large sums in charity, the more fortunate giving of the abundance with which they have been blessed in recognition of God's goodness displayed towards them. By these fasts and feasts the new season of religious activity is opened, to be followed by the regular observance of the weekly Sabbaths and occasional festivals which succeed.

Dr. William C. Young In the death of the Rev. Dr. William C. Young, which occurred at Danville, Ky., on September 16, Center College loses a brilliant President, the Presbyterian Church a strong preacher, and the cause of education in the South a prominent leader. He was, in fact, one of the most prominent educators in the South, and had done much to make Center College the famous institution she has become. Dr. Young's education was thorough, and he was carefully directed through youth and young manhood. His father, Dr. John C. Young, like himself, was once President of Center College, and was also a Moderator of the Old School Presbyterian Assembly. His mother was a daughter of the famous John J. Crittenden, United States Senator from and Governor of the State of Kentucky. After his graduation from Center College and Danville Seminary, Dr. Young served with distinction in the pastorate at Madison, Ind.; Chicago, Ill., in the Fullerton Avenue Church; and in Louisville, Ky. In 1892, after an exceedingly sharp contest, Dr. Young was elected Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly at Portland, Oregon. He was a strict conservative in matters of Biblical criticism, and his opponents refused to make his election unanimous. He was one of the main participants in the Briggs case in those days that tried so many Presbyterian souls. He had not been able to attend to the active duties of his office for more than two years, and his death was not unexpected.

Church Membership of the General Theological Library There are now eighty-four perpetual church members of the Theological Library at 53 Mount Vernon Street, Boston, the pastors of which can use the library forever free of charge. These churches are located in the States of Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Connecticut. Of Congregational there are 31, Unitarian 15, Episcopal 12, Methodist 11, Baptist 6, Universalist 3, Reformed Presbyterian 2, Presbyterian, Reformed Episcopal, Disciples, and New Jerusalem 1 each. These memberships are being multiplied, and ere long will include the greater part of those in Boston and vicinity, and eventually the larger part of those in New England. A church may be constituted a member by its own contribution, or by an interested friend, in many cases making it a memorial of some departed friend. The Library now numbers about fourteen thousand volumes, chiefly on religious and theological literature, and the reading-room receives regularly one hundred periodicals on like subjects.

Hope Hall Is the appropriate name of the home for ex-convicts which Mrs. Ballington Booth is establishing on the high ground lying between the Harlem and Hudson Rivers on the upper end of Manhattan Island. It is a lovely old frame dwelling-house, and in location and general arrangement is admirably suited to the special purpose for which it is being fitted up. Several weeks ago The Outlook spoke of Mrs. Booth's purpose to found a home for released prisoners where they might receive much-needed sympathy and help in securing the means of making an honest living. Hope Hall will be their temporary home, and it has, perhaps, no exact parallel in this country. Mrs. Booth's prison work is divided into two parts, the first being carried on among the men in prison. So far has this work gone that a prison league has been established among the inmates at Sing Sing for spiritual purposes. Each member of the league (600 in number) subscribes for "The Gazette," the Volunteer organ; and many good books are being read by them. A marked change has come over many of them who are beginning to see that some one has sympathy for them and will give them help. If effort for their spiritual, moral, and material welfare should cease at the prison gates, it would, perhaps, in most cases fail of ultimate good; for it is when the poor ex-convict faces an unfriendly, unsympathetic world with his awful burden of shame and disgrace that the severest trials come. It is almost impossible for him to secure employment, because no one will trust him or cares to have him about. He needs sympathy, encouragement, and help. There is no place where he can go in the assurance of finding it, and this is indeed a pitiable fact. It is the testimony of prison officials that eighty to ninety per cent. of released prisoners go forth with the determination to lead honest, respectable lives, but most of them are driven back into crime for lack of a friendly, brotherly hand to help them. It is just on this unoccupied ground of needed helpful Christlike service that Hope Hall will stand. Here Mrs. Booth's "boys," as she fondly calls them, will find a warm welcome, when released from prison, if they are determined to live right and seek honest bread. A careful record will be kept of their whole history, and, when they deserve them, recommendations will be made to business men seeking help. Meantime they will be employed about Hope Hall so as to help make their living. Mrs. Booth is now making an effort to secure contributions with which to fit up and maintain Hope Hall, and would be pleased to receive anything that might be serviceable either in furnishing this home, or of use to the men who will occupy it. Carnegie Hall has been secured for a great mass-meeting on the evening of November 9, when a special appeal will be made for this enterprise. Certainly such a noble Christian ministry will not be crippled for the want of converted gold and silver to help it forward.

Catholic Schools That the authorities of the Roman Catholic Church are taking a deeper interest than ever in the education of the children of their denomination there appears to be little doubt. Attention has been called in these columns to Archbishop Ireland's establishment of free parochial schools in his diocese, to be supported from voluntary contributions by the faithful. Another equally significant sign of the times is the action of the convention of the priests of the Archdiocese of St. Louis, which met for the first time in forty years to revise the rules that govern both the clergy and laity. It was the declaration that hereafter no Roman Catholic children shall be sent to the public schools, unless excused for good and sufficient reasons. Accompanying this declaration as a corollary was the order that schools must be built in every parish in the diocese. The reasons for not sending children to them must be submitted to a commission appointed by the Archbishop. Unless the excuse be considered adequate, non-compliance with the requirement will carry a penalty. When asked what this penalty would be, the Archbishop replied: "I am not prepared to say. It is a matter which remains with the confessor," he added. "If he learns that one of those for whom he is responsible disregards the mandates of the Church, he may feel that he can no longer be responsible for him, and refuse him absolution. It is something that will have to work itself out." A general enforcement throughout the country of the rule adopted in the diocese of St. Louis would draw away a considerable population from the public schools, and might eventually raise the question for practical decision whether parents taxed for schools they do not patronize should not be exempt from the burden.

Dr. Brewster and the Bishopric It is rumored, apparently on good authority, that Dr. Chauncy J. Brewster, rector of Grace Episcopal Church on Brooklyn Heights, will in all probability be chosen by the Diocesan Convention, to convene shortly at Buffalo, to the Bishopric of Western New York, as successor of the late Bishop A. Cleveland Coxe, who was consecrated Bishop in 1865. This is an important diocese, embracing fourteen large counties, in which in 1890 there were 1,104,796 people living. It is an interesting fact that Dr. Brewster is a lineal descendant of the eldest son of Elder Brewster, pastor of the Pilgrim Fathers. He is forty-eight years of age, a native of Connecticut, a graduate of Yale and Berkeley Divinity School. He has served churches in Westchester County, N. Y., Baltimore, Md., Detroit, Mich., and Brooklyn, his present charge. While in Michigan he was chosen to represent the diocese of that State in the General Convention of the Church. Many clergymen have expressed themselves as favoring Dr. Brewster for Bishop because they consider him just the man for the place.

Drumtochty Kirk Ian Maclaren's readers will be interested to know that there is a vacancy here, and a competition for it. Drumtochty does not appear on the map, but the place immortalized by that name is Logiealmond, a little village of Perthshire, in the heart of Scotland, about six miles from Methven, the nearest railway station. Here, with a decreasing population, now counting but 500 with women and children included, the number of kirks has been increasing, and at present there are four of them. It is the United Presbyterian, colloquially known as the "U. P.," which has become vacant, and its congregation has petitioned the Presbytery of Perth to "moderate in a call," i.e., to authorize the call of a pastor. The petition states that the church numbers sixty-five in full communion, and guarantees a stipend of £70, besides a manse reckoned at £14, with a garden and "a small green field." There are a number of unemployed U. P. "probationers" to whom this is not uninviting. A salary of $400, parsonage included, is probably the Drumtochty equivalent of twice that sum in rural America. But the sectarian divisions the call reveals, and the resulting enfeeblement, are as deplorable in Scotland as in this country.

The Boys' Brigade in Canada

To see the chief executive—the Governor-General—of a nation as strong as Canada has now become, standing with uncovered head in the midst of a hollow square of boys, talking to them in deep earnestness about the aims and purposes of the Boys' Brigade, was to obtain a fresh and interesting view of this many-sided organization. It was recently, in the charming little city of Sarnia, Ontario, that I heard the Earl of Aberdeen making this address. He spoke simply, earnestly, effectively, of the noble standard the boys of Canada should have before them, and showed how practical the work of this organization was made in molding character and habits for the future. It was the first visit of the Governor-General to the place, and while there was civic recognition of the arrival of their distinguished guest, yet the main interest centered in the exercises attendant upon the work of the Brigade.

The Boys' Brigade movement has attracted much attention in Canada. It has steadily gained in strength, too, since the first company was organized in St. John, N. B., in May, 1889. The annual meeting of the national organization has just been held in the city of Toronto, September 9–10. The report of Captain T. W. Nisbet, Brigade Secretary for the Dominion, showed that there are now in Canada 134 companies of the Boys' Brigade, with 416 officers and nearly 5,000 members. The organization is divided into five battalions—St. John, N. B.; Hamilton and Toronto, Ontario; Montreal, Quebec, and Vancouver in British Columbia. There are two colored companies, and two composed wholly of Indian boys.

The Brigade in Canada has, perhaps, a slower growth than in the United States, due to two main causes—the smaller population and greater conservatism. But the splendid principles of the organization are being more and more widely recognized all over the Dominion, and the growth is steady and stable.

There has been liberal recognition of the movement among men who stand high in the political life of the country. The Governor-General is at the head of the Brigade movement in Canada, being the President of the organization for the Dominion, and Vice-President for Great Britain. That he takes a practical as well as a sympathetic interest was shown by the recent financial report, which credited him with a gift of $300 annually for the maintenance of the Brigade headquarters office in Sarnia. Many members of Parliament and many men prominent in the commercial as well as the political life of the country contribute to the support of the organization, and lend their influence to its advancement.

On the recent visit of the Governor-General to Sarnia, the members of the local Company turned out in a body to escort him from the railway station to the Brigade Headquarters. About $15,000 has been expended in erecting and fitting up the Sarnia headquarters of the organization. There is a fine system of baths, a large and well-equipped gymnasium, reading-rooms, recreation-rooms, assembly hall, and so on. The Governor-General gives annually a silver medal, suspended from the dark-green plaid ribbon which is the insignia of the Scottish clan of which he is a representative, to the boy who during the year has had the best record for good conduct and efficiency.

During the year closing with the annual meeting just held, fifty-nine companies have been organized, showing a quite remarkable growth during the twelvemonth.

The organization, established but a little over a decade ago by the young Scotsman, W. A. Smith, of Glasgow, has been rapidly spreading over the world. The firm and steady growth in Canada is excellent proof of its vitality. W. S. H.

Brief Mention

The Protestant Episcopal Church Congress will hold its next meeting in Norfolk, Va., on November 17.

The Rev. F. G. Alger, formerly located at Oneida, Ill., has accepted the call to the Congregational church of Blackstone, Mass.

The Rev. Dr. Adam Clarke Bledsoe (Methodist), who has just died at Charlottesville, Va., was one of the noted Methodist preachers of Virginia. He was popularly known as "the sweet singer of the Virginia Conference."

The new Episcopal Cathedral of the diocese of Tennessee, at Memphis, will cost $100,000, and will be built of stone taken from the quarries of the State. The exterior will be of rough-hewn stones, and the interior will be polished stone and marble.

Princeton Theological Seminary opened a new school year on September 17 with the largest class in its history. The class has seventy-five candidates for the ministry. At the annual convocation on the 18th Professor B. B. Warfield delivered the principal address.

The thirteenth annual Convention of the Christian and Missionary Alliance will be held in the Gospel Tabernacle, New York, September 27 to October 11, except that Sunday services on September 27 and October 4 will be held in the American Theater, and on October 11 in Carnegie Hall. The Alliance has three hundred missionaries in the foreign field.

A mob attacked the American Presbyterian church at Agnas Calientes, Mexico, on the night of September 15, broke windows and doors with stones, and also attacked the house of the pastor, the Rev. D. H. Sharp. The next night all the windows of the Morelos College in the same place were broken. Several arrests have been made, and Minister Ransom has been appealed to to secure the punishment of the offenders.

The Harvard Christian Association sends a cordial greeting to all newcomers to the University. Members of the Association will be at the Association rooms in Holden Chapel from Monday, September 28, to Thursday, October 1, between 9 A.M. and 1 P.M. They will be glad to be of any assistance to students in securing boarding-houses, looking after baggage, and by giving any information helpful and interesting to newcomers.

The Rev. Dr. Elwood Worcester, who has recently accepted the rectorship of St. Stephen's Church, Philadelphia, which the Rev. Dr. S. D. McConnell left to take charge of Holy Trinity Church, Brooklyn, became chaplain and professor of philosophy at the Lehigh University in the fall of 1890. He leaves that place for his Philadelphia charge. Dr. Worcester is scarcely more than thirty years old. He holds the degree of Ph.D. from one of the German universities, and is a graduate of Columbia University and the General Theological Seminary in this city. He has made a close study of Biblical criticism, and is generally accounted a Broad Churchman.

The Rev. John C. Logie, a missionary of the United Presbyterian Church, died at Bwemba, Congo Free State, on July 15. He was born in Dundee, Scotland, about 1865. Three years ago he entered the mission field. He prepared for the work in the East of London Institute, then volunteered for the Congo Balolo Mission in Central Africa. The field of his work was among the widespread Balolo people in the vast forested region south of the northern bend of the Congo, where the Batwa dwarfs were discovered. Mr. Logie rapidly acquired the language of the country, and did good work among the natives. In some of his missionary tours of the southern tributaries of the Congo he went where no white man had ever been seen before. He finally fell a victim to the climate, being the seventh out of twenty-five missionaries in that field to die within the past year.

The Home Club

Women's Clubs' Programmes

In this department, in the issue of The Outlook of August 22, a request was made that secretaries of women's clubs who had arranged their winter programmes should forward to The Outlook the programmes, with a view to the exchange of information on this extremely important work. A number of programmes have been received, and we hope that our readers who are in a position to aid us in this effort to bring women's clubs into closer relation will forward their programmes as soon as they are ready. The Fortnightly Club of Bennington, Vt., makes its sixth annual announcement for the winters of '96 and '97. This club opens October 3 with Vacation Experiences; October 17, Current Events; October 31, An Afternoon with Sculptors; November 14, Literature; November 28, Social Science; December 12, History and Travel; January 2, Education; January 16, Current Events; January 30, Art (a special department of art of this afternoon is music—Schubert's "Songs of Nature"); February 13, Literature; February 27, Social Science; March 13, History and Travel; March 27, Education; April 10, the annual meeting; April 24, Current Events. The programme is beautifully printed on rough-edge paper. The membership of the Club is about one hundred and seventy-five, and embraces some well-known names.

The Whittier Literary Club of London, O., sends in its programme for '95 and '96. This is a mixed club. The dues are fifty cents a year, which meets the expenses of the programmes. The meetings, like those of the Fortnightly, are held bi-monthly. The constitution is simple. Each meeting closes with a conversation. The meetings are held in the evening, for the convenience of the male members of the club. The ministers connected with all of the Protestant churches in the community are members; also several professionals, teachers, and others, are represented in the club. The club was organized in 1892. For October of 1895 the subject was "The Age of Johnson," but one man taking part in the programme for the month. The conversation for the month of October was on "Rasselas;" for November, The Letters of Junius and their Influence; other topics were: the Orators, Pitt, Fox, and Sheridan; an Essay on Edmund Burke; on the Trial of Warren Hastings, with music. The second meeting of the month considered the writings of Oliver Goldsmith, with the historians and poets of his day. The subject of conversation was "Nature in Burns's Poetry." "Horace Walpole and His Day" was the subject of the meeting for the first evening in December; "Walter Scott" for the first meeting in January. A second meeting in January was given to the consideration of Thomas Moore, with readings from Southey's "Battle of Blenheim." The conversation was on "Lalla Rookh." Byron, Shelley, Lamb, and De Quincey, with conversations on "The Prisoner of Chillon," made up the programme for the first meeting in February. Wordsworth, Walter Savage Landor, and Campbell were the poets considered on the second evening in February, with conversation on the current events of this age. Macaulay was the chief theme of the first evening in March, the subject being varied by papers on Agnes Strickland, Mary Somerfield, and Anna Jameson, Hugh Miller and the scientists. The second meeting in March considered John Stuart Mill, Sir William Hamilton, the Bronté sisters, and there was a debate on the question, "Does Bulwer excel Scott as a novelist?" The conversation was on Heroes and Hero-Worship. On the last evening in March the Brownings were the principal subjects of the evening, with a sketch of Charles Kingsley and a conversation on "Hypatia." April 14 considered George Eliot, Charles Dickens, and Thackeray, with conversation on "Daniel Deronda." At the last meeting of the club the subjects for discussion were an imaginary visit from Samuel Johnson to the Whittier Club, "What was the matter with Carlyle?" and "Would Dickens find any characters in our club?" A dinner closed the year. Mr. S. W. Durflinger, President; Mrs. MacToland, Vice-President. The club has aroused a community interest, and has been unusually successful.

The President of the Woman's Literary Club of Baltimore, Md., sends a very interesting letter, which we are glad to publish:

Dear Outlook: In your issue of August 22 you invite a discussion "on the subject of the club's relation to the life of the community," making special inquiries as to the legitimate field of work for a woman's club, asking, "Shall the club confine its discussion to one field? Shall the club consider the problems of the community, the schools, the street, the health of the town? Are the establishing of classes for the training of servants and the attempt to co-operate for the solution of the domestic servant question feasible?" etc., etc.

The trend of these inquiries lies in the direction of woman's work, as distinguished from culture or literary and artistic work, and any one of the topics you have mentioned may properly occupy the attention of any association of women calling itself a club, but their work will be of value in the community only in proportion to the fitness of the members to deal with the topic chosen, and according to the earnestness with which they pursue their object. Such an association may undoubtedly "consider the problems of the community, the schools, the streets, the health of the town," with profit to the community, providing that it brings the science of these subjects to its aid and considers them seriously. Nor would it be "a step backward" for such an association "to devote a winter's work to the subjects of domestic science," as you further inquire.

To accomplish results of any value the aims of an association should be in harmony with the wishes and gifts of its members, and should be clearly understood by them; any division of the subject should be placed under the care of a competent chairman who would take a special interest in the class of details it involved, while the leader of the association should be equally interested in the success of the various committees. The rules or code of every association should be as few and simple as the attainment of its ends permits, but every member should carefully uphold these rules.

I think it unlikely that results of permanent value will be obtained in a club where too many objects, or those not closely kindred, are combined; also, the strongest intellectual work is probably produced in associations where the membership is limited, as was shown in a recent general Convention of Women's Clubs.

In reply to your remark, "The woman's club that confines itself to a discussion of literary topics only is almost a thing of the past," and your question as to whether this is "a gain or loss in the measure of value of the club to its members," I may say that the Woman's Literary Club of Baltimore, over which I have the honor to preside, is now in its seventh year; it deals exclusively with literary topics, or with thought which enters into culture, and this it endeavors to present upon its literary side—as in art, music, education, philanthropy, etc., in the hope of stimulating wise and helpful opinion that may produce intelligent action beyond the club, and a broader application of true culture to life. The interest of our members has greatly increased from year to year, as proved by the large, constant attendance, the careful thought with which many papers that are offered in our general gatherings are prepared, and the serious library and committee work which are gladly undertaken in the presentation of some of our subjects.

Ours was the first woman's club to organize in Maryland, and while we have always steadily kept to our aim, opinions have been brought forward which have stimulated studies in directions leading to practical activity not distinctly contemplated in the coming together of the founders of our literary association, and from us, as the mother of clubs in our State, have grown The Arundell, The Quadriga, the Baltimore Branch of the Folk-Lore, leaving us the smaller membership and the unity of atmosphere most conducive to literary production.

The refreshment and pleasure which our members find in our meetings, especially those literary workers whose names are known beyond our limits, is not only a proof of our vitality, but has been a matter of comment to visitors from other cities, who have frequently asked the secret of our full gatherings, and what penalty we impose upon members for non-attendance!

I send with this a copy of the President's address, delivered at our last annual salon, as it embodies the attitude of our club in its literary studies.

Hoping that you may find these suggestions responsive to your inquiries, and helpful in organizing other associations that may be productive of the quiet pleasure we have found in our own clubs,

I am very sincerely yours,
Mrs. Lawrence Turnbull,
President of the Woman's Literary Club of Baltimore.

Public Sentiment and the Law

The Health Boards of the several cities are making every effort to protect consumers from the greed and ignorance of dealers. Women's Health Protective Associations are making every effort to compel butchers and grocers not to expose their stock on the street, where there is always more or less pollution from dust and dirt. The transit of food products through the streets could be improved. The wagons are frequently open, and we are all familiar with the grocers' and butchers' baskets deposited on the sidewalk while the small boy indulges in a game of marbles or a fight. Milk wagons are rarely clean. What we should do is to refuse to trade with any dealer who does not protect his food products from every danger of contamination. The man who sells will meet the requirements of those who buy; his standards are regulated by the demands of his customers. Every woman who buys the products of a bakery should have a copy of the report of the Factory Inspectors of New York State on bakeries. She should also have a copy of the new law which is based on this report, and the testimony of the journeymen bakers. The knowledge of the conditions that exist, and the protection given by the law, which can be enforced only when public sentiment demands it, will remove one of the most prolific sources of disease.

Books for Women

We are frequently asked to furnish lists of books for reading circles, girls' clubs, and boys' clubs. A book has been published that should be owned by every reading circle and girls' club—"A List of Books for Girls and Women, and Their Clubs," edited by Augusta H. Leypoldt and George Iles. The titles of the books are accompanied by descriptive and critical notes, so that any group will find themselves well guided through the labyrinthine paths of a winter's reading. (The Library Bureau, Boston. 50 cents (paper) and $1 (cloth).

Grape-Juice

"X." gave a receipt for the making of grape-juice which was published in The Outlook of August 15, 1896. Will "X." kindly answer some questions which have been asked by members of this Club? Did "X." mean by bottles with patent stops the kind used for the bottling of lager-beer? Will "X." kindly send to the Club for publication some of her receipts for using grape-juice in cooking? Will "X." kindly inform other readers whether Concords are the only grapes to be used successfully in the making of grape-juice? Cannot Catawbas, Isabellas, and other grapes be used with equal success?

A Nugget of Wisdom

Overdoing is undoing. A cake burned to a crisp is as much a failure as a cake half baked. An audience wearied, confused, and vexed with too many points in a sermon, or too many addresses at an anniversary, is an audience hindered instead of helped. It is a great faculty to "make things go," but one of the ways to do it is to stop before going too far.—The Sunday-School Times.

Rye Bread in Germany

The increase in the consumption of rye bread in Germany is brought to the attention of the farmers in this country by the commercial agent of the United States at Weimar. The thrift of the Germans leads them to obtain for their money the best return.

Onions

The New York "Medical Times" says that onions are the best nervine known; that they are useful in coughs, colds, and influenza; that they whiten the complexion if eaten every other day.

For the Little People

Black-Eyed Susans

By Alix Thorn

In merry June the daisies stand
  Knee-deep in fragrant clover,
All gossiping with honey-bees
  And birds the broad fields over.

But in the August days I see,
  In black and yellow splendor,
Tall, stately flowerets in the grass,
  Yet miss the daisies slender.

I think the sun's too loving rays
  Have tanned their baby faces,
And turned the snowy ruffled caps
  To frills of yellow laces.

Till on some quiet summer night,
  Hid in the field's sweet mazes,
Straight into black-eyed susans all
  Were changed the swaying daisies.

The Prize Contest

In The Outlook for July 11 two prizes were offered for the best corrections of the erroneous answers submitted at a school examination. The first-prize paper is published below:

"Who were the Pilgrims?" "A dirty, filthy set who lived under the ground."

The Pilgrims were the people who were forced to leave England because they could not worship as they believed right. They went first to Holland, but finally, in 1620, came to America, landing at Plymouth, where they established a colony. The answer given is wrong (1) because the Pilgrims were not a dirty, filthy set who lived under the ground; (2) because it tells nothing of whom the Pilgrims were.

"Name a domestic animal useful for clothing, and describe its habits." "The ox. He don't have any habits, because he lives in a stable."

The sheep. It is a herbivorous, ruminant quadruped. The answer given is wrong because the writer does not understand the meaning of the word "habits" as applied to animals.

"If you were traveling across the desert, where would you choose to rest?" "I would rest on a stool."

I would rest at an oasis. The answer given is wrong because one would not be likely to find a stool in a desert.

"Describe the white race, and show that it is superior to other races." "A white man will nod at you when he meets you on the street."

The white race has fair skins and straight hair and regular features. They are very intelligent, and have attained a higher degree of civilization than any other race. The white race is superior to other races in that they lead all other races in education, manufactures, commerce, etc. The answer given is wrong because (1) the writer did not describe the white race; (2) nodding in the street is no mark of superiority.

"Of what is the surface of the earth composed?" "Dirt and people."

The surface of the earth is composed of land and water. The answer is wrong because people do not compose the earth's surface. The term "dirt" is ambiguous.

"Name a fruit which has its seed on the outside." "A seed-cake."

The strawberry is a fruit having its seed on the outside. The answer is wrong because a cake is not a fruit.

"Name five forms of water." "Hot water, cold water, faucet water, well water, and ice water."

Ice, snow, frost, dew, and steam are five forms of water. The answer given is wrong because only one form of water, the liquid, is given.

"Name and locate the five senses." "The eyes are in the northern part of the face, and the mouth in the southern."

The sense of sight is located in the eye. The sense of smell is located in the nose. The sense of taste is located in the tongue. The sense of hearing is located in the ear. The sense of touch is located on the surface of the body, but is most delicate in the ends of the fingers. The answer given is wrong because the senses are not named at all nor located correctly.

"Who were the mound-builders?" "History cannot answer these questions. Science only can."

The mound-builders were a race of people differing from any known race in their characteristics. The only traces of them are the mounds which lie in the valley of the Mississippi. They lived in prehistoric times. The answer given is wrong because it does not answer the question.

"Define 'flinch,' and use it in a sentence." "Flinch—to shrink. Flannel flinches when it is washed."

The men did not flinch from their duty. The answer given is wrong because flinch means to shrink in the sense of to withdraw, not to grow smaller.

"By what is the earth surrounded, and by what is it lighted?" "It is surrounded by water, and lighted by gas and electricity."

The earth is surrounded by atmosphere and lighted by the sun. The answer given is wrong because the earth is not surrounded by water nor lighted by gas and electricity.

"Name six animals of the Arctic zone." "Three polar bears and three seals."

The seal, polar bear, walrus, reindeer, musk-ox, and wolf are animals of the Arctic zone. The answer given is wrong because the writer has only named two different kinds of animals.

"What is yeast?" "Yeast is a vegetable flying about in the air, hitching itself onto everything."

Yeast consists, essentially, of collections of small cells of a vegetable nature known as yeast cells. They have the property of very rapid reproduction. The answer given is wrong because yeast does not fly about in the air, hitching itself on to everything.

"Why do you open the dampers in a stove when lighting a fire?" "To let the oxygen in and the nitrogen out."

You open the dampers of a stove when lighting a fire to produce a draft, which causes the fire to burn more readily. The answer given is wrong because opening the drafts produces no such change.

"What did the Constitution do for the country?" "It gave the President a head."

The Constitution defined the departments of the Government and pointed out the powers of the several States and the United States; and it regulated the financial, commercial, foreign, and domestic affairs of the country; in short, it is the foundation of our Government. The answer given is wrong because it would be impossible for the Constitution to give the President a head.

"What are the last teeth that come to a man?" "False teeth."

Wisdom teeth are the last teeth that come to a man. The answer given is wrong because false teeth are not real teeth, they are a manufactured article.

To these pure patriots, who,
Without bounty, without pay,
Without pension, without honor,
Went to their graves,
Without recognition even by their Country,
This stone is raised and inscribed,
After thirty years of waiting,
By one of themselves.

The error in the epitaph is that a stone could not be raised and inscribed by one of those who had gone to their graves, etc.

"The examination of a set of papers presented by the pupils in a cooking-class revealed some astonishing things; namely, that French women in cooking 'clarified their own fat,' that every kitchen used as a cooking-school 'should have room for six or eight girls to cook at once,' and that a certain dish 'could be eaten cold twice.' What are the errors in these statements?"

The error in the statement that French women in cooking "clarified their own fat" is that they clarify the fat used by themselves and not the fat of their own bodies, as the statement implies.

The error in the statement that every kitchen used as a cooking-school "should have room for six or eight girls to cook at once" is that every kitchen should have room for six or eight girls to do cooking at once.

The error in the statement that a certain dish "could be eaten cold twice" is that one dish can never be eaten but once.

ETHEL L. HIGGINS,
Age fourteen. Standish, Me.
Standish High School, first year.

The second prize is won by Helen F. Little, aged fourteen, of Winona, Minn.

Nep's Mistake

Nep and Betty were the warmest friends. They played together, tumbling over each other, jumping, barking at imaginary intruders, and rushing off yelping as if nothing less than the largest kind of deer were in the trees up the road. The people who knew them became greatly interested in their performances. Then the misfortunes of Nep's life began. Some one gave him candy. He liked it. Ever after he begged for the candy which came so easily for the begging. One day Betty, very sad and lonesome, came alone to the house. She was restless, and refused to respond to any of the attentions which were lavished upon her. The people began inquiring for Nep, and every one was sorry to hear he was ill. One day Betty, more sad than ever, appeared, and soon word came that Nep was dead. Then the children who loved Nep had a funeral, and the chief mourner was Betty. How she knew that there was to be a funeral no one could tell. She walked sadly along with the children, and sat by till the grave was filled. Then she went a little way off and sat there to watch the grave. Candy was the cause of Nep's departure. It is dangerous for a dog to be greedy. Betty plays about now, but not with her old freedom. Her companion is Dandy. This is a true story.

She was Remembered

I saw it on the bulletin-board at a hotel in the mountains. It was only a brown piece of paper, and almost lost amid the notices of hours of meals, rules and regulations for the management of the house, and business cards. This was what caught my eye:

In Memory of
BLACK BEAUTY.

For fourteen years the pet cat of this house. She was affectionate and kindly, and performed her duties faithfully.

That last meant, doubtless, that rats and mice were scarce where Black Beauty lived.

While we were at dinner, I felt something rub against my skirts, and there was another Black Beauty, with a white silk tie about her neck.

Cats were loved, you see, at that house.

A Pair of Orphans

A hunter in the Rockies shot a mother bear. He was very sorry when he found a little brother and sister bear without a mother. He took the baby bears home in his arms, and cared for them. When they were large enough to be left alone, he gave them to a man who owned a circus. The circus man gave them to the menagerie at Central Park, New York, and they are there now very happy, and have forgotten all about their baby days in the Rockies. Their names are West Knuttsford and Miss Primrose Knuttsford.

Correspondence

Vacant-Lot Farming

To the Editors of The Outlook:

"Trades-Union Wages on the Farm" has recently attracted some attention, and a pamphlet will shortly be published showing how much can be made on the vacant lots cultivated by the poor people, and, under equally favorable circumstances, by the regular farmers.

It is claimed that unskilled labor on these vacant-lot farms has made in many cases as high as $4 a day; but it must be remembered that the "Potato-Patchers," as they are called, had the advantage of the regular farmer because they worked upon valuable land. Land, whether used for agriculture, for mining, manufacturing, residences, or any other purpose, is valuable only when it enables the occupier to produce a great deal. For this reason, land on Wall Street has been sold at the rate of $12,000,000 per acre, although if put in crops it probably would not produce $25 a year. For the same reason the vacant-lot farmers in New York have been able to make high wages, whilst the farmers, pushed out by the high prices to worthless land at a distance from the cities, find it hard work to make ends meet.

It is to be regretted that more extended figures have not been furnished by the nearly fifty towns and cities which are now pursuing this form of relief; but the conclusions from such figures as we have are most significant.

A careful examination shows that the ordinary plot allotted to the vacant-lot farmers, one-third of an acre, will take less than ten days' full work of an able-bodied man in order to reach the full productiveness. This time would, of course, be decreased had he the use of a horse, and it would be greatly increased, with a corresponding increase of production, if he could have so simple an appliance as hot-beds. Without these appliances, however, and with the poorest and least skilled sort of labor, the cities report the following average rates as having been earned:

In New York.........	$1.16	per day	for each	worker.
" Brooklyn..........	1.47	"	"	"
" Boston.............	2.06	"	"	"
" Buffalo.............	1.37	"	"	"
" Detroit.............	1.61	"	"	"

While Omaha shows only 85 cents, and St. Louis gives the astonishing result of an average rate of wages of $5 a day.

The figures in the last two cities diverge so greatly from the average that there is probably some error, although it is explained that Omaha suffered greatly from the drought. It is not incredible that $5 a day or even more might have been earned, since we learn by the New York report that a man and his wife saved more than $4 a day off their plot on the Long Island farm.

Concerning the economic lesson to be learned, we quote the actual case of a farmer near Ghent, owning 160 acres of the average value of $20 per acre, making a total for the farm of $3,200. Of this 160 acres are cultivated. If this were to produce the same as the gross average of the New York vacant lots, viz., $83.52 per acre, the farmer would have $9,604.80, at the retail prices received by the vacant-lot cultivator. But, according to the United States Department of Agriculture, the farmer gets only 60 per cent. of the retail price, $5,762.88. Out of this he has to pay interest on mortgage, $78; taxes, $48; seed, $60; leaving $5,576.80 for wages, machinery, tools, food, clothing, insurance, repairs, and general expenses, and the reward of the two young men who do the work. That is what the farmer could get were he allowed to work the land which lies vacant and close to our cities.

Now let us see what he does get, after paying to the railroad "all the traffic will bear," and paying to the middlemen a big slice of what is left. The actual entire product of this farm, away from the center of population and probably badly tilled, was only $529, less $93 for the three items specified. Now these two young men are good, enterprising farmers, as farmers go, and that "profit" is the inducement that under present conditions is held out to the poor to go to the country.

BOLTON HALL.

—

Mortgages and the Currency

To the Editors of The Outlook:

About '63 my father mortgaged his farm in New York State. His children were small, and there was much sickness. Then the children had to be sent away to school, and the mortgage was not paid, but the interest was kept up, which satisfied the holder of the mortgage. The mortgage is still unpaid, my father is dead, and the mortgage on the home farm is the children's legacy. Is it justice, is it honesty, to compel the payment of that debt in the currency of to-day, dollar for dollar? This case is but one of many; there are hundreds of farms in the same vicinity which, like my father's, will not sell for one-fourth what they would thirty years ago, yet they are better improved, with better buildings. It seems to me that our financiers do not realize the struggle the thrifty middle class are making to keep from going under.

A. C. P. B.

Baton Rouge, La.

—

Foreign Trade and Exchange

To the Editors of The Outlook:

For eighteen years, 1861 to 1878, we had a depreciated paper currency. Austria and Italy have for long been on a paper basis. Russia, Japan, China, Mexico, have silver only. Nearly all the South American States are on paper or silver basis. In all of these instances international trade proceeds without interruption. In the main, prices of commodities are set in London in terms of pounds sterling. Australian wool, Argentine hides, American copper, Indian wheat, are bought in London, wholly regardless of the kind of money or price terms used in buying them at their place of production. Whatever they bring in the world market is placed to the London credit of the banker who has cashed the draft drawn by the exporter. The same remarks apply to New York, Paris, and other centers of international trade and exchange.

The prices paid at home in the local money, whatever it be, will be such as to leave a profit when converted into sterling exchange. Competition may well be trusted to keep the profit at a minimum; but this is a matter wholly apart from foreign exchange. Competition regulates profits equally in foreign as in domestic trade. It is a common mistake of the most careful economic writers to assume that business is done with mathematical accuracy, responding with delicate precision to every economic condition. Quite the contrary; it is a comparatively rough-shod affair. Much business is done at a net loss; small economies are overlooked; there is an element of speculation in nearly all business. Not uncommonly one market is much lower than another competing for the same trade. Even in normal times interest may be four per cent. in New York, six in Chicago, and seven in New Orleans on the same quality of paper. A share of railroad stock will be 60 to-day, 50 to-morrow, and 70 the day after, while the property itself remains unchanged. The volume of exports and imports is not regulated, probably not even influenced, by the variations in exchange. If a merchant require goods for his trade, his profits on them, and the need to maintain an unimpaired stock, are motives that put out of sight so trifling a matter as one or two per cent. difference in exchange. Larger price fluctuations due to other causes are a familiar matter. A persistent fall in prices will have the effect to make merchants carry less stock, but the transient ups and downs have no such result.

But the conclusive argument is from experience, that international trade with countries having not only a different money standard, but a depreciated or an irredeemable money in their own terms, is just as active and satisfactory as with those having the same standard.

IMPORTER.

—

The Question of Honesty

To the Editors of The Outlook:

I have read with much interest and attention the various editorials of The Outlook on the silver question, for they have seemed to me the most fair, reasonable, impartial, and patriotic of any of the current newspaper discussions.

I have also been interested in the "Notes and Queries" in your columns. The gold side seems to have had its "inning"—and a pretty long one—lately, and it seems only just that the other side should have a turn in self-defense on the most vital feature of the whole thing, and that is the "Repudiation" phase of it. Dr. van Dyke has recently expressed in The Outlook the common Eastern view of it—to wit, that the mainspring of the silver movement is the wish on the part of debtors, mainly in the West, to defraud their creditors, mainly in the East, by paying them in depreciated dollars.

All this sounds very weighty, appeals to the instinctive desire of the American people to be honest, and doubtless to thousands of good citizens who may not be so directly affected either way, but who have the laudable purpose to maintain the National credit.

So far has this idea prevailed that the term "sound money" has been appropriated by the gold men, without question—and in so doing they give a colossal example of begging the question, for the great point at issue is, which is sound money? It also seems to be assumed that Western debtors are generally actuated by the dishonest desire to repudiate about half their debts. The conviction that this wholesale assumption does injustice to the debtor class is my excuse for this article.

In the first place, the advocates of free coinage believe—and they can give weighty reasons for the belief—that their policy will ultimately restore the parity, and that there will then be no difference in the value of the two coins. But, without stopping to consider that, let us ask in what way free coinage could result in repudiation. Evidently only by having a permanent discount of fifty per cent. on silver, and by giving debtors the privilege of paying their gold debts in that silver. But stop now and consider whether even that course would be really repudiation.

In what does the value of a dollar consist? Evidently in its purchasing power. Its face value is merely nominal; its purchasing power is the real thing. Now the next proposition is that a fall in prices represents a corresponding increase in purchasing power of money. A rigidly just system in payment of debts would therefore allow payment in a nominal sum diminished in exact ratio to the increase in purchasing power, or, in other words, to the fall in prices. So well recognized is this fundamental law of equity in payment of debts that Professor Laughlin, himself one of the great gold champions of the present time, has proposed a multiple standard, consisting of a unit compounded of the ruling prices of a dozen or twenty of the standard commodities. Thus a man might equitably pay a hundred-dollar debt by paying a hundred and twenty or eighty dollars, or more or less either way, according to the variation of the nominal standard in purchasing power. He would be paying equitably because he would be returning the same purchasing power, though not the same nominal value in money.

A rise in prices represents a fall in the purchasing power of the dollar, and hence decreases the real value of the debt. Inflation causes a rise in prices, and hence does injustice to the creditor. Contraction produces a fall in prices, increases the power of the dollar, and hence does injustice to the debtor.

A change either way in the purchasing power of the standard does injustice to somebody. The great desideratum is a standard that will not vary. Obviously, if creditors should influence legislation to lower prices, they would be dishonest. If debtors

Gain

Nerve-strength by feeding your nerves upon pure, rich, red blood. Purify, enrich, and vitalize your blood by taking

Hood's
Sarsaparilla

The best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

Hood's Pills do not cause pain or gripe. All druggists. 25c.

should influence legislation to raise prices, they would be dishonest. Either course would be easily possible by legislative manipulations; either would be dishonest and subversive of government.

Now, passing these A B C propositions which nobody thinks of denying, how do they apply to the present situation? Have we a case of inflation or of contraction? Of contraction. Have we a case of rising or of falling prices? Of falling. Have we a case of increased or of decreased purchasing power of the dollar? Of increased. Have we a case of advantage to the creditor or the debtor? The creditor. To what extent? In the average. to just about the percentage in the fall of price of silver bullion.

Average prices have fallen just about fifty per cent. since the demonetization of silver, or since that act began fairly to produce its legitimate consequences. This is simply another way of saying that the gold dollar has appreciated in like ratio. Everything has fallen except gold. It, being the standard, has, of course, risen. Now, let us ask those who so sweepingly charge Western creditors with an attempt at repudiation, Who are the aggressors in this case? Instead of the silver movement being an aggressive effort on the part of debtors to pay fifty-cent dollars, it is a defensive movement on their part to prevent their creditors from making them pay two-hundred-cent dollars. Let us ask Dr. van Dyke and others who are solicitous to preserve equity, in what respect is a two-hundred-cent dollar a whit more honest than a fifty-cent dollar? Does any one question that the debtor would be paying double the purchasing power that he borrowed? "Let facts be submitted to a candid world."

Most of the debts, mortgages, and bonds which now hang like a body of death over the newer portions of our country were contracted from ten to twenty years ago, since which time prices have fallen half. If a Nebraska farmer borrowed a thousand dollars twenty years ago, when wheat was worth a hundred cents a bushel, and other things in proportion. he was borrowing a purchasing power, expressed in wheat, of a thousand dollars, Now, if he is compelled to pay the thousand dollars in gold, when wheat is worth only fifty cents a bushel, he is practically paying a purchasing power of two thousand dollars. In general terms, it may be asserted that the Western borrower is compelled, under the gold standard, and the fallen prices which it causes, to pay twice the purchasing power in wheat, corn, wool, horses, labor, all the essential products of his life's work, that he borrowed. Hence, even if the free coinage of silver does result in a permanent fifty-cent silver dollar, and if the debtor pays his gold debts in that depreciated currency, he is, after all, paying back the same quantity of labor and the products of labor that he borrowed. Five hundred dollars in gold or a thousand dollars in silver is worth as much now as a thousand dollars in gold then. If these things be true, what becomes of the charge of repudiation so flippantly hurled against the hard-working pioneers of civilization in our great West?

Who is dishonest, the debtor who is trying to pay his debt in a form that commands the same purchasing power for himself and the creditor, or the creditor who seeks to take advantage of circumstances by which he can force payment in a form, even though it be nominally the same, in reality twice the burden to the debtor and twice the advantage to himself? Does it not rather appear that the sentiment which several of your correspondents express is making its outcry, not so much because it is in danger of losing half of its Western investments, as that it is afraid it will not succeed in doubling their real value through an artificial fall of prices?

FAIR PLAY.

Chapel Cars

To the Editors of The Outlook:

Having seen in your paper several appreciative notices of the work being done by chapel cars under the auspices of the Baptist Publication Society, I thought it might be of interest to your readers to know the real facts in the case. Instead of being used to reach communities where the Gospel is not preached, so far as my observation goes, the chapel cars are used almost wholly as a means of sectarian propaganda in towns where there are already plenty of churches. S—— is a railroad town where there were Methodist Episcopal, Congregational, and Roman Catholic churches. Both the Protestant churches were small, one having less than fifty members. The chapel car comes, and another small church was started. Within a month a Congregational church of less than ten members was organized in a town of 150 people. By means of outside funds a small building is being erected. The chapel car is at work there. The only possible result is that a few may be prevented from joining what in many respects is a union enterprise. The car is then going to a town of seven thousand people, which has fourteen churches, to help in some mission work on the outskirts of the city. It has stopped at this city weeks at a time, within two blocks of the Baptist church, the evangelist helping in special meetings in the Baptist church, using the car as a lodging-place. This car once came to a town of 1,100 people, with five Protestant churches and, to my personal knowledge, not a single Baptist family, and held meetings The evangelist, a man who, I am glad to say, has been dropped from the work, reported in the denominational paper fifty conversions. The people in the place did not know of one. These are instances that I can vouch for as occurring within a radius of fifty miles. I have heard of others similar.

In justice to the excellent Baptist brethren, it is right to say that I have known of one Baptist Home Missionary Superintendent who did not believe in this kind of work, as it tended to multiply more weak churches than can be properly cared for.

In the interest of true religion and of church unity, ought not such facts to be known?

E.

Colorado College

To the Editors of The Outlook:

Having spent a month in this place, and having seen a good deal of the splendid organization and magnificent work of Colorado College, I wish to add my testimony to the claim of Colorado College upon the interest of all friends of Christian education at the present time.

There are all sorts of colleges and universities in the West; and some which appeal to Eastern friends for aid prove on examination to be mere land booms, or schemes for denominational extension, or the hobbies of individuals seeking office and position for themselves. There are none of these defects about Colorado College. It is the oldest institution of its kind in the State. It is broadly, wisely, and soundly administered. Its trustees are the leading business and professional men of the community. Its Faculty are men of high scholarship and earnest devotion Its course of study is thorough and progressive. Its students are sturdy, industrious young men and women, representing a wide territory. The College stands for the highest ideals of religious character, intellectual training, and public service.

If its present usefulness is to be maintained, if its unequaled opportunities are to be improved, if it is to become the most powerful force for intelligent Christian character between Chicago and San Francisco, as it promises to be, the securing of the remaining sixty thousand dollars necessary to complete the Pearsons fund of two hundred thousand dollars before next January is an absolute necessity.

I do not hesitate to commend this cause as the most solid, the most urgent, the most hopeful object to which persons intent on doing great and permanent good at this present moment can consecrate their gifts. The College has influential and wealthy friends in Colorado; but the business situation is such as to render it next to impossible for them to withdraw money from their enterprises at the present time. A large part of this fund must come from the East now. Once on its feet, the College is sure to have abundant support from its own locality, as soon as business conditions here improve.

The officers of the College are overburdened with

ANALYSTS and Health Authorities strongly emphasize the fact that the Royal Baking Powder is always uniform in leavening strength. It always does perfect work, each spoonful the same as every other. It makes every cake or batch of biscuits uniformly light, sweet and wholesome. This important quality results from a scientific combination of the most highly refined ingredients, and no other powder possesses it. Many of the cheaper-made baking powders, imperfectly combined, have spoiled upon the hands of the grocers.

anxiety and labor; and if some portion of this fund could come without the labor and expense of personal solicitation it would be a great encouragement and a great relief. In some way the money must come. The work already begun here cannot be suffered to decline; the opportunities before the College cannot be permitted to remain unimproved.

William D. W. Hyde.

Notes and Queries

1. In your issue of August 15, page 296, in speaking of Dr. Sanday's Romans, etc., you say, "Nearly all commentaries on Paul do lack imagination." Can you name some of those that supply this lack, with publisher and price? 2. Can you supply Henry W. Beecher's MS. on 7th of Romans, or who can? 3. Has Dr. Lyman Abbott any works on the Old Testament? 4. In answer to a query I noticed you mentioned a book on hymn-writers called "Laudes Domini." Please tell me where I can get it, and at what cost. 5. Which do you consider the best "History of Christian Doctrine" for a young minister to procure who can only afford one, and yet feels he needs such an authority? 6. In your answer to "X.," page 305, you say perfection (sinless) is attainable. If so, should we not attain it? What is sin? I don't understand your position on this. See 1 John i., 9; ii., 8; 1 Pet. ii., 21, 22.

W. S. A. C.

1. We cannot, but can recommend, as not devoid of imagination, Dr. Matheson's book, "The Spiritual Development of St. Paul" (Blackwood, Edinburgh; imported by booksellers at about $1.75). 2. Fords, Howard & Hulbert, New York, have all of Mr. Beecher's writings now in print. Do you mean to say MS.? 3. Dr. Abbott has written no commentary on the Old Testament. You may like to see his article in The Outlook of August 15 last. 4. "Laudes Domini," a collection of hymns for public worship, is published by the Century Company, New York, at $1.50. 5. We have recommended Professor Adolf Harnack's recent book to such inquirers. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, New York. 6. As to perfection, the New Testament idea of it, as may be seen by comparing the A. V. and the R. V., is moral symmetry and maturity, rather than sinlessness, though the latter is involved in the former. Our view as to its attainableness is that of St. Paul in such texts as Ephesians iii., 19; iv., 3. But this apostle regards it as a flying goal, which seems to advance as we advance; see Philippians iii., 12–14. As to sin, we hold with St. John 1, iii., 4, that "sin is lawlessness" (R. V.), or insubordination to the divine law. This, however, may result from either of two causes—defect of knowledge, as when good men think that to be right which greater enlightenment shows to be wrong, or defect of will to conform to what is known to be right, or to discover what is right in order to conform to it. It is to defect of the will to know and to do the right that the term "sin" strictly and properly applies. See Romans vii., 7.

The Rev. Andrew Murray, in his book "With Christ in the School of Prayer," teaches that any disciple who will seek the leading of God's Word and Spirit, and who prays in faith, can always expect definite answers to his requests. He admits that we cannot always know God's will, and must sometimes offer the prayer of submission, but claims that it will receive a distinct answer, though it may be a refusal, as with Moses when he desired to enter Canaan. No one need be in uncertainty as to God's will in prayer who truly seeks to know it. What is your opinion of this teaching? Are Christians limited in their intercession by the freedom of the will? How do you explain 1 John v., 16; Jeremiah vii., 13–16?

E. B.

We agree with Murray, though with this reservation: owing to such constitutional differences among men as natural temperament, or certain physical infirmities, there are likely to be some hindrances to consciousness of an answer that is "definite" and "distinct." If we understand that the purpose of prayer is not to get God to do our will, but to enable ourselves to do God's will, and pray accordingly, we need not doubt that such prayer will obtain its answer in the consciousness that we are being led in God's way to the ends of his wisdom. In this view there can arise no such limitation as you refer to. The texts referred to show that, in the view of the writers, some sins were past praying for. But Jesus drew no such limit, neither can we.

1. What are some of the chief abuses of conversion? can they be classified? 2. Does such a text as 1 John i., 7, hinge forgiveness on sanctification? How can such texts be reconciled with the evangelical scheme? 3. How can you distinguish a genuine revival from a spurious one?

Y.

1. Conversion itself cannot be abused, but only the name of it. Understanding the question thus, we should say that the name of conversion is abused whenever applied to anything but a turning away from one's sins, which is both manifest and decided, and also progressive toward increasing purity and beneficence of life. It is abused when applied to any half-way condition, in which some sins are abandoned, but others suffered to continue without effort to conquer them, especially sins of the tongue and temper, and indifference to self-sacrificing effort for others. 2. Not at all. No inconsistency is here. The idea is that in the effort to "walk in the light in fellowship with one another" we shall discover more of our sinfulness, but that this will be purged away in the struggle of the self-sacrificing life inspired by Christ—denoted by the phrase "the blood of Jesus." 3. The only decisive test is given in the words of Jesus, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

1. Is it Scriptural to speak of three types of conversion—nurtural, gradual, and sudden? Are the disciples examples of the second? 2. If perseverance is the proof of true conversion, must there always be an "if" in Christian life? 3. Why has the word "conversion" become so common in popular theology to describe a religious crisis? It seldom occurs in the New Testament. Would "repentance" be a better word?

*

1. We think that these types all appear in the Bible. Timothy seems to illustrate the first; the eleven disciples of Jesus the second, so far as we can judge by the record, which does not take account of individual differences; and Paul the third. 2. But perseverance is a proof, rather than the proof. There need be no "it." Witness Paul's experience. 3. We suppose because it is the first step that counts for most, according to the Greek saying, "The beginning is half of the whole." Conversion is a process rather than an event, and there are many steps to be taken before it is complete in the conforming of the entire life to the divine law. Making allowance for this, it is proper enough to refer to "the great surrender," by which it is often initiated, as the man's "conversion." We do not think "repentance" a satisfactory substitute for it.

Please mention the best modern works on John's Gospel, especially on the teaching of Jesus as found in John's Gospel. Is there any up-to-date commentary on John's Gospel? I am familiar with Beyschlag, Horton, Wendt in Biblical Theology; I know of Meyer, Godet, and Ellicott in commentaries on John. What is later?

E. E. O.

Professor Stevens's "The Johannine Theology" is later, a recent work. We would also recommend Dr. E. H. Sears's "The Fourth Gospel, the Heart of Christ," and F. D. Maurice's "The Gospel of John."

Will you kindly give me some information on the following points? 1. The names of the best writings on what is called the Reconstruction Period of our history. 2. The name of a history of the Civil War from a Southern standpoint. 3. To whom shall I send for further information with regard to the "Philafrican Liberators' League" in process of organization by Heli Chatelain?

A. M. G.

1. McPherson's "History of Reconstruction," Pollard's "Lost Cause Regained." 2. Jefferson Davis's "Rise and Fall of the Confederate States," Pollard's "Lost Cause." 3. We do not know.

The writer of the notice of Dr. Bergstresser's books begs to assure "H. O. W." that he lives among Tunkers, that he is personally conversant with them, that he has attended their religious meetings "in barns," that he has listened to the public confessions of sin through long hours, and that the Tunkers, though generally well-to-do farmers, decline to erect a house of public worship. They also profess a belief in the immersion (baptism) of believers, which is a distinguishing tenet of the Baptists. They are mostly German or of German descent. A reference to Carroll's "Religious Forces of the United States" confirms in general the statements of the notice in question. Only it must be granted "H. O. W." that the reviewer, relying upon the information given him by the Tunkers among whom he resides, asserted broadly the use of barns, which is not universal. The reviewer disclaims any prejudice. He stated the facts that had come under his personal observation.

"H. F. B."—Your letter on "Historical Evidences of Christianity" is conclusive so far as this, that Jesus Christ lived, and became the founder of the Christian faith. But the remarks recently made in this column were concerned with a wider question, and in reply to skeptical difficulties that have been raised on the ground that heathen writers are silent in regard to the particulars of his life and work, so that for these the New Testament, especially in the four Gospels, gives us our only historical material. This, however, as we have said with sufficient plainness, we regard as fully adequate for all reasonable demands. What the heathen writers you quote have to say is only as to the fact that he lived and died and gained adherents, who, as Pliny says to the Emperor Trajan in your quotation, sang hymns to him as to a god.

Have any of The Outlook's readers a second-hand copy of Kingsley's "Social Choir" which they would be willing to sell (it is most likely now out of print)? If so, please address, stating price, J. A. Wilcox, Five Points, Akron, O.

Is your Brain Tired?

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate

It supplies the needed food for the brain and nerves and makes exertion easy.

Everybody Knows

that carelessness, chemicals and common soaps make combination in the laundry which is simply fatal to shirts, collars, cuffs and other linen, and more people are finding out every day that by the modern methods of washing clothes, the sunlight methods, and the clothes not only receive no injury in the wash, but are actually preserved, as the dirt which would produce wear and decay is taken out without rubbing, without boiling, without chemical action.

Sunlight Soap

Sunlight Soap Saves Clothes

Lever Bros., Ltd.,
Hudson & Harrison Sts., New York.

Stylish Suits

$7.00

To the lady who wishes to dress well at moderate cost we will mail—free—our Fall and Winter Catalogue of Suits and Cloaks and more than fifty samples of the Suitings and Cloakings from which we make our garments to select from.

Our Catalogue illustrates:

Tailor-Made Suits and Stylish Dresses, $7 up.
Jaunty Jackets and Capes, $3.50 up.
Plush Capes, $7 up. Fur Capes, $6 up.
Bicycle Suits, $6 up. Separate Skirts, $4.50.

We also make finer garments and send samples of all grades. We make every garment to order and guarantee the perfection of fit, finish and style. We pay express charges to any part of the world. Write to-day; you will get Catalogue and samples by return mail.

THE NATIONAL CLOAK CO.,
Ladies' Tailors, 152-154 West 23d St., New York.

"JUST AS EASY" to remove the cake from the tin without a crumble. That's when you use the

IMPROVED

Perfection Cake Tin

Prevents leaking of batter, saves time and trouble. 3 round or 2 square, larger, tins can be bought for 50c. If your dealer don't keep them address the manufacturers,

C. SIDNEY SHEPARD CO.

Buffalo, N. Y. Chicago, Ill.

The Lewis Institute in Chicago

The Lewis Institute, opened in Chicago on September 21, marks another advance in the university extension idea of carrying the college to the pupils instead of asking the pupils to move to the college.

When Allen C. Lewis died in 1877, he left $550,000 for the establishment of an educational institution for boys and girls. Owing to certain complications with regard to the settlement of the estate, the real work of founding the school was not begun until July 9, 1895. At that time the Board of Trustees, made up of three prominent business men, prepared its report, which showed that the original endowment had more than tripled in its hands, the actual amount being something over $1,600,000. A handsome building costing $225,000 was erected at the corner of West Madison and Robey Streets, in the heart of the great west side of the city, where it would reach the greatest possible number of pupils in their homes. It is six stories high above the basement and fitted with class-rooms, laboratories, manual training rooms, libraries, studios, and a lecture-hall with a seating capacity of seven hundred and fifty. In equipment it will have every convenience that a bountiful endowment can supply. The Board of Managers include William R. Harper, of Chicago University; Albert G. Lane, Principal of the schools of Chicago; George N. Carman, Director of the Institute; John A. Roach, C. C. Kohlsaat, John McLaren, and Thomas Kane. A Faculty of twenty-six professors and instructors has been provided, and it is expected that at least five hundred pupils, half of the total capacity of the Institute, will be in attendance on opening day.

The aim of the Institute is to provide a high-grade secondary education at small expense to pupils. There will be many short courses of all kinds, and evening classes, instruction being given in mechanics, stenography, household economy, and manual training, in addition to the usual language, literature, and science courses. In every study instruction will be first-class as far as it goes. It is expected that a large number of young people who have neither the time nor the money to attend college will take advantage of this opportunity for obtaining an education. Being located in a populous district, pupils may live at home and take the courses, thus avoiding the largest item of college expense—that of board and lodging. The tuition is fixed at $60 a year. A graduate from the academic course of the Institute will be capable of entering those colleges and universities whose requirements for admission are the most advanced.

Robinson Crusoe's Island

The Madrid correspondent of the London "Daily Mail" writes: "In consequence of the violent earthquakes that occurred in the center of Chili, Santiago, and Valparaiso on March 13 and 14 last, a notice has appeared in Santiago, uncontradicted up to the present, that these seismatical disturbances have destroyed the island of Juan Fernandez, off the coast of Chili, to which the group of islands belongs. It is believed that these islands have disappeared. The island of Juan Fernandez, it will be remembered, is celebrated as having been the residence for four years of the shipwrecked sailor Alexander Selkirk, whose adventures inspired Daniel Defoe to write 'Robinson Crusoe.' A merchant vessel has seen, in the direction of these islands, enormous flames which shot out of the sea, causing a violent disturbance. The government of Chili has sent a vessel to ascertain whether the islands are still in existence. The inhabitants are said to be about a hundred fishermen."

"Mamma, what is heredity?" asked Bobby, shedding a few tears and laboriously tripping over the syllables of the long word. "Why, it is—it is something you get from your father or me," replied the mother. Silence of two minutes, and more tears. "Then, ma," he asked, "is spanking hereditary?"—Texas Sifter.

"THE MARTIAN"
A NEW SERIAL
WRITTEN AND ILLUSTRATED BY GEORGE DU MAURIER
THE AUTHOR OF
"TRILBY" and "PETER IBBETSON"

Copyright, 1896, by Harper and Brothers.

BEGINS IN HARPER'S MAGAZINE
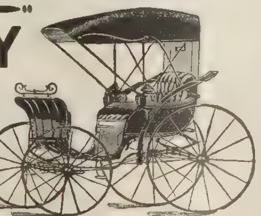
FOR OCTOBER NOW READY

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers, New York



WHY
WE SELL
Superior
Phætons at much lower prices
than any other firm in the world is explained in our Art Catalogue. Send for it!

The above cut illustrates "The Colombo," one of our popular styles. A low priced Phæton, with beauty, grace and strength. Can be fitted (if desired) with ball-bearing axles and rubber tires.

Columbus PHÆTON CO., Columbus, O.

Cameras and Cash

We've got the Cameras and want the cash. Photo supplies of all sorts and of all makers

Complete Photographic Library (56 instruction books covering the entire field of photography.) New Store—convenient. :: :: :: :: ::

Prices that render the goods Prizes

The Scovill & Adams Co., of New York
Nos. 60 and 62 East 11th St.
(Five doors from B'way)

Send 35 cents for a sample number of The Photographic Times, containing about 100 handsome photographic illustrations.

About People

—Queen Victoria's chaplain-in-ordinary, the Rev. A. Robins, lately preached his five thousandth sermon at Windsor.

—Henri Durant, the founder of the Red Cross movement, is, it is reported, in a Swiss hospital, sick and in poverty.

—Frau Cosima Wagner has received from the King of Wurtemburg the gold medal of the Order of the Crown to mark the twentieth anniversary of the production of "Der Ring des Nibelungen" at Bayreuth.

—The Queen of Roumania is said to be the only living author who has written opera librettos in four languages—French, German, Swedish, and Roumanian. She has just finished an opera libretto in French, founded on a Turkish subject, for M. Jules Massenet.

—Dr. James M. Aldrich, who has just died in Fall River, Mass., at the age of seventy-nine, was prominent in the anti-slavery movement before the war. He severed his connection with the Society of Friends because they refused to open their meeting-houses for anti-slavery meetings.

—The handwriting of the late Rev. Dr. A. J. Gordon was singularly difficult to decipher. In the biography by his son the story is told of his answering some correspondent who wanted to know his views on some eschatological question. He wrote briefly, expressing his regret that he had no time to amplify. Some months later he received another letter saying: "It is certainly fortunate for me that your time was so limited. I have already spent nine weeks in attempting to decipher the handwriting of your note, and am not nearly done yet."

—The Boston "Transcript" says that this story of Daniel Webster has never before appeared in print: "He was once sued by his meat man. The man did not call upon Webster afterward to trade with him. Webster met him in the course of a few days and asked him why he didn't call. 'Because,' said the man, 'I supposed that you would be offended and wouldn't trade with me any more.' To which Webster replied: 'Oh, sue me as many times as you like, but, for Heaven's sake, don't starve me to death!'"

—A bust of Thomas Arnold, of Rugby, has been placed in Westminster Abbey. It is opposite that of Matthew Arnold, who was thus honored before his father, and is near the busts of Wordsworth, Keble, Maurice, and Fawcett. The Dean of Westminster said, in unveiling the bust, that they were trying to honor the memory of the great teacher to whose teaching they owed a debt which they could not overestimate. They were paying honor to the memory of the great Christian reformer of the whole life of English public schools.

—Miss Ella Collins, daughter of a New York tailor, will be the first woman of the United States raised to a throne by marriage. She will shortly become the wife of Colonel John F. Hoobs, who, under the name of Oumalea, reigns over the semi-barbarous people of the Jilka Islands, in the New Hebrides group. Colonel Hoobs was born in South Carolina, and after a wandering life full of strange adventure settled on one of the Jilka islands. Since then he has become the undisputed ruler of the 1,200 or more people who live there, under the title of king.

—Mr. Andrew J. Symington, a Scottish littérateur, under date of September 1, writes from Glasgow to a gentleman of this city: "I visited the Burns Exhibition and was introduced to the poet's granddaughter, Miss Burns, and to his great-granddaughter, Miss Hutchinson. I was surprised and delighted with the extent of the exhibition. It is, I think, the most marvelous homage ever paid to mortal man—more than a thousand editions of his poems, and three thousand volumes about him, with no end of MSS. and relics of the most interesting character, also numerous portraits, busts, statues, and wood carvings."

An Ounce of Prevention

s cheaper than any quantity of cure. Don't give children narcotics or sedatives. They are unnecessary when the infant is properly nourished, as it will be if brought up on the Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY	Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN	Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS	Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK	Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR	Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN
ATLANTIC	New York.
BRADLEY
BROOKLYN
JEWETT
ULSTER
UNION
SOUTHERN	Chicago.
SHIPMAN
COLLIER	St. Louis.
MISSOURI
RED SEAL
SOUTHERN
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS. CO	Philadelphia.
MORLEY	Cleveland.
SALEM	Salem, Mass.
CORNELL	Buffalo.
KENTUCKY	Louisville.

NO MISREPRESENTATION on the part of our agents tolerated or of dealers or painters necessary. You know just what you are getting when you have painting done with

Pure White Lead

(see list of brands, which are genuine) and Pure Linseed Oil. Don't be misled by trying something else said to be "just as good." Any desired shade or color may be easily produced by using NATIONAL LEAD CO.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors.

Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New York.

... TAKE A COMBINATION BOX OF THE ...

LARKIN SOAPS

On 30 Days Trial.
From Factory
To Family.

And get a "CHAUTAUQUA"

Rocker and Reclining Chair Free.

Our soaps are sold entirely on their merits, with a guarantee of purity. Thousands use them, and have for many years in every locality, many in your vicinity.

Chair can be adjusted to any position, and changed at will by the occupant while reclining. A synonym of luxurious ease and comfort. It is built of oak, polished antique finish, with beautifully grained three-ply veneer back. The seat, head and foot rests are upholstered with silk plush in crimson, old red, tobacco brown, old gold, blue or olive as desired. It is very strong and perfectly simple in construction. It is fully guaranteed.

Subscribers to this paper may use the Goods 30 days before Bill is due.

After trial you—the consumer—pay the usual retail value of the Soaps only. All middlemen's profits accrue to you in a valuable premium. The manufacturer alone adds Value; every middleman adds Cost. The Larkin plan saves you half the cost—saves you half the regular retail prices. Thousands of readers of this paper know these facts.

Many people prefer to send cash with order—it is not asked—but if you remit in advance, you will receive in addition to all extras named a nice present for the lady of the house, and shipment day after order is received. Your money will be refunded without argument or comment if the Box or Chair does not prove all expected. We guarantee the safe delivery of all goods.

OUR GREAT COMBINATION BOX.

100 BARS "SWEET HOME" SOAP . . . . Enough to last an average family one full year. For all laundry and household purposes it has no superior.	$5.00
10 BARS WHITE WOOLEN SOAP . . . . A perfect soap for flannels.	.70
12 PKGS. BORAXINE SOAP POWDER (full lbs.) An unequalled laundry luxury.	1.20
1-4 DOZ. MODJESKA COMPLEXION SOAP . Exquisite for ladies and children. A matchless beautifier.	.60
1-4 DOZ. OLD ENGLISH CASTILE SOAP . .	.30
1-4 DOZ. CREME OATMEAL TOILET SOAP .	.25
1-4 DOZ. ELITE GLYCERINE TOILET SOAP .	.25
1-4 DOZ. LARKIN'S TAR SOAP . . . . . Infallible Preventive of dandruff. Unequalled for washing ladies' hair.	.30
1-4 DOZ. SULPHUR SOAP	.30
1 BOTTLE, 1 OZ., MODJESKA PERFUME . Delicate, refined, popular, lasting.	.30
1 JAR, 2 OZS., MODJESKA COLD CREAM . Soothing. Cures chapped skin.	.25
1 BOTTLE MODJESKA TOOTH POWDER . . Preserves the teeth, hardens the gums, sweetens the breath.	.25
1 PACKET SPANISH ROSE SACHET . .	.20
1 STICK NAPOLEON SHAVING SOAP . .	.10
THE CONTENTS, BOUGHT AT RETAIL, COST	$10.00
CHAIR, WORTH AT RETAIL . .	10.00
	$20.00

All for $10.00. (You get the Chair Gratis.)

Write your order like this TO-DAY, while you think of it, or cut this out and sign it:

"You may ship me, subject to thirty days trial, One Combination Box of 'Sweet Home' Soap, with extras, etc., and the Chautauqua Reclining Chair, upon your own conditions, viz.:

"If, after thirty days trial, I find all the Soaps, etc., of unexcelled quality and the Chair entirely satisfactory to me and as represented, I will remit you $10.00; if not, I will notify you goods are subject to your order and you must remove them, making no charge for what I have used."

Name..............................

Occupation .... Street No. ....

P. O. .... State ....

Illustrations of other Premiums sent on request. THE LARKIN SOAP MFG. CO., Buffalo, N.Y.

NOTE.—The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co. make our readers a wonderful offer. Not only do they give you a box of excellent laundry soap and toilet articles of great value, but they also give each purchaser a valuable premium, and we personally know they carry out what they promise.—The Independent, New York

PROF. A. LOISETTE'S
World Famed
ASSIMILATIVE MEMORY SYSTEM,

Endorsed by Educators, Scientific, Professional and Business Men all over the world. Abridged from six books to one. Handsomely bound, with portrait and autograph. Price $2.50 American, 10s. 6d. English. Prospectus and testimonials sent FREE. Address, A. Loisette, 237 Fifth Ave., New York, or 200 Regent St., London, Eng.

DEAFNESS

and Head Noises relieved by using Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums. New scientific invention: different from all other devices. The only safe, simple, comfortable and invisible Ear Drum in the world. Helps where medical skill fails. No wire or string attachment. Write for pamphlet.

WILSON EAR DRUM CO.,
Offices: 155 Trust Bldg., Louisville, Ky.
R. 171, 1122 Broadway, N. Y.

75cents for $1.00—
Would YOU take it? Then why take an inferior binding at the same price as

S·H·& M·
REGISTERED TRADE MARK BIAS
VELVETEEN
SKIRT BINDINGS

Ask for the New S. H. & M. Cord Edge.

If your dealer WILL NOT supply you we will.

Samples showing labels and materials mailed free.

"Home Dressmaking Made Easy," a new 72 page book by Miss Emma M. Hooper, of the Ladies' Home Journal, tells in plain words how to make dresses at home without previous training; mailed for 25c.
S. H. & M. Co., P. O. Box 699, N. Y. City.

WRIGHTS HEALTH UNDERWEAR

TO YOU
this trade-mark means warmth, comfort, durability, and sanitary qualities.

Wright's Genuine Health Underwear is unsurpassed.
Always branded with the above
TRADE-MARK
WRIGHT'S HEALTH UNDERWEAR CO.
NEW YORK CITY

Guaranteed 25 Years.
With HOLMES & EDWARDS,
Sterling Silver Inlaid
Spoons and forks you have a well furnished table.

A piece of solid silver is inlaid in the back of the bowl and handle before plating.

Patented.

See that the trade-mark is on each article.

E. STERLING INLAID HE.

For sale by all Jewelers.
The Holmes & Edwards Silver Co.,
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
New York Salesroom, 2 Maiden Lane, (2d door from Broadway.) 50

Bits of Fun

"Are many of the four hundred here?" "Oh, yes; thousands of them."—Truth.

Up North a boy is suing a newspaper for damages. A copy of its Sunday edition fell on him and crippled him for life.—Atlanta Constitution.

"I'll knock the daylight out of you!" Having said which the horizon bumped up against the sun and made good his threat.—Philadelphia Record.

Sunday-School Teacher—What is the leading doctrine of Christianity? The Laundryman—Kid thlow stone—smashee glass—no can catchee—forgivum.—Puck.

Mr. Bacon—That Mr. Crossley, who called last evening, is a self-made man. Mrs. Bacon—Too bad he couldn't have made himself a little more agreeable.—Yonkers Statesman.

"That's a brilliant son of yours," remarked the visitor; "he's been to Congress, hasn't he?" "Yes, I believe he was an inmate for a couple of years," replied old Farmer Mossback, dryly.—Buffalo Express.

"If I were so unfortunate," said the man who had no use for the clergy, "as to have a stupid son, I'd prepare him for the ministry." "In that respect," replied a mild-mannered divine, "you think very differently from your father."—Washington Times.

An elderly lady in Cleveland viciously "swiped" with an umbrella a scorcher who missed her by about two inches, and the spectators applauded. An umbrella is very well, but there is something to be said in favor of an ax.—Minneapolis Journal.

Kind Inquirer—And 'ow be the old man, Mrs. Quaggins? Mrs. Quaggins—Thankee kindly, but I'm afeared he be mortal bad. Doctor he do say as 'ow if 'ee live to morning 'e'll 'ave some 'opes of 'ee; but if 'ee doant 'ee's afeared 'ee must give 'ee up.—Pick-Me-Up.

A minister, missing one of his congregation from church, called on him one day to see what was the matter. "Well, Mr. McNab, I was wondering what was the matter that you were not at church these few Sundays back." "Oh, I have been at Mr. Dunlop's kirk." Minister—Oh, I don't care for my congregation going to other churches. How would you like your sheep to go into strange pastures? Mr. McNab—Oh, I wadna care a grain if they got better grass.—Tit-Bits.

There is an Irish porter employed in a large commission house in New York—one of the kind that will make a witty reply to any sort of question. He is very fond of expressing his views in general, and has great admiration for his arguments. If he fails to get a listener, he will talk to himself in lieu of something better. A member of the firm, being annoyed one day at his constant muttering, which he was unfortunate enough to hear, sent for him. "See here, John, did it ever occur to you that your constant talk and muttering is a great annoyance to people that happen to be around? Why on earth do you chatter away to yourself, anyhow?" "Shure I have two reasons fer doin' that." "Two reasons! Well, what are they?" "One of them is that I loike ter talk to a sinsible man, and the other is that I loike ter hear a sinsible man talk."—Harper's Round Table.

The Eighty-seventh Annual Meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions will be held at Toledo, Ohio, in the First Congregational Church, beginning on Tuesday, Oct. 6th, at 3 P.M., and closing Friday noon, Oct. 9th.

Entertainment will be given Missionaries and Assistant Missionaries of the Board, Theological Students, Officers of the Board and of the Woman's Boards, and Corporate Members and their wives.

All others who desire to attend will be assisted in procuring places of entertainment, either free or at reasonable prices, on timely application to W. H. Eager, Chairman Com.

The Central, Eastern, and Western Traffic Associations have granted a rate of one and a third fare to those who attend. This is available only for those who ask for and secure a certificate from the agent selling ticket to Toledo that full fare has been paid to that place. This certificate will be viséd by a special agent at Toledo, and there a return ticket will be sold for one-third fare.

In Behalf of the Committee of Arrangements.

An Army of People made up of folks who paused to give thought to proper nourishment have adopted as their standard, an all-wheat breakfast dish. Life could be sustained on it, alone, for an indefinite period. Differs from oatmeal in non-heating and in absence of husky irritating particles. All leading grocers have it.
WHEATLET
Ask your GROCER for it to-day
MADE ONLY BY THE
Franklin Mills Co., Lockport, N. Y.

The Chautauqua Reading Circle
The French-Greek Year
FRANCE IN HISTORY, POLITICS, AND SOCIAL LIFE, AND THE INFLUENCE OF GREEK CIVILIZATION UPON THE WORLD, ARE THE CHIEF SUBJECTS FOR THE C. L. S. C. COURSE IN 1896-97.

THE unsatisfactory results of desultory reading are evident to every thoughtful person. The C. L. S. C. offers a comprehensive plan which is bringing thousands of people into closer contact with the best things of life. The course has a definite aim, and the student who follows it for four years will gain a broader outlook. The requirements are few. Members may enroll for a single year only. There are no examinations, and forty thousand graduates prove that the plan is practicable for busy people.
Address for particulars
JOHN H. VINCENT,
Dept. 39, Buffalo, N. Y.

THE FINANCIAL QUESTION
White's Money and Banking
By HORACE WHITE
Edward Atkinson, Boston, Mass.: I have read it with admiration. I think it is the simplest, plainest, and most conclusive statement of the true money question that has yet been made.

Parmele's United States
75 cents
. . . It is no less commendable for what it leaves out than for what is put in. In other words, Mrs. Parmele has simplified and enlivened her narrative, giving us some idea of the real condition and progress of the people as well as of the doings of statesmen and the maneuvers of armies, abstaining wholesomely from dates that nobody recollects or has occasion to, and from facts that had little bearing on the real development of the country. Most histories are records of the doings of kings and generals, whereas it is the common people, who are ruled by kings and fight the battles of generals, who count. . . .—Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

2 volumes will be sent postpaid upon receipt of $1.25. Mention No. O. 1096.
WILLIAM BEVERLEY HARISON
59 FIFTH AVE., N. Y. CITY

American Public Health Association

By William H. Hale

The American Public Health Association held an important and busy meeting at Buffalo, September 15–18.

The President, Eduardo Licéaga, of Mexico, was assisted by Vice-President Alfred A. Woodhull, of Denver. About thirty-five Mexicans were in attendance, also a considerable delegation from Canada, giving a continental character to the meeting. Indeed, the sessions of the Health Association seem to gather a more complete representation from the whole of North America than any other society or association whatever, and the great awakening of Mexico to the importance of sanitation is a fact of great interest and importance to all. The Mexicans read numerous papers, showing their interest in these matters.

A very long programme was presented at the meeting, covering a wide range of topics, three sessions having been held on every day but the last. A few interesting points may be mentioned.

How to procure wholesome milk is a vital problem. The report of the Committee on Animal Diseases and Animal Food, by Dr. D. E. Salmon, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, gave prominence to the question, and two papers and considerable discussion followed. It is agreed that it is better to look well to the dairy and obtain the milk pure and clean than to try to disinfect it by sterilizing. Several of the sanitarians contended that the increase in rachitis and scurvy in infants is due to the use of sterilized milk now so prevalent. Boiling or heating the milk decomposes the lactic acid and other ingredients which assist in digestion. The process employed to obtain milk pure without sterilizing was described, and it includes careful inspection of the cows at frequent intervals, and great cleanliness, especially in washing the udders before milking, and requiring those who do the milking to wash their hands first. Also, their clothing is sterilized daily by washing in dilute solution of mercuric bichloride, and pails, bottles, and stoppers are washed with the same solution. The milk-pail is covered with a grating to keep out dirt. A large dairy near New York is now conducted in this manner, also one near Buffalo. It was stated that milk thus obtained could be sold at 8 or 10 cents a quart.

A disinfectant efficient yet harmless is a great desideratum. Fire destroys, chlorine and sulphur ruin. The ideal disinfectant for apartments is found to be formic aldehyde or formaldehyd—a gas prepared from wood alcohol by heating it. Lamps for this purpose were exhibited, the most ingenious being that of Professor Franklin C. Robinson, of Maine, in which he uses asbestos paper saturated with platinum thrown down from solution, which serves to keep up a glow after the flame of the lamp is extinguished, and thus to convert the wood alcohol into aldehyde. One liter per hour may be thus treated. Rapidity is important, because the gas is so penetrating that it will escape from cracks through which sulphur fumes would not. The efficiency of this gas depends largely upon the fact that its specific gravity is nearly that of air, so that it diffuses rapidly. If it is obtained by evaporating an aqueous solution, the molecules of vapor contain too large a proportion of water, which makes them heavy. Hence the necessity for some such apparatus which decomposes instead of simply evaporating, and sets free the molecules of aldehyde combined each with a single molecule of vapor of water. The gas destroys bacteria placed inside a mattress. Dr. Kinyoun is making experiments at Washington as to the effect of formaldehyd on fabrics, and he finds that it does not injure any fabric, nor does it affect the color of any, except two colors on silk—red and violet from certain dyes.

In the paper on Municipal Responsibility for Healthy School-houses, which Mrs. Richards sent on from Boston, she revealed a state of affairs in that city which was a surprise to many. The death-rate of school-teachers there is very high. Many of the school-houses, we are told, have been standing from thirty to fifty years without ever once having had a

[Continued on following page]

TIME TELLS THE STORY.

SINGER SEWING MACHINES do Good Work DURING A LIFETIME.

There is a big difference between the cost of making a first-class sewing machine, embodying the best of materials and workmanship, and one made in the cheapest manner. The buyer of the cheap machine soon pays the difference of price in the constant cost for repairs, to say nothing of its annoying inefficiency.

Results Make Reputation.

Singer Machines, either lock-stitch or chain-stitch, are the successful result of long experience and constant improvements in the endeavor to make nothing but the best sewing machines for family use. The accomplishment of this result requires six of the largest, best-equipped factories in the world, the best inventive talent of the age, and the constant employment of twelve thousand workmen. Singer Machines are sold only by our employees, and not through dealers or department stores.

The Value of Reputation.

A reputation based on half a century's experience, dealing directly with the women of the family all over the world, is unique, and stimulates a worthy pride. THE SINGER MANUFACTURING COMPANY aims to maintain its well-earned reputation for fair dealing during all time. It is permanent, its offices are in every city in the world, and parts and supplies for its machines can always be easily obtained.

The Singer Manufacturing Co.

"SEWING MACHINE MAKERS FOR THE WORLD."

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS

Want advertisements of thirty words or less will be published under this heading at one dollar a week. Four cents a week is charged for each word in excess of thirty.

• A CULTURED GERMAN FAMILY in Berlin, Kurfürstenstr. 139, offers a home on reasonable terms to three young ladies. Every comfort and attention. All advantages of the city. Highest references given and expected. Inquire of Frau NAUMANN, 1100 M St., N.W., Washington, D.C., or Prof. FRANCIS BROWN, 119 W. 95th St. New York.

YOUNG LADY, college graduate, three years post-graduate student, '95-'96 student in Univ. of Berlin and private pupil of Frau Dr. Hempel, Berlin, wishes position in school or family. German, Eng. Lit., Latin, Greek. Four years' experience. Highest references. No. 1,883, care Outlook.

A NEW YORK CITY FAMILY wanting their house cared for during their absence from the city, or lady living alone wanting small family, with best of city references, in the house, will find it to their advantage to address C. R., No. 1,859, Outlook Office.

A PLEASANT HOME and thorough preparation for college for one student only. Terms, $1,000 for the school year. References given and required. Correspondence solicited. Address PENNSYLVANIA, No. 1,860, care The Outlook.

A LADY who has had a private school and has made a specialty of teaching young children would like position as supervisor or teacher of kindergarten and primary departments. Best references given. Address B. A., No. 1,885, The Outlook.

AN OLD COLLECTION of postage stamps, or old United States, Confederate, or British Colonial stamps, will be taken in exchange toward a Columbia bicycle as good as new. Address No. 1,862, office The Outlook.

A YOUNG LADY, graduate of Wellesley and of New York University, desires private pupils in New York or Brooklyn. Greek, Latin, college preparatory work. Address No. 1,878, care Outlook Office.

AN EXPERIENCED LADY wishes a position as governess or housekeeper and companion. A well-grounded musician, capable to teach. Address Miss E. V. R., 28 West 22d St., N. Y. City.

A WIDOW (English) desires a position as companion and secretary. No objection to travel or chaperon young lady. Best references. A. B., Studio 1,007, Carnegie Hall, New York.

A COMFORTABLE HOUSE in East Orange, New Jersey, consisting of ten rooms, to rent, furnished, for two or three years. Address "M.," East Orange, N.J.

REFINED LADY desires position as matron or housekeeper in a home where help is kept. Address REFINED, No. 1,841, care of The Outlook.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.

Corticelli
Doilies and Centerpieces

Fully described and illustrated in "Florence Home Needlework for 1896"—a new book giving explicit instructions for embroidering the most recent and popular Art Needlework designs; tells just what shades of silk to use, and tells how to work the piece. 96 pages, over 60 illustrations. Sent by mail for 6 cts. in stamps.—Ask for "Florence Home Needlework for 1896." Address

NONOTUCK SILK CO.,
No. 35 Bridge Street,
FLORENCE, MASS.

Does Your Hair Fall Out?

Is it getting thin—lessening in volume? If so, I can help you. If totally bald do not write. Select family patronage for ten years. Send self-addressed stamped envelope to Miss RACHEL T. WYATT, Centerville, Mass

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED. Our INVISIBLE TUBE Cushions help when all else fails, as glasses help eyes. NO PAIN. Whispers heard. Send to F. Hiscox Co., 858 B'way, N. Y., for Book and Proofs FREE

THOSE answering advertisements appearing in The Outlook will confer a favor upon the advertiser as well as the publisher by mentioning this publication.

Form and Finish

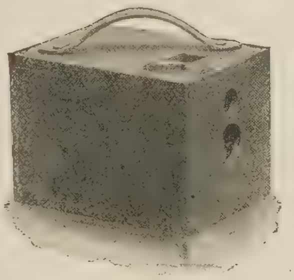
are essential features of elegant Silverware. Form is lasting, the finish or brilliancy produced by

SILVER
ELECTRO-SILICON
POLISH

is of the highest degree and lasts as long as the form exists. It never scratches nor wears.

Grocers sell it. It's unlike others. Send to us for sample.

THE ELECTRO SILICON CO., 72 John St., New York.



Photography Simplified.

Picture taking with the Improved Bullet camera is the refinement of photographic luxury. It makes photography easy for the novice—delightful for everybody.

LOADS IN DAYLIGHT with our light-proof film cartridges, or can be used with glass plates. Splendid achromatic lens, improved rotary shutter, set of three stops. Handsome finish.

Price, Improved No. 2 Bullet, for pictures 3½ x 3½ inches, - - - - - $10.00
Light-proof Film Cartridge, 12 exposures, 3½ x 3½ - .60

EASTMAN KODAK CO.

Booklet Free. Rochester, N. Y.

HEMSTITCHED SHEETS AND PILLOW CASES.

Made of a superior grade, standard, linen-finish Muslin, with hand-drawn hemstitching. The Sheets are 2½ by 2½ yards and the Pillow Cases are 22½ by 36 inches. We will express a set (a sheet and two pillow cases) to any address upon receipt of $1.68.

We pay the expressage.

This is an opportunity that is seldom offered. Money refunded if goods are not satisfactory.

STRAWBRIDGE & CLOTHIER
DRY GOODS. PHILADELPHIA.

IT SEEMS IMPOSSIBLE, BUT IT IS TRUE.

$1.25 BUYS A SEWING MACHINE

well made, WARRANTED to do good sewing. So simple any person can operate it. Securely packed and safely delivered. Price $1.25 only. We illustrate here our famous Oxford High Grade Sewing Machine shipped on FREE TRIAL into your own home. NO MONEY REQUIRED in advance. 100,000 in use. World's Fair Medal awarded. Cut this out and send it to us with your full address and we will mail you our illustrated catalogue, giving full description and telling how to order.

Oxford Mdse. Co., 300 Wabash Av. Chicago, Ill.

[Continued from preceding page]

floor washed till recent agitation called attention to the subject.

Dr. Henry D. Horlbeck, of Charleston, S. C., who was afterward elected President of the Association, read a paper on Dengue, a most extraordinary and enigmatical disease. It comes on and goes off with great suddenness; causes most excruciating pain; becomes epidemic at long intervals at Charleston, where the last outbreak occurred in 1895, and nearly every one took it; but it hardly ever proves fatal. It was first known at Philadelphia in the last century, but it hardly ever appears so far north as that.

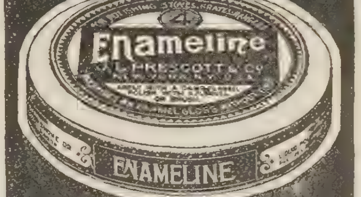
The important subject of National health legislation was pretty fully considered, and papers were read and resolutions adopted favoring it, notwithstanding the failure of the committee on that subject to prepare a report. It was urged with much force that the United States should have a National Department of Health. Mexico has one already, called the Superior Board of Health, to which all State Boards are subordinate. Dr. Licéaga, President of the Public Health Association, is President of this Board.

Closely connected with this is international co-operation in sanitary measures, which also received attention, especially in regard to protecting water-supplies from contamination. Major Smart, of the United States Army, as Chairman of the Committee on Pollution of Water-Supplies, is collecting very elaborate bacteriological statistics on that subject. Dr. Bryce, of Toronto, read the report of the Committee on River Conservancy, and called attention to the increasing pollution of border rivers, such as the Red River of the North, and the rivers which receive the drainage of Detroit and Buffalo.

The largest number of papers on any one subject was on yellow fever. Several papers and much discussion were given to diphtheria. The mooted question whether anti-toxin is beneficial developed a strong current of opinion in the affirmative. The fact that recovery in some cases is followed by paralysis does not outweigh the fact that statistics show a marked preponderance of recoveries.

An interesting group of papers was presented before an animated session on Thursday evening, and the meeting was protracted till eleven o'clock. The report of the Committee on Alcoholic Drinks from a Sanitary Standpoint, by the Chairman, Dr. Felix Formento, of New Orleans, favored a moderate use of wine and malt liquors, but was at once attacked in the discussion by several members. Dr. Gilson's paper on the Bicycle from a Sanitary Standpoint was a very amusing presentation of objections to bicycling as now conducted; but this paper also became the target for a general attack. Dr. Eliza Mosier, of Michigan, stated that in twenty one years of practice of gynecology she had had a large number of patients, had recommended the bicycle to many, and had often found it advantageous where all other remedial agents failed, and never in any one case deleterious. The evening closed with papers on Public Baths: the last, by Dr. W. H. Tolman, of New York, gave an account of the important measures now in progress under recent legislation to provide adequate bathing facilities. In all cases, the spray or shower bath is now preferred for cleansing bath, and the natatorium or swimming-bath for recreation, the use of the former being made obligatory before admission to the latter.

The closing session on Friday morning was the arena of a sharp contest over the question of place of meeting next year; and again in this Association, as in the American Association for the Advancement of Science at the meeting held at Buffalo only a few days previously, the general session reversed the decision of the Council. I believe no bacteriologist has discovered anything of the nature of a bacterium anti-concilium, which might have conveyed infection from the A. A. A. S. to the A. P. H. A. However, the Council recommended Toronto as the place for next year, but the general session, after long debate, in which Nashville and Philadelphia were presented, chose the latter as the appropriate locality wherein to hold the next, which will be the twenty-fifth, meeting.



Enameline

The Modern STOVE POLISH.

DUSTLESS, ODORLESS, BRILLIANT, LABOR SAVING.
Try it on your Cycle Chain.
J. L. PRESCOTT & CO., New York.

BY

Ian Maclaren

(JOHN WATSON, D.D.).

The Mind of the Master.

12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

"There is a subtle charm of expression in this book that wins and holds the reader's attention throughout. It should be heartily appreciated by thoughtful seekers after spiritual truth."—The Observer.

The Upper Room.

Being No. I. in the series
"LITTLE BOOKS on RELIGION."
Cloth, flexible, 50 cents net.

"They are eloquent sermons, all the more effective because they are strongly marked by the qualities of mind and skill in writing which have gained their author his conspicuous successes in another department of literature."—Scotsman.

OTHER BOOKS BY IAN MACLAREN:
"Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush," "In the Days of Auld Lang Syne," "The Upper Room," "A Doctor of the Old School," etc., etc.

The above books are for sale by all booksellers, or will be sent, mail prepaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers.

Send for a sample copy of "The Bookman," a literary magazine.

DODD, MEAD & COMPANY,
5th Ave. and 21st St., New York.

BOOKS Get thoroughly posted. We make a specialty of books and pamphlets bearing on both sides of the Money question; also standard works on Political Economy, Social Science, and kindred subjects. Our stock includes everything published up to date. Prices from 10 cents to $3.00. Send for catalogue, free. The Mercantile Book Co., 705 Medinah Temple, Chicago, Ill.

HIGHEST PRAISE For Sabbath-Schools. $30 per 100.
Christian Endeavor Hymns. $30 per 100.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
76 East 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago

The Business World

The Week The influx of gold continues; about $35,000,000 either has arrived in this country or has been engaged. The lowering by the Bank of England of its discount rate had the temporary effect of transferring the drain of gold to the Bank of France; this lasted but a short time, however, and gold is now being taken from the Bank of England for this country. A further rise in the discount rate of the Bank of England has not taken place, although it was expected by many. The general movement of gold toward us is explained by many by referring to the Treasury Department's statement of foreign trade, from which it appears that the excess of exports over imports for the month of August was $19,200,000, and for the eight months ending August 31 the excess of exports over imports was $99,750,000; while for the corresponding period last year there was an excess of imports amounting to $36,350,000. It has been pointed out, however, that an excess of exports over imports is not always followed by the importing of gold, and it is thought by many that the pressure of demand for gold by Continental countries, which has been very strong of late years, has, for the present at least, relaxed, and that to this fact, as well as to trade conditions, must be assigned the present movement. The stock market during the first part of the week fell—partly, it was said, because the result of the election in Maine had been over-discounted, and partly perhaps because of the serious situation in the Far East By the middle of the week recovery took place, and continued on Monday of the present week. The banks' statement, for the first time in many weeks, showed a gain in specie and legal tender and also in deposits and circulation, although there was a decrease of about $800,000 in loans. Money on call varied greatly, ranging from four to eight per cent., and probably averaging about six per cent. Choice commercial paper was quoted at nine and ten per cent. A moderate improvement appeared in general trade, and merchants seem to have a little more confidence than they have recently had. Large sales of wool and of dry goods are reported. Cotton-mills are doing more work, and some which have been closed have reopened. The wheat receipts and exports have been large; the exports (including flour) were 3,566,226 bushels—over a million bushels larger than for the same week a year ago. Naturally, the price of wheat has gone up a little. The number of business failures for the week reported by "Bradstreet's" is 315—seven more than last week, and ninety-seven more than for the same week last year.

Substitutes for Currency Eggs are about the oddest form of currency. Tschudi, a sober and painstaking Teuton, whose evidence is not to be questioned, declares that he found hens' eggs the only money throughout the province of Janja, in Peru; that would be some fifty years ago. The people transmitted them by thousands to the provincial capital, and made their purchases therewith at the rate of forty or fifty to the dollar. We are to understand that the country people had little use for cash among themselves. In Manchuria brick-tea and floss-silk represent money; but the latter is going out of fashion. The usual brick of tea, ten inches by eight inches, one and one-half inches thick, is equivalent in trade with Russians to sixty kopecs (eighteen pence). It is divided to make any change necessary. Russian merchants have tried to introduce a paper currency, the notes representing sixty kopecs and parts thereof, but Tartars reject them. When a brick gets discredited, that is, too much worn by long circulation, it is consigned to the teapot. Several old travelers assure us that cats'-eyes were employed in the great Indian kingdom of Vijianagar; elsewhere iron worked into the form of large needles, cakes of salt, or again, says Nicolo Conti, cards inscribed with the name of the king. The Abyssinians also still use cakes of salt in remote districts. Various negro tribes have a currency of iron hoes. Nongua shells were the money of the Indians in British Columbia, one string representing the value of one beaver. In Australia rough slabs of freestone, to be fashioned into hatchets, represented cash. The men who hawked these slabs from tribe to tribe were sacred, passing unharmed through all the districts, even those at war. Marco Polo reckoned bank-notes among the oddest substitutes for money; his account of the notes issued by Kublai Khan and his reflections on the system are peculiarly delightful. He tells of people in the great province of Thibet who used coral; but we must ask where they got it. Had he said turquoise, it would have been quite intelligible, for the Thibetans still employ that stone at need. Elsewhere, Marco speaks of "sprigs of gold" and "porcelain." In the latter case also an error may be suspected. Our word is adapted from the Portuguese, signifying "hog's back," their name for the cowry-shell; becoming acquainted with the Chinese manufacture, they applied the same word to it, from the great resemblance to a cowry. The translator of Marco's work—no copy of the original has been reported—confused the two meanings, doubtless; at least we venture the suggestion. Excepting regular coinage, no "circulating medium" has a vogue to compare with that of the cowry. Perhaps it would not be inexact to say that every people in whose territory the shell exists once used it for cash. But this seems very strange, opposed to common sense and political economy, when we hear that the supply is unlimited. Over thousands of miles of coast a man can gather a sackful in an hour. But the fact is indisputable, however it may be explained. The value fluctuates enormously, of course, over such an immense area, but in a very rough way, we believe, African traders used to estimate a thousand cowries at a shilling. Anglo-Indian traders had no need to make a reckoning, probably, for the shell, though very largely current among natives, never entered into their transactions. Mungo Park counted 250 cowries to the shilling in his day and in the countries where he traveled. But the "bar" was Mungo's currency. In the beginning it was literally a bar of iron imported from Europe; but as the trade developed it became merely a word of value. Twenty leaves of tobacco made a "bar," a gallon of spirits a "bar;" and the natives would not willingly allow any fluctuation in the quantity, whether more or less. If an energetic newcomer tried to push business by offering more rum or tobacco to the "bar," he was regarded with suspicion; no old hand ventured to offer less. In all parts of Borneo, probably, one may still hear prices reckoned in brass guns—that is, cannon; but a man who has transactions of that importance will instantly translate the sum into dollars at the present time. There was an age when ten or twenty pounders did actually pass from hand to hand.—London Standard.

Our Trade with Hawaii Consul-General Mills, at Honolulu, supplementing a former report calling attention to the diversion of Hawaiian trade from San Francisco to New York, writes to the department under date of August 13 that, during the six months ending June 30, the total exports from Honolulu to the United States were valued at $8,748,526.40, against $4,499,916.27 for the corresponding period last year—an increase of nearly $4,000,000. Of this total $8,542,781.64 represents the value of sugar sent to America, $2,457,532 of it going around the Horn to New York, except a small cargo which went to Boston. Already during the present calendar year the direct shipments to New York have amounted to $3,046,368.49.

British Report on Japan's Trade The London "Financial News" says: "In 1895 the total trade of Japan was 15 per cent. larger than in the previous year, and of the total the share of Yokohama was exactly one-half. Two-thirds of the increase were due to exports and one-third to imports, and, as Consul Hall says, these figures are an unmistakable indication of the vigor and recuperative power of Japan's foreign trade. We are sorry to find that, comparing the rate of increase of the four countries which are the leading participators in Japan's trade, and taking imports and exports together, the statistics for Yokohama show that Germany is making the most rapid advance and Great Britain the slowest, the value of German trade in 1895 being an increase of over 53 per cent. on the preceding year, American trade nearly 18 per cent., French 12½ per cent., and that of Great Britain less than 8 per cent. As regards the proportions in which the gross trade of the port is shared between the same countries, America heads the list with 34 per cent., Great Britain comes next with 21 per cent., France next with 17 per cent., and then Germany with 7 per cent. Of the total exports of Yokohama America takes more than half, while Great Britain supplies nearly half the imports."

South African Demand for Lumber A correspondent of the "Canadian Lumberman," writing from Cape Town, South Africa, "states that the total imports of rough and dressed lumber into that colony during 1895 amounted to a valuation of $1,475,369, of which pine amounted to a valuation of $721,258; staves, $48,322; and hardwoods, grown in Canada, $28,625. Large quantities also went to the Transvaal Republic, the Orange Free State, and Natal. The correspondent referred to thinks that the imports of lumber into South Africa are to greatly increase, and that Canadian producers should bestir themselves in order to secure a larger slice of it. Lumber from the eastern as well as western coast of the United States went to the South African colonies in large quantities last year."

FINANCIAL

AMERICAN FIRE
INSURANCE COMPANY
Office, Company's Building,
308 & 310
Walnut St.,
Philadelphia

A.D. 1810.

WE have been at much pains to prepare a reliable list of bonds and stocks from which investors may safely choose such as meet their special requirements. A copy of the list will be sent without charge to all applicants.

HARVEY FISK & SONS
Dealers in Government Bonds and SELECTED Securities
24 NASSAU STREET, NEW YORK
BOSTON • PHILADELPHIA

£
A STANDARD FORM OF REMITTANCE:
Cheque Bank Cheques
They represent Gold.
They are as Good as Gold
Anywhere and Everywhere!
Agency of United States
Cheque Bank, L't'd.
Frederick W. Perry, Manager
40 and 42 Wall St., N. Y.

DISCREET PEOPLE are buying LIFE ANNUITIES
They provide a fixed income for life, and for Elderly People yield double the usual rate of interest. Security absolute. Information given and orders executed by
B. G. CARPENTER, 256 Broadway, N. Y.

The Outlook

A·Family·Paper

New Series of The Christian Union

Copyright, 1896, by The Outlook Company.

Entered as second-class matter in the New York Post-Office.

The Outlook is a weekly Family Paper, containing this week sixty pages. The subscription price is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance.

Postage is Prepaid by the publishers for all subscriptions in the United States, Canada, and Mexico. For all other countries in the Postal Union add $1.56 for postage.

Changes of Address.—When a change of address is ordered, both the new and the old address must be given. The notice should be sent one week before the change is to take effect.

Discontinuances.—If a subscriber wishes his copy of the paper discontinued at the expiration of his subscription, notice to that effect should be sent. Otherwise it is assumed that a continuance of the subscription is desired.

How to Remit.—Remittances should be sent by Check, Draft, Express-Order, or Money-Order, payable to order of The Outlook Company. Cash should be sent in Registered Letter.

Letters should be addressed:

The Outlook,
Clinton Hall, Astor Place,
New York.

Contents for 26 September, 1896

EDITORIAL:

The Capture of Dongola 537
Europe and the Sultan 537
Abyssinia 538
The Dynamite Plot 538
Canada and the Labor Question 538
New Zealand 539
The Political Outlook 540
State Conventions 540
Righteousness Before Peace 541
An Unburied Lottery 542
The Higher Truthfulness 542
The Commonwealth—VIII 543

CONTRIBUTED ARTICLES:

The Spectator on the Great Lakes 544
The Founder of Chautauqua 546
By W. R. Harper, D.D.
The Rural Church—I 551
By J. Cleveland Cady
Margaret Ogilvy 552
By Ellen P. Cunningham
Children in the Public Library 555
By John C. Dana
Basket-Ball at Smith College 557
By Elizabeth F. Read
Hyderabad 559
By W. F. Dix
Kate Carnegie—Chapters XIX., XX 561
By Ian Maclaren
Perplexing Providences 567
By the Rev. John Watson
Dependent Classes 568
By F. W. Hewes

BOOKS AND AUTHORS:

The Bible as Literature 570
Essays in Criticism 571
New Books 572

THE RELIGIOUS WORLD:

Anglican Orders 574
American Board Meeting 574
The Jewish Holy Season 574
Dr. W. C. Young 574
Hope Hall, etc., etc 575

CORRESPONDENCE

NOTES AND QUERIES

THE

HANDY BINDER

for The Outlook, made to hold compactly and conveniently twenty-six numbers, will be sent by mail on receipt of sixty cents.

THE OUTLOOK CO. - NEW YORK

1896

Tout bien ou rien. The Riverside Press

MESSRS. HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN AND COMPANY ANNOUNCE THE FOLLOWING
NEW BOOKS

Harriet Beecher Stowe

Her Writings, in a New Riverside Edition. Thoroughly edited and r arranged with a Biographical Sketch and Notes. With Portraits, Views of Mrs. Stowe's Homes, and other Illustrations, on engraved Title-pages. In 16 vols., 12mo, handsomely bound, cloth, gilt top, $1.50 each.

This is a handsome, every way desirable edition of the writings of one of the greatest and most famous of American women.

NOW READY:

The Minister's Wooing
The Pearl of Orr's Island
Agnes of Sorrento

Poems by Celia Thaxter

Appledore Edition. Edited with a charming Preface, by Sarah Orne Jewett. 12mo, uniform with the First Edition of Mrs. Thaxter's "Letters," cloth, gilt top, $1.50; cloth, paper label, uncut edges, $1.50; in decorative binding, $1.50.

This handsome volume comprises all of Mrs. Thaxter's poetical works, except her verses for children published last year, together with some not before printed.

William Henry Seward

By Thornton K. Lothrop. In the American Statesmen Series. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

An important addition to a very valuable series, and an admirable volume on a great American statesman.

Three Little Daughters of the Revolution

Three capital stories ["Dorothy," "Patty," and "Betty Boston's Fourth of July"] by Nora Perry, author of "A Flock of Girls," "The Youngest Miss Lorton," etc. With illustrations by Frank T. Merrill. Square 12mo, tastefully bound, 75 cents.

A Phrase Book from the Poetic and Dramatic Works of Robert Browning

To which is added an index containing the significant words not elsewhere noted. By Marie Ada Molineaux, A.M., Ph.D. Uniform with both the Riverside and Cambridge Editions of Browning. 8vo, $3.00.

A book of unique value, containing the quotable passages in Browning, indexed and with references to the poems in which they occur.

Sold by Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston
11 East 17th Street, New York

(Take notice to-day. This ad. will not appear again)

$100 IN GOLD | GIVEN AWAY

Who can form the greatest number of words from the letters in READERS? You are smart enough to make fifteen or more words, we feel sure, and if you do you will receive a good reward. Do not use any letter more times than it appears in the word. No proper nouns. No foreign words. Use any dictionary that is standard. Use plurals. Here is an example of the way to work it out: Readers, read, red, sad, ear, ears, dear, etc. These words count. The publisher of Woman's World and Jenness Miller Monthly will pay $20.00 in gold to the person able to make the largest list of words from the letters in the word READERS; $10.00 for the second largest: $10.00 for the third: $10.00 for the fourth, and $10.00 for the fifth, and $5.00 each for the eight next largest lists. The above rewards are given free and without consideration for the purpose of attracting attention to our handsome ladies' magazine, twenty-four pages, ninety-six long columns, finely illustrated, and all original matter, long and short stories by the best authors; price $1 per year. It is necessary for you, to enter the contest, to send 12 two-cent stamps for a three-months' trial subscription with your list of words, and every person sending the 24 cents and a list of fifteen words or more is guaranteed an extra present by return mail (in addition to the magazine) of a large 192-page book, "The Other Man's Wife," by John Strange Winter, a remarkably fascinating story. Satisfaction guaranteed in every case or your money refunded. Lists should be sent at once, and not later than October 20, so that the names of successful contestants may be in the November issue, published in October. Our publication has been established nine years. We refer you to any mercantile agency for our standing. Write now. Address J. H. PLUMMER, Publisher, 905 Temple Court Building, B New York City.

Bishop Vincent

in a letter to Judge Albion W. Tourgee a while ago, says: "You have written a great book in Murvale Eastman. It should be read as widely as A Fool's Errand, or it is a better, a stronger, a riper book. It is vastly superior to Looking Backward, for it makes every reader look Christ-ward. . . . I wish every minister, every workingman, every millionaire, and every political economist would read it. It has inspired me, and I trust it may inspire thousands of others."

Murvale Eastman: A Novel

"I have read it through with interest, sitting up to read it at one sitting—a compliment which I rarely pay any novel. Its spirit seems to me admirable."—Lyman Abbott, D.D.

⁂ Of all Booksellers, or mailed postpaid on receipt of $1.50 by the Publishers,

FORDS, HOWARD, & HULBERT
47 East 10th St., New York City

BANGS & CO., 91 & 93 Fifth Ave.,
NEW YORK

announce the sale of the Library of the late

William R. Williams,
S.T.D., LL.D.

Pastor of the Amity Baptist Church

A very large and varied collection of Books and Pamphlets, gathered during many years of study and research into the Ecclesiastical and Religious Controversies of former times, including many scarce works specially relating to the celebrated Jansenist Controversy, the Jesuits, their Doctrines and Practice, the Mennonites, Baptists, etc.

STAMPED STEEL CEILINGS

DECORATIVE, DURABLE, AND BEST

for Dwellings, Churches, or Business Houses. Ceilings of any shape, old or new. Send for Catalogue.

H. S. NORTHROP, 29 Cherry St., N.Y.

DON'T BOIL Whitman's INSTANTANEOUS Chocolate—doesn't need it. Made in a jiffy, with boiling water or milk. Sold everywhere.

SAPOLIO Like a Good Temper, "Sheds a Brightness Everywhere."

Recreation Department

It will give The Outlook Company much pleasure to assist you in planning your

Autumn Outing

if you will write stating fully what you desire. No charge is made for this service.

Suggestions for planning a vacation or a trip anywhere in the world; printed information, if issued, concerning any Transportation Line any Tour, any Hotel, or any Pleasure or Health Resort in any part of the world, will be sent on request, without charge, to any Outlook reader.

Address Recreation Department, The Outlook, 13 Astor Place, New York.

Tours to the South via Pennsylvania Railroad

Two very attractive early autumn tours are offered by the Pennsylvania Railroad, leaving New York and Philadelphia September 29 and October 13.

After the experience of the past few years it is hardly necessary to say that these outings are planned with the utmost care. Suffice it to say that all arrangements are so adjusted as to afford the best possible means of visiting each place to the best advantage.

The tours each cover a period of ten days, and include the battlefield of Gettysburg, picturesque Blue Mountain, Luray Caverns, Basic City, the Natural Bridge, Grottoes of the Shenandoah, the cities of Richmond and Washington, and Mt. Vernon.

The round-trip rate, including all necessary expenses, is $55 from New York, $53 from Philadelphia, and proportionate rates from other points.

Each tour will be in charge of one of the Company's tourist agents. He will be assisted by an experienced lady as chaperon, whose especial charge will be ladies unaccompanied by male escort.

Special trains of parlor cars are provided for the exclusive use of each party, in which the entire round trip from New York is made.

For detailed itinerary apply to ticket agents or to Tourist Agent, 1196 Broadway, New York, or Room 411, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

New B. & O. Station in Baltimore

The new passenger station of the B. & O. R. R., at the intersection of Mt. Royal Avenue and Cathedral Street, Baltimore, Md., was opened for business September 1.

The new station, which will be known as Mt. Royal Station, is one of the finest buildings of its kind in America. It is located in the residential section of the city, and is easily accessible by street railway service from all parts of the town. Camden Station will remain in use as heretofore, and all trains running over the Philadelphia division will stop at both stations. All tickets to or from Baltimore will be honored to or from either station, and baggage will be checked to either station at the option of the passenger.

TRAVELERS' R. R. GUIDE Formerly Appletons'.
R. R. Maps and Time-Tables. Conveniently Indexed.
Monthly—25 cents. 24 Park Place, N. Y.

TRAVEL

"Where Times are Prosperous"

Rocky Mountains

TAKE THE . . .

ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

To Denver, Colorado Springs, or Pueblo.

ONLY DIRECT LINE TO COLORADO SPRINGS, MANITOU AND PIKES' PEAK

4 HOURS QUICKER TIME TO CRIPPLE CREEK which should be included in your trip, and an investigation of the resources of this place may well repay your visit.

Tourist Dictionary ...Sent Free... Apply for it.

Address JOHN SEBASTIAN,
Gen'l Pass. Agent,
CHICAGO.

Travel

THE OVERLAND LIMITED

The Fastest Train in the West

RUNNING

EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

VIA THE

UNION PACIFIC
THE OVERLAND ROUTE
WORLD'S PICTORIAL LINE.

TO UTAH
29 hours from Missouri River.
44 hours from Chicago.

TO CALIFORNIA
2½ days from Missouri River.
3 days from Chicago or St. Louis.

THE ONLY LINE
in the West operating Buffet Smoking and Library Cars.

Send for Advertising Matter | E. L. LOMAX
Gen. Pass. & Tkt Agt, Omaha, Neb.

EUROPE

European Winter Resort
INNSBRUCK, TYROL, AUSTRIA

1,900 feet above the sea, with dry, bracing climate; center for Sleighing Excursions; fine University, Hospital, etc. HOTEL TIROL (Open all the year.) Large, airy, sunny rooms, well furnished; superior cuisine; modern conveniences. Best references. Reduced rates in winter. Illustrated pamphlets on application. CARL LANDSEE, Prop'r.

CROWN HOTEL
Scarborough, Eng.

Occupying the finest position in this beautiful seaside resort. Electric lights and bells throughout. Continental entrance lounge newly added. Terms on application. DOUGLAS GORDON (late of the Gordon Hotels, Lim.).

CHESTER, ENGLAND QUEEN HOTEL
First-Class Hotel, connected with the General Railway by covered Way. Lift. H. T. GOULD, Manager.

Stratford-on-Avon, England Golden Lion Hotel
This favorite Inn was known in Shakespeare's time as "Ye Peacocke Inn," 1613. JOHN FRY, Prop.

MELROSE, SCOTLAND
The Abbey Hotel ABBEY GATE AND
George and Abbotsford Hotel
HIGH STREET.—The only First-class Hotels in Melrose, both overlooking the ruins, and only two minutes' walk from Railway Station. Hotel 'Buses attend all Trains. G. HAMILTON, Proprietor.

Hotel Mont-Fleuri
TERRITET MONTREUX
LAKE OF GENEVA
600 Meters Above the Sea

First-class Hotel; most delightful and healthy situation; splendid view over the lake and the Alps; highly recommended to American families; summer and winter residence; lift, electric lights; moderate terms; omnibus at station Territet.
Circulars of The Outlook.

Europe

Munich, Germany
"Bayerischer Hof" (BAVARIA) Most fashionable Hotel
250 ROOMS & SALOONS
Electric Light, Lift, etc. Moderate terms.
Prop're, TH. SEIF^{we}. Director, H. SCHLENK

HOTELS AND RESORTS

California

HOTEL GREEN PASADENA, CAL. Accommodation for 400 guests. Occupies an entire block. Souvenir mailed.
G. G. GREEN, Owner. J. H. HOLMES, Mgr.

Arlington Hotel
Santa Barbara, Cal.
E. P. DUNN, Manager. Perpetual May climate. Horseback-riding, ocean bathing every day.

Colorado

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo.: The Antlers
Illustrated book, describing Colorado Springs, sent on request by E. BARNETT, Proprietor.

Connecticut

Crest View Sanitarium
Greenwich, Conn.
A quiet, restful establishment for the care and treatment of chronic invalids. Unexceptional location and surroundings for health, rest, or recreation. H. M. HITCHCOCK, M.D.

District of Columbia

FOR SALE in Washington, D. C., near British Legation, a fine double, corner house, 20 rooms, including 11 bedrooms, 4 bathrooms. Best construction. 6,000 square feet of ground besides parking. Will sell before November at low price, or rent for $2,200 per year. Address HOUSE OWNER, 800 H St., N. W., Washington, D.C.

New Hampshire

HOTEL LAKE VIEW, Mascoma Lake.—Fine locality for bird and squirrel hunting. Good fishing and duck shooting. Reduced rates for the fall months.
W. A. SAUNDERS, Propr., Enfield, N. H.

FOR AN AUTUMN OUTING
in bracing climate, pine and balsam air, address SOO-NIPI PARK LODGE, New London, N.H. Private hotel on east shore of Lake Sunapee, 1,200 ft. above sea. Modern improvements, home comforts, and quiet. 400 acres of forest-covered private grounds. Grouse and woodcock shooting; trout and salmon fishery operations; boating, beach-bathing, mountain drives and rambles; rich autumn foliage. N. Y. physician. Rooms for September and October at reduced rates.

New York

Dr. Strong's Sanitarium
Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

For health or pleasure. The appointments of a first-class Hotel. Elevator, electric bells, sun-parlor, and promenade on the roof. Suites of rooms with baths. Massage, Electricity, all baths and health appliances. New Turkish, Russian, and Natural Sulphur-Water baths. Dry tonic air, Saratoga water, croquet, lawn-tennis, etc. Open all the year. Send for illustrated circular.

Oak Crest Spring Valley, N.Y. A private home for invalids and aged people. Situated in the beautiful Ramapo Hills. A very healthy neighborhood. Pleasant drives over well-kept roads. Modern improvements. Write E. E. POTTS, Spring Valley, N. Y.

Churchill Hall STAMFORD, N. Y.
Open until November 1st. Thoroughly heated. Reduced rates for the autumn and winter months. For views and full information apply to F. H. Scofield, 1 Madison Ave., N.Y., or send for illustrated circular. S. E. CHURCHILL, M.D.

AUTUMN IN THE MOUNTAINS

WALTER'S SANITARIUM

WALTER'S PARK
(WERNERSVILLE), PA.

Sanitary treatment is a science in itself. For more than thirty years the Drs. Walter have been engaged in study, investigation, and practice, and in addition to a location unequaled for natural advantages and a sanitarium unsurpassed in its facilities, are able to offer the most comprehensive advantages for the recovery of health, and the season of the year is now here in which the best results can be obtained. Address for illustrated catalogue, ROB'T WALTER, M.D., as above.

GRAND VIEW SANATORIUM

WERNERSVILLE, PA.

The "Grand View" as seen from the Lebanon Valley

Delightful fall climate. Steam heat and open grates. Dry air. Grand scenery. A substantial table and home comforts. Rates and full information gladly sent. Drs. WENRICH & DEPPEN.

New York

GLEASON SANITARIUM

ELMIRA, N. Y.

1852 (Formerly Elmira Water Cure) 1896

REST AND RECREATION

GUESTS RECEIVED WITH OR WITHOUT MEDICAL ATTENTION

Pure Spring Water; Good Table; Fine Views; Pure Air. All forms of Baths, Electricity, and Massage. All modern improvements. Under the care of medical graduates of long experience. Send for illustrated Booklet.

"INTERPINES" Wickham Park, Goshen, N. Y.

A Beautiful, Quiet, Restful "HOME."

Particularly adapted to Chronic and Nervous Invalids of refinement who require all the appointments of an elegant modern home, together with the constant attention of skilled physicians and trained nurses. Address FREDERICK W. SEWARD, M.D., Resident Physician.

THE GLEN SPRINGS Watkins Glen, N. Y.

A Sanatorium for those Seeking Health and Rest under the Medical management of experienced Physicians.

Neptune Brine Baths, for Rheumatism, Gout, and Nervous Diseases. Neptune Spring is a 67° Brine, containing the largest amount of Chloride of Calcium of any Spring in the world.

Carbonated Neptune Brine Baths (the Nauheim treatment), for chronic diseases of the Heart. All approved forms of Hydrotherapy and Electricity, Massage, Swedish Movements, Turkish and Russian Baths.

Valuable Mineral Springs, Muriated, Alkaline, Chalybeate, Iodo-Bromated, and Brine, especially efficacious in disorders of Digestion, Gouty conditions, Diabetes, Anæmia, Nervous diseases, and Chronic affections of the Kidney.

Climate mild, dry, and equable. No Malaria. No Hay-Fever. Location overlooks thirty miles of Seneca Lake. Sixty acres of private Park, Golf Links, Tennis Courts, Bowling-Alleys, &c. All the appointments of a first-class hotel. No Insane or other objectionable cases received. Correspondence with physicians solicited. Send for illustrated book.

WM. E. LEFFINGWELL, Manager, Watkins, N.Y.

Pennsylvania

The Water Gap Sanitarium Pa.

Vermont

MAPLEWOOD HOTEL

RANDOLPH CENTRE, VERMONT

OPEN ALL WINTER Special prices for fall and winter months. Said by many leading physicians to be the best location in New England for people with throat and lung troubles. Further information with pamphlet may be had at 86 Massachusetts Avenue, Boston, or above address.

Wisconsin

PENNOYER SANITARIUM

KENOSHA, WIS.

FALL the best time for treatment. For illustrated prospectus address N. J. PENNOYER, M.D., Manager. Chicago Office, 70 State St. Tuesdays, 1:30 to 4.

EDUCATIONAL

New York City

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY

Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established 1855. 3 East 14th St., N. Y.

University Law School

Sixty-second year begins Oct. 1, 1896. Confers LL.B., also (for graduate courses) LL.M.

DAY AND EVENING CLASSES

CLARENCE D. ASHLEY, Dean.

Address for catalogue, REGISTRAR, University, Washington Square, East, New York.

Miss S. D. Doremus

BOARDING and DAY SCHOOL for GIRLS

REOPENS OCTOBER 1st.
735 Madison Avenue, New York.

MRS. ELLIMAN'S KINDERGARTEN AND ELEMENTARY CLASS opens Oct. 1st. Training-class for kindergartners. One year's course. Practice work. Class limited. 1786 Broadway, N. Y. City.

The Misses Ely's School for Girls

RIVERSIDE DRIVE
85th and 86th Streets, New York

160-162 West 74th Street, New York

THE VELTIN SCHOOL

Reopens October 9th. School for Girls. College Preparation. Fire-proof School Building.

New York City

TWENTY-FIFTH YEAR OF

MISS GIBBONS' SCHOOL

New York City, 55 West 47th St. Mrs. Sarah H. Emerson, Principal. Primary and Advanced Classes. Preparation for all Colleges. A few boarding scholars taken. Reopens Sept. 30, 1896.

The Misses Graham (Successors to the Misses Green)

Boarding and Day School for Girls (established 1816). New location. 176 West 72d Street, Sherman Square, NEW YORK

Teachers College New York, Morningside Heights, 120th St., West—Department of School Supervision. Planned with special reference to meeting the requirements of candidates for higher degrees, and open to all who wish to prepare to be school principals, supervisors, and superintendents. Send for circular of information and Bulletin.

Walter L. Hervey, President.

Kindergarten Training School with Practice School

Two years' course. Reopens Oct. 1st at 305 East 41st St., N. Y. City. Address Mrs. M. F. WALTON, Rochelle Park, New Rochelle, N. Y.

The Arundel School for Girls 70 W. 90th St. Reopens Sept. 30th. Primary and advanced classes. Special primary training for boys. Boarding pupils. Mrs. E. H. WEED.

BERKELEY SCHOOL

(Combining city and country life), New York City. Besides the day school thirty-five boarding pupils are received, in two separate buildings, under seven resident teachers, securing the most complete home life. Fire-proof school house, armory, gymnasium, ten-acre playground—the Berkeley Oval—Oval Cottage, Manual Training, and Military Drill fully presented in the register for '96. 250 boys have been prepared for the leading colleges. JOHN S. WHITE, LL.D., Head Master.

Misses Whitfield and Bliss Boarding and Day School for Girls, 41 West 124th Street, Mount Morris Park New York City. Reopens October 1st.

A TEACHER of ten years' experience, residence New York City, desires pupils. Prepares for all colleges, academic and scientific; advanced scientific, laboratory, and classical work. Has just finished engagement with sons of distinguished U.S. Senator, to whom he will refer. Refers by permission to Rev. Dr. R. Heber Newton, of All Souls' P. E. Church. Address until Oct. 1st, P.O. Box 153, Elkins, W.Va.

California

POMONA COLLEGE, Claremont, Cal.—Full College courses leading to degrees of B.A., B.L., B.S. Degrees recognized by University of California and other similar graduate schools. Thirty-five miles from Los Angeles. An Academic course. Preparatory school preparing for all institutions connected with the College. Address C. G. BALDWIN, President.

Connecticut

Brookfield Center, Fairfield Co., Conn.

The Curtis School for Young Boys

A strong life in school and out, full of normal activities and healthy conditions. A clean moral atmosphere, a loyalty, a high purpose—full of help for your boy's manhood. Home life; single rooms. $500. 22d year. A book full of suggestion. FREDERICK S. CURTIS.

The Housatonic Valley Institute Cornwall, Conn.

Among the Berkshire Hills of Northwestern Connecticut. Home School for boys. Classical, Scientific, Business, Preparatory Courses. Thirteenth year. H. B. MacFarland, S.B., L. W. Arnold, A.B., Principals.

Woodside Seminary Terms, $500 to $700. City advantages for culture and study. Experienced teachers. Miss SARA J. SMITH, Principal, Hartford, Conn.

THE

Hotchkiss School

LAKEVILLE, CONN.

Prepares for the best colleges and scientific schools. The next year will begin Sept. 16, 1896.
EDWARD G. COY, Head Master.

LYME, CONN.—Home School for Little Boys. Careful training and watchful oversight in pleasant, healthful country home. Entire charge throughout the year if desired. Address Miss A. N. GRIFFIN.

Mrs. and Miss Cady's School for Girls

56 Hillhouse Avenue, New Haven, Conn.

Circulars sent on application.

PRIVATE TUITION AND HOME. PREPARATION FOR COLLEGE.—References: President Patton of Princeton, President Dwight of Yale. Rev. J. C. Wyckoff, A.M., 65 Grove St., New Haven, Ct

Connecticut

Miss Baird's Institute for Girls

NORWALK, CONN.—25th year. Primary, Academic, and College Preparatory courses. Music, Art, and the Languages. Careful attention to morals and manners. New buildings, steam heat, gymnasium.

OLD LYME, Conn. Boxwood School for Girls

Elective and college preparatory. Special advantages in Art and Music. Separate department for girls under twelve. Mrs. RICHARD SILL GRISWOLD.

District of Columbia .

Chevy Chase French and English Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies.—Half an hour from Washington, D. C., by electric cars. French the Language of the house. Reopens October 1, 1896. Address Mlle. Léa Bouligny, P. O. Station E, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C. (Cor. M and Eleventh Sts., N.W.)

Mount Vernon Seminary

English, French, and German Boarding and Day School for Young Girls. Opens September thirtieth.
Mrs. ELIZABETH J. SOMERS, Principal.

Maryland

1405 Park Ave., Baltimore, Md.

RANDOLPH-HARRISON

Boarding and Day, College Preparatory, and Finishing School. Resident native French and German Teachers. Special advantages also in Music, Art, and Gymnastics.
Mrs. JANE RANDOLPH HARRISON RANDALL, Principal.

Massachusetts

Eastern Teachers' Agency

Miss E. F. FOSTER, Manager

50 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

TELEPHONE, BOSTON, 775-2

Teachers furnished for all grades of public and private schools, Specialists in any desired branches, Tutors and Governesses.

TRAINING OF ATTENDANTS

The classes, under the care of the Mass. Emergency and Hygienic Association, Dr. John Homans, 2d President, for the training of women in the care of the sick and aged, will be resumed Oct. 5th, 1896, and continue through the winter. Tuition, $15.00 for nine weeks' instruction, including practical demonstration. Dr. Anna G. Richardson, Instructor. For further particulars apply to the Secretary, 18 Exeter St., Boston.

BRADFORD ACADEMY

Founded 1803. For the higher education of young women. Classical and scientific course of study, also Preparatory and optional. Year begins Sept. 16, 1896. Apply to Ida C. Allen, Prin., Bradford, Mass.

THE CAMBRIDGE SCHOOL A select, private school for girls.

Best preparation for college. Many courses not leading to college. Comforts of home. Mr. ARTHUR GILMAN is the Director, Cambridge, Mass.

PROSPECT HILL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

GREENFIELD, MASS.

A thorough education with good home influence.
Established 1869.
Miss IDA F. FOSTER,
Miss CAROLINE R. CLARK, } Principals.

LOWELL, MASS. ROGERS HALL

A Home School for Girls and Young Women. Certificate admits to Smith and Wellesley. Reopens October first. Terms, $750. References: Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer, Mrs. Frederic T. Greenhalge. For further particulars address Mrs. E. P. UNDERHILL, M.A., Principal.

MONTVALE, MASS.

Ashley Hall Home School

for Young Ladies. Ten miles from Boston. Music, Art, and Languages. Thorough preparation for College.
Miss WHITTEMORE, Principal, Montvale, Mass.

Newton Home School FOR GIRLS

Opens Oct. 1st. Preparatory for college. Courses for special students. Address Mrs. WILLIAM M. BAKER, Principal, 602 Center St., Newton, Mass.

Windsor Hall School

prepares girls for Radcliffe and other colleges. Studies elective in other courses. Comfortable home. Ten miles from Boston. Dr. CHARLES H. CLARK, Principal,
WABAN, MASSACHUSETTS

New Hampshire

COLBY ACADEMY, New London, N. H.

$200 to $250 a Year. Co-educational. 44th Year.
Send for Catalogue. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, PRESIDENT

New Jersey

IVY HALL

BRIDGETON, NEW JERSEY.—Home and College Preparatory School for Young Ladies. Certificate admits to Smith. Established 1861. Mrs. J. ALLEN MAXWELL, Principal.

SOUTH JERSEY INSTITUTE Bridgeton, N. J.

27th year begins Sept. 16. Both sexes. Prepares for any College, Teaching, or Business. French, German, Art, Music, Gymnasium. Competent Physical Director. Spacious campus and athletic field. Pure water, drainage perfect. H. K. TRASK, Principal.

Englewood, N. J. (14 miles from New York)

Dwight School for Girls 8th year.

New, pleasant home; finest educational advantages. College preparation. Miss CREIGHTON. Miss FARRAR.

MISS GERRISH'S School for Girls

Englewood, New Jersey
Collegiate and special courses of study.

FREEHOLD, NEW JERSEY

Young Ladies' Seminary

Preparation for College. Seminary Course. Post-Graduate Studies. Art, Music, Oratory. For catalogue apply to the Misses SEWALL, Principals.

The secret of Thomas Arnold's influence over his pupils was personal contact. Boys want sympathy and they cannot be permanently influenced till they feel they have it.

Lakewood Heights School

Among the Pines
THOROUGH AND ATTRACTIVE.

Aim: The development of moral, intellectual, and physical manhood.

JAMES W. MOREY, Lakewood, N. J.

Montclair Military Academy,

Montclair, N. J.

If your son is going into business, he will need readiness in figures and the best possible command of the English language. But, even more, he must have such a training that promptness, obedience, order, persistence and honor will be to him not special efforts but fixed habits.

Send for our circular.

J. G. MACVICAR,
Head Master.

Miss Townsend's School for Girls

Academic and college preparatory departments. Special courses. Sept. 29. 54 Park Place, Newark, N. J.

Mountain Station, Orange, New Jersey

Mrs. Dorr's School for Girls

Healthful location. Home comforts. Music. Art. All Departments. College preparation. Advantages of New York.

SUMMIT, N. J. Near New York

The Kent Place School for Girls

Principal, Mrs. Sarah Woodman Paul, late of Wellesley College. Modern methods. College preparation. Home comforts for boarding pupils. Reopens Oct. 1st.
HAMILTON W. MABIE, President.

New York

Wells College for the higher education of young women.

The catalogue gives full information about entrance requirements, courses of study, scholarships, expenses, etc., and will be mailed upon application to WILLIAM E. WATERS, Ph.D., President, Aurora, N. Y.

CANANDAIGUA, N. Y.

Granger Place School for Girls

A Collegiate Course of Study. Diplomas given. Preparatory course admits to leading colleges by certificate. Special attention given to the culture of girls who are not expecting to enter college, but desire a thorough and practical education.

MISS BENNETT'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Irvington-on-Hudson, N. Y. Opens Sept. 23d, 1896. An exceptional school with the most desirable school features, 20 miles from New York. Refers to Charles Dudley Warner, &c. Apply to the Principals,
Miss MAY F. BENNETT, Miss ELEANOR W. ROSE.

ST. JOHN'S SCHOOL

MANLIUS, N. Y.
Next term begins September 16th, 1896.
Apply to WM. VERBECK.

NEW YORK, Newburgh.

The Misses Mackie's School for Girls

Academic and College-Preparatory. Special advantages in Art and Music. Certificate admits to Vassar and Wellesley.
One and a half hours from New York.

New York

LYNDON HALL SCHOOL

For Young Ladies. 48th year. College preparation.
SAMUEL WELLS BUCK, A.M., Poughkeepsie, N. Y

Rockland Institute

Nyack-on-the-Hudson, N. Y.

Through preparatory school for Young Men and Boys near N. Y. Fits for college or business. A safe Home with careful training and discipline. Superb, healthful location overlooking the Hudson. The only school with free saddle-horses and ponies for drill and recreation. Moderate rates. Ill. Catalogue of Capt. J. WILSON, A.M., Prin.

Sing-Sing-on-Hudson, N. Y.

Mt. Pleasant Military Academy

with separate departments for small boys. 82d year. References: Hon. Joseph H. Choate, Hamilton W. Mabie, L.H.D. For beautifully illustrated year book address THE PRINCIPALS.

HOME INSTITUTE A Boarding and Day School for Girls.

College preparation, Music, Languages, and Art.
Miss M. W. METCALF, Principal, Tarrytown-on-Hudson.

Ohio

Mt. Auburn Institute

The H. Thane Miller School

For Girls and Young Ladies

This noted School of Language, Literature, and History was established in 1856, and each succeeding year has witnessed its continued growth in usefulness and influence. It is beautifully located in one of the healthiest and handsomest suburbs of Cincinnati, is of easy access, and has a commanding view of the city. Among many attractive features are special courses in History of Art; Preparation for Foreign Travel; Eminent Lecturers throughout the entire year; Music and Art; Elective Courses of Study. The limited number of pupils received gives opportunity for special attention to Home Training and Social Culture. For catalogue and full information address
Mrs. H. THANE MILLER, or } MT. AUBURN,
Miss EMMA LOUISE PARRY, } CINCINNATI,
Associate Principal, } OHIO.

1020 Prospect Street, Cleveland, Ohio

Miss Mittleberger's School for Girls

Prepares for all Colleges open to women.
Fall term begins September 23

Pennsylvania

Miss Baldwin's School FOR GIRLS

BRYN MAWR, PA.
Preparatory to Bryn Mawr College

MISS FLORENCE BALDWIN, Prin. Within five years more than fifty pupils have entered Bryn Mawr College from this school. Certificate admits to Smith, Vassar, and Wellesley. Diploma given in both General and College-Preparatory Courses. Fine fire-proof stone building. 25 acres beautiful grounds. For circular address the Secretary.

ST. LUKE'S

Bustleton, near Philadelphia, Penna.

A school of the highest class in an exceptionally healthful location. St. Luke's boys now in Harvard, Princeton, Univ. of Pa., Yale, Trinity, West Point, Mass. Inst. of Tech., &c. Illustrated catalogue.
CHAS. H. STROUT, F. E. MOULTON.

OGONTZ SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES

Opens Sept. 30. Established in 1850. Twenty minutes from Philadelphia, two hours from New York. For circular, apply to Principals, FRANCES E. BENNETT, SYLVIA J. EASTMAN, Ogontz School P.O., Pa.

Miss Gordon's French and English Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies and Little Girls COLLEGE PREPARATORY

4110 and 4112 Spruce St., Philadelphia, Pa.

WALNUT LANE SCHOOL

Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa.

Boarding and Day School for Young Ladies. Reopens Sept. 23d. Academic and College Preparatory courses.
Mrs. T. B. RICHARDS, Prin.
Miss S. L. TRACY, A.M., Associate.

THE WALTON-WELLESLEY SCHOOL

2101 and 2103 Spruce St., Philadelphia

For Girls. Possesses finest private property in city. Boarding and day. 15th year. Academic, College Preparatory, and Musical Depts. For illus. catalogue and references address Dr. and Mrs. JAMES R. DANFORTH.

Rhode Island

NEWPORT, R. I.

MR. JOHN B. DIMAN (A.M. Harvard) will open a small boarding-school for boys in Newport, R. I., Oct. 1, 1896. Preparation for any college or scientific school. For circular and references address Box 455, Newport, R.I.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

FRIENDS SCHOOL FOR BOTH SEXES

Founded in 1784. Excellent home. Students from 18 States. All denominations. Thorough work in English, Science, Classics, Music, and Art. Address
AUGUSTINE JONES, LL.B

The Macmillan Company. New Publications

NOW READY

THE PROPHETS OF THE CHRISTIAN FAITH

A SERIES OF ESSAYS

BY THE

Rev. LYMAN ABBOTT, Rev. FRANCIS BROWN, Rev. GEORGE MATHESON, Rev. MARCUS DODS, Rev. A. C. McGIFFERT, The Very Rev. W. H. FREMANTLE, Professor ADOLF HARNACK, Rev. A. M. FAIRBAIRN, Rev. T. T. MUNGER, Rev. A. V. G. ALLEN, and Very Rev. F. W. FARRAR.

12mo, cloth, $1.25

CONTENTS:

- I.—WHAT IS A PROPHET? By the Rev. LYMAN ABBOTT, D.D., Pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn.
- II.—ISAIAH AS A PREACHER. By the Rev. FRANCIS BROWN, D.D., Professor in Union Theological Seminary, New York.
- III.—THE APOSTLE PAUL. By the Rev. GEORGE MATHESON, D.D., Pastor of St. Bernard's Church, Edinburgh, Scotland.
- IV.—CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA. By the Rev. MARCUS DODS, D.D., Professor of New Testament Exegesis in New College, Edinburgh, Scotland.
- V.—ST. AUGUSTINE AS A PROPHET. By the Rev. ARTHUR C. McGIFFERT, D.D., Professor of Church History in Union Theological Seminary, New York.
- VI.—JOHN WYCLIFFE. By the Very Rev. W. H. FREMANTLE, D.D., Dean of Ripon.
- VII.—MARTIN LUTHER, THE PROPHET OF THE REFORMATION. By Professor ADOLF HARNACK.
- VIII.—JOHN WESLEY. By the Very Rev. F. W. FARRAR, Dean of Canterbury.
- IX.—JONATHAN EDWARDS. By the Rev A. M. FAIRBAIRN, D.D., Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford, England.
- X.—HORACE BUSHNELL. By the Rev. T. T. MUNGER.
- XI.—FREDERICK DENISON MAURICE. By the Rev. A. V. G. ALLEN, D.D.
- XII.—CAN WE BE PROPHETS? By the Very Rev. F. W. FARRAR, D.D., Dean of Canterbury.

NEW VOLUME

History, Prophecy, and the Monuments;

Or, Israel and the Nations

By JAMES FREDERICK McCURDY, Ph.D., LL.D.

Vol. 2.—TO THE FALL OF NINEVEH. 8vo, cloth, $3, net.

Already Published:

Vol 1.—TO THE DOWNFALL OF SAMARIA 8vo, $3 net.

The Third Volume will appear early in 1897

"The author of this work has given us a scholarly, carefully prepared, and valuable study of the written and monumental records containing the history of Israel."—Herald and Presbyter.

"A work which American scholarship has just reason to feel proud of. It is a notable contribution to an important subject. . . . It is to be heartily recommended to the general public as a very useful compendium. For Bible readers and Bible students alike, it is an invaluable guide."—New World.

THE REV. DR. VAN DYKE'S YALE LECTURES

The Gospel for an Age of Doubt

Being the Yale Lectures on Preaching for 1896

By HENRY VAN DYKE, D.D.

Author of "The Reality of Religion," "Story of the Psalms," "Little Rivers," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.75.

"Dr. Van Dyke is devout and loyal to his faith, but he recognizes in a marked degree the sincerity and even value of honest doubt. It is needless to say—for the lectures themselves say it—that Dr. Van Dyke believes firmly in the supernatural revelation of religious truth. It is this faith coupled with his understanding of and sympathy with the inquiring spirit of the age which has filled his lecture room at New Haven to overflowing, and which will command for his lectures when they appear in book form a wide circle of readers."

NEW VOLUME. NEARLY READY

THE MODERN READER'S BIBLE

A Series of Books from the Sacred Scriptures, presented in Modern Literary Form. Each number of the Series Edited, with an Introduction, by RICHARD G. MOULTON, M.A. (Camb.), Ph.D. (Penn.), Professor of Literature in English in the University of Chicago. 18mo, cloth, each 50 cents; or in paste grain morocco, gilt top, 60 cents.

THE KINGS—Bible History, Part IV.: The Chosen Nation under a Secular Government side by side with a Theocracy.—Books of II. Samuel, I. and II. Kings.

ALREADY PUBLISHED

- GENESIS—Bible History, Part I.: Formation of the Chosen Nation.
- THE EXODUS—Bible History, Part II. Migration of the Chosen Nation to the Land of Promise.—Book of Exodus, with Leviticus and Numbers.
- THE JUDGES—Bible History, Part III.: The Chosen Nation in its Efforts towards Secular Government.—Books of Joshua, Judges, I. Samuel.
- THE PROVERBS—A Miscellany of Sayings and Poems embodying Isolated Observations of Life.
- ECCLESIASTICUS—A Miscellany including longer compositions, still embodying only Isolated Observations of Life.
- ECCLESIASTES—WISDOM OF SOLOMON—Each is a Series of Connected Writings, embodying, from different standpoints, a Solution of the Whole Mystery of Life.
- THE BOOK OF JOB—A Dramatic Poem in which are embodied Varying Solutions of the Mystery of Life.
- DEUTERONOMY—The Orations and Songs of Moses, constituting his Farewell to the People of Israel.
- BIBLICAL IDYLS. The Lyric Idyl of Solomon's Song, and the Epic Idyls of Ruth, Esther, and Tobit.

"The usefulness and value of this series is well shown in the skillful editing and helpful presentation of this particular book of the Bible."—The Congregationalist, Boston.

"We welcome the new series most heartily, since, notwithstanding it 'does not touch matters of devotion and theology,' it strips the Books of Wisdom of their 'mediæval and anti-literary form by which our current Bible allows them to be obscured,' and thus makes their wonderful ethical insight all the more appreciable."—Biblical World.

"It may almost be said that he (Prof. Moulton) has inaugurated a new epoch in Bible study. The scholars have been telling us for some years that the Bible is literature. Particular passages of beauty in it have been pointed out, and some single books, such as Job and the Song of Songs, have been put in literary form and given a literary interpretation by special writers. But Prof. Moulton is the first one, so far as I know, to deal with the whole Bible as a collection of literature, to discriminate between literary study and historico-critical study, and to present the results of the former in such a form as to render them available to the ordinary English reader."—Rev. Dr. LYMAN ABBOTT.

THE FIRST EDITION EXHAUSTED ON THE DAY OF PUBLICATION. SECOND EDITION NEARLY READY

A BOOK OF OLD ENGLISH BALLADS

With an accompaniment of Decorative Drawings by GEORGE WHARTON EDWARDS and an Introduction by HAMILTON W. MABIE

The illustrations consist of fifty decorative head and tail pieces, and twenty-nine full-page plates, which are printed in color. Beautifully printed on deckle-edged paper, 12mo, cloth, gilt, gilt top, $2.00. Also an Edition de Luxe, printed on hand-made paper and limited to 100 copies. Bound in crushed buckram, paper label, octavo, price $5.00 net.

NOW READY—MR. F. MARION CRAWFORD'S NEW NOVEL

TAQUISARA

By F. MARION CRAWFORD, author of "Don Orsino," "Casa Braccio," "Adam Johnstone's Son." 2 vols. 12mo, buckram, $2.00.

⁂ Another of the stories of Italian life, which are conceded to be Mr. Crawford's most successful work.

NEW NOVEL BY HENRY JAMES

The Other House

By HENRY JAMES, author of "Embarrassments," "The Bostonians," "The Aspern Papers," "Partial Portraits," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

"It is one of the best by that well known and appreciated author. Those who enjoyed his 'Daisy Miller' and 'The Europeans' will read this volume with pleasure. He tells a good story well."—Albany Times-Union.

"A most meritorious work, and one which can hardly fail to add to the author's reputation."—N. Y. Herald.

SECOND LARGE EDITION OF MRS. HUMPHRY WARD'S NEW NOVEL, SEQUEL TO "MARCELLA"

Sir George Tressady

By Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD, author of "Marcella," "Robert Elsmere," "The History of David Grieve." 2 vols. 16mo, buckram, $2.00. (Uniform with "Marcella.")

"'Sir George Tressady' denotes the high-water mark of Mrs. Humphry Ward's literary achievements. 'David Grieve,' which previously represented the best thought and richest art of its author, is distinctly outranked by the new masterpiece."—The Critic.

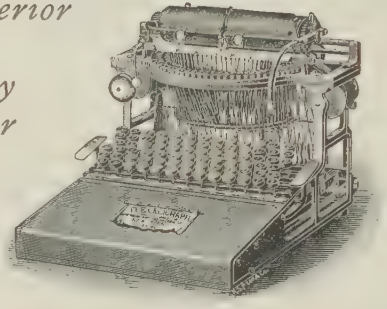
THE MACMILLAN COMPANY, 66 Fifth Avenue, New York

Use any test you like

and you will find the

No. 4 Caligraph Typewriter

Superior to every other



NEW CATALOGUE AND PAMPHLETS MAY BE HAD ON APPLICATION

AMERICAN WRITING MACHINE CO.
237 Broadway, New York, U. S. A.

Unusually Good Value in Dress Goods.

Curly Boucle, in three of the most fashionable colors,
75 cents per yard.

Illuminated Bourette, with knots of bright color,
75 cents per yard.

50-inch Checked English Tweeds—new tailor pattern,
75 cents per yard.

James McCreery & Co.

Broadway and 11th Street,
New York.

Health—Beauty—Grace

are all affected by the waist a growing girl wears. A waist modelled hygienically, yet making prominent nature's beautiful curves is the

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE

Corset Waist

for Misses. Supports skirts and stockings. Made in sizes and styles to suit all figures. Long and short waist, high and low bust. Children's 25c. to 50c. Misses' 50c. to $1. Ladies' $1 to $2. For sale by all retailers.

Florence Home Needlework

for 1896 (second edition just out) gives full and explicit instructions for embroidering tea-cloths, centerpieces, and doilies in all the latest and most popular designs, including Rose, Jewel, Delft, Empire, Festoon, Wild-Flower, and Fruit Embroideries. It tells just what shades of silk will give the best results, as well as the quantity required for each piece, and complete directions for working. Also rules for knitting Baby's Shirt and Cap and crocheting Baby's Bonnet. 96 pages. Over 60 Illustrations. Sent to any address for 6 cents in stamps. Mention "for 1896 Florence Home Needlework."

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY 35 BRIDGE ST., FLORENCE, MASS.

The Outlook

A·Family·Paper

Volume 54 Saturday, 31 October, 1896 Number 18

AMONG the signs which point to an increasing expectation of defeat among the leaders of the free silver coinage party is an apparent attempt on the very eve of the election to change the issue, or at least to confuse it, and the resort to some counsels which it is impossible to regard as worthy of serious consideration by honorable men. Among these is Mr. Bryan's advice to workingmen to wear McKinley buttons, march in McKinley parades, and even contribute to McKinley funds, while voting and secretly laboring for McKinley's defeat. The Australian secret ballot does not afford even a specious excuse for such a course. A secret ballot has no analogy and gives no support to hypocrisy in political action. We print in another column ex-President Harrison's condemnation of this counsel and make it our own. We do not doubt that there have been some sporadic attempts by employers to coerce their employees into voting for McKinley, for neither all the fools nor all the knaves are yet dead, and sometimes one who is both amasses money enough to be a small employer of labor, or has shrewdness enough to get a subordinate position in a great corporation. There have been, apparently, well-authenticated cases of some small-minded and short-sighted employers dishonestly paying wages in Mexican dollars as an "object-lesson"—which of course it is not—or warning their workingmen that stoppage of the factory and dismissal of the hands would follow Mr. Bryan's election. But such cases are certainly rare. Nor can we think the workingmen who are wearing McKinley buttons, marching in McKinley processions, and carrying McKinley flags, while intending to vote for Mr. Bryan, are much more numerous. That there is a large silent vote in this country is unquestionable; that there is a large hypocritical one we do not believe. Workingmen are not cowards, and all hypocrisy is cowardice. The assertion, whoever makes it, that any considerable body of American workingmen are Bryan voters and McKinley paraders is an insult to the class; and counsel to enact a lie for the sake of a chance to earn a livelihood is counsel to play a coward's part. The Outlook repeats, alike for the benefit of employer and employed—though with a strong conviction that there are very few in either rank who need the affirmation—the strong and sinewy declaration of ex-President Harrison:

> I WOULD HAVE THE WORKINGMAN ASSERT HIS MANHOOD: NOT ONLY VOTE AS HE PLEASES, BUT WEAR THE BUTTON THAT HE PLEASES, MARCH IN THE PARADE THAT HE PLEASES, AND ASK NO MAN'S CONSENT.

* * *

Quite as bad in spirit as the counsel to play the part of cowards, and more dangerous in possible results, is the attempt to set the workingmen as a class against employers as a class. So long as this attempt was made only in speeches we passed it by, partly because speeches are at best very inaccurately reported, partly because such appeals may ordinarily be disregarded as part of the froth and foam of politics. But the official pronunciamento from the free silver headquarters, issued with the approval of the Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, gives to this method a significance which it did not possess when confined to rhetorical paragraphs clipped from political speeches. This pronunciamento declares—what is certainly not true—that "it is generally admitted by Chicago manufacturers that the election of McKinley will be followed by a reduction in wages" varying from 10 to 25 per cent., and advises workingmen, if in doubt as to the truth of this assertion, to appoint a committee to confer with the employers. "Let this committee ask," says the circular, "for an agreement in writing either that wages shall be raised in the event of the election of Mr. McKinley or that the present rate of wages shall be maintained, or, finally, demand an absolute guarantee that no cut in wages shall follow the triumph of the single gold standard. This will settle the whole business. Do not take any one's word for it. Have a contract made and signed, and let it specify at least two years in which there shall be no material wage reduction." The men who have issued this document must know that honest and honorable business men cannot and will not make pledges unless they know that they can fulfill them, and that intelligent business men, however hopeful they may be of better times in the event of McKinley's election, have not and cannot have any such assurance of it as would justify their making contracts which, if their reasonable hopes were disappointed, they could not fulfill. This proclamation can be regarded only as a deliberate, and we fear we must say unscrupulous, attempt to stir up class antagonisms for political effect. We are of the opinion that the recoil of this gun will be more dangerous than its discharge.

* * *

As the political campaign nears its end, the fight in the Central Western States, which are the real battle-ground, becomes hotter and sharper. Probably not in the memory of living men has a political contest in these States been carried on with such thoroughness of detail, in discussion, dissemination of literature, and canvassing of individual voters. The farmers in these great States have been visited by representatives of both parties, have been deluged with reading matter of all kinds, and have finally been counted on one side or the other. The Republican National Committee has probably in its possession the results of the most complete and accurate pre-election canvass ever made. The State of Michigan affords a good illustration of what is going on in its sister States. There is hardly a town of any size in that State which is not hearing daily addresses on both sides of the currency question. In Detroit a meeting in opposition to free silver coinage has been held every week-day from twelve to one o'clock for two months, and the great hall has been packed on each successive day. The free-silver men have held similar continuous meetings on the steps of the City Hall and elsewhere, and the whole State may be said to be a seething caldron of political discussion and campaign work; all this in the most orderly fashion and without any great evidences of excitement; certainly entirely without violence. There are few signs of bitterness, in spite of the great earnestness of feeling on both sides. The general drift of opinion seems to be that Mr. McKinley will be elected; that the sentiment against free coinage has been rapidly gaining ground in many quarters during the past few weeks; and that some of the Central Western States which were doubtful at the beginning may now fairly be counted on the Republican side.

⁂

The one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the granting of the original charter to the College of New Jersey, long known as Princeton College, was celebrated last week under clear skies, amid autumnal splendors, and in the presence of the most distinguished company of scholars ever gathered in this country, and of a great body of alumni. The exercises began on Tuesday, when the first academic procession, splendid in gown and hood, made its way from Marquand Chapel to Alexander Hall, where President Patton preached on "Religion and the University." In the afternoon there was a reception to the delegates of other institutions of learning, the address of welcome being responded to by President Eliot, of Harvard, on behalf of the American universities and scientific societies, and by Professor Joseph John Thomson, of Cambridge University, on behalf of the Old World universities and scientific societies. A formal reception in the library followed, and the day ended with a concert by the Damrosch Orchestra, the programme being especially appropriate to the occasion. Wednesday was in certain respects the most interesting day of the three, and the streets of Princeton were crowded in the early morning, while decorations made the old town gay with orange and black. The academic procession was watched with the greatest interest as it approached Alexander Hall, headed by President Patton, Dr. Charles E. Green, and Governor Griggs.

⁂

The ode read by Dr. Henry van Dyke was characteristically felicitous in expression and clear in thought, with a ringing moral quality. It touched with a fine and strong hand the salient features in the history of Princeton, and interpreted sympathetically the spirit of its history. A few characteristic lines reveal its quality:

"I see thee standing in a lonely land
But late and hardly won from solitude,
Unpopulous and rude,—
On that far Western shore I see thee stand,
Like some young goddess from a brighter strand,
While in thine eyes a radiant thought is born,
Enkindling all thy beauty like the morn,
And guiding to thy work a powerful hand.
Sea-like the forest rolled in waves of green,
And few the lights that glimmered, leagues between,
High in the north, for fourscore years alone
Fair Harvard's earliest beacon-tower had shone;
Then Yale was lighted, and an answering ray
Flashed from the meadows by New Haven Bay.
But deeper spread the forest, and more dark,
Where first Neshaminy received the spark
Of sacred learning to its frail abode,
And nursed the holy fire until it glowed.
Thine was the courage, thine the larger look,
That raised yon taper from its humble nook;
Thine was the hope, and thine the stronger will,
That built the beacon here on Princeton hill.
'New light!' men cried, and murmured that it came
From an unlicensed source with lawless flame;
It shone too free, for still the church and school
Must only shine according to their rule.
But Princeton answered, in her nobler mood,
'God made the light, and all the light is good.
There is no war between the old and new;
The conflict lies between the false and true.
The stars, that high in heaven their courses run,
In glory differ, but their light is one.
The beacons, gleaming o'er the sea of life,
Are rivals, but in radiance, not in strife.
Shine on, ye sister towers, across the night!
I, too, will build a lasting home for light.'"

Professor Woodrow Wilson's address on "Princeton in the Nation's Service" brought out in clear light the extraordinary place which Princeton has filled through her graduates in the public life of the country.

⁂

In the afternoon there was the usual football game, watched by six thousand people, in which Princeton was easily victorious. After dark came the feature of the celebration, which belonged specially to the undergraduates, and which contributed a picturesque element to the stately academic festival. This was the torchlight procession, made up of graduates of the University from a long series of classes and ending with a great crowd of undergraduates; torches flashing from end to end of the line, with humorous transparencies and floats with apt and witty local hits, illuminations from electric lamps and endless rows of Chinese lanterns, and a general air of gayety and good fellowship characteristic of an institution whose social life is exceptionally agreeable. Thursday marked the culmination of the exercises, which may be said to have been reached when President Patton announced, in Alexander Hall, that the College of New Jersey is hereafter to be known as Princeton University, and that the sum of $3,353,491 has been given as a kind of centennial endowment fund to be devoted to different purposes. A large number of degrees were conferred upon scholars and men of distinction in different ranks of life; in fact, modern scholarship has never been more generously, or, on the whole, more discriminatingly, recognized than on this occasion. Among the literary men who received academic recognition were Professors Baird, Lounsbury, and March; Mr. Charles Dudley Warner, Mr. Horace E. Scudder, Mr. Richard Watson Gilder.

⁂

President Cleveland, whose presence had everywhere been greeted enthusiastically, was the orator of the day, and rose fully to the occasion, his exposition of the college man's duty as a citizen being characteristically urgent in its emphasis upon patriotism and duty. The dignity of the utterance and the deep emotion of the speaker were widely commented upon. The peculiar function of the universities in public crises was very happily suggested in a paragraph:

> "While the excitement of party warfare presses dangerously near our National safeguards, I would have the intelligent conservatism of our universities and colleges warn the contestants in impressive tones against the perils of a breach impossible to repair. When popular discontent and passion are stimulated by the arts of designing partisans to a pitch perilously near to class hatred or sectional anger, I would have our universities and colleges sound the alarm in the name of American brotherhood and fraternal dependence. When the attempt is made to delude the people into the belief that their suffrages can change the operation of natural laws, I would have our universities and colleges proclaim that those laws are inexorable and far removed from political control. When selfish interest seeks undue private benefit through governmental aid, and public places are claimed as rewards of party service, I would have our universities and colleges persuade the people to a relinquishment of the demand for party spoils and exhort them to a disinterested and patriotic love of their Government for its own sake, and because in its true adjustment and unperverted operation it secures to every citizen his just share of the safety and prosperity it holds in store for all. When a design is apparent to lure the people from their honest thoughts and to blind their eyes to the sad plight of National dishonor and bad > faith, I would have Princeton University, panoplied in her patriotic traditions and glorious memories, and joined by all the other universities and colleges of our land, cry out against the infliction of this treacherous and fatal wound. I would have the influence of these institutions on the side of religion and morality. I would have those they send out among the people not ashamed to acknowledge God, and to claim his interposition in the affairs of men, enjoining such obedience to his laws as makes manifest the path of National perpetuity and prosperity."

The festival ended with a great dinner in the evening, and Princeton University is to be congratulated on the good taste, the dignity, and the variety which characterized the elaborate exercises. The task of making the arrangements for the occasion was a very heavy one; it fell largely upon the shoulders of Professor West, who discharged it with extraordinary energy, judgment, and success. The whole country will unite in an expression of hearty good will to Princeton University, so long eminent for the patriotic service and work of its graduates.

⁂

These brilliant academic exercises in Princeton were followed on Saturday by academic exercises in New York City less impressive to the eye but not less indicative of educational life and progress. The new site of Barnard College on Morningside Heights, opposite the grounds of Columbia College, was formally dedicated by the laying of the corner-stones of two new and imposing buildings—Milbank Hall and Brinckerhoff Hall. The day was fair, the sky bright, and there was a great concourse of the friends of higher education for women in this city. The procession, which moved at half-past two from the Teachers' College, included many of the most prominent people in the city; there was a goodly number of college men in academic costume, and touches of color here and there gave an element of picturesqueness to the company. The addresses were made by Bishop Potter, President Low, and Mr. W. C. Brownell, temporary Chairman of the Trustees of Barnard College. The speeches were brief, as such speeches ought to be, but they were full of stimulating memories and of inspiring hopes. President Low and Bishop Potter share the gift of always having something to say and of saying it. The corner-stone of Milbank Hall was laid by the daughter of Mrs. A. A. Anderson, who places herself, by her generous benefaction, in the noble company of the founders of colleges; and that of Brinckerhoff Hall by Miss Emily James Smith, the Dean of the College. The large block of ground on the Boulevard which is to be the site of Barnard College cost $160,000; Milbank Hall is to cost $170,000, and Brinckerhoff Hall about $130,000. The friends of the College have therefore secured during the past four years about half a million dollars. The institution now needs another half-million as an endowment. Those New Yorkers who have walked over the ground at Morningside Heights and have been able to see in imagination the group of buildings which is soon to crown what may be fitly called the acropolis of the island, have caught a vision of the greater metropolis that is to be—a vision which needs to be translated into stone and mortar, beautiful grounds, and magnificent endowments by the generosity of those who have found in this city the opportunities of fortune. Every man who has made a competency in New York owes it to New York to share his prosperity with the community. It is this spirit which has given Chicago so intense a civic life, and has built up a great metropolis in so short a time. Half a million dollars endowment for Barnard College is sorely needed.

⁂

Eternal vigilance seems to be the price of public forest reservations. They appeal so deeply to the cupidity of mankind that they become the constant prey of numerous forms of vandalism, many of which succeed in masking themselves under the guise of public benefit. For many years efforts have been on foot among far-seeing and patriotic citizens of New York State to secure the enlargement and permanent protection of the Adirondack reservation. Its importance to the water system of the State, and as a conservator of health and natural beauty, has compelled the long-delayed, almost reluctant, attention on the part of the lawmaking power, but without materially curbing the greed of those who found their account in the spoliation of the timber. Some time before the assembling of the last Constitutional Convention it was discovered that the laws regulating the cutting of trees within the reservation were utterly ineffective, by reason of the lack of support in local public sentiment. In executing permits to cut the larger timber the most wanton destruction resulted, and a flagrant disregard of the interest of the State was exhibited. After long and careful examination of the question by the late Constitutional Convention, a proviso was incorporated in the Constitution, at the instance of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, prohibiting altogether the cutting of timber on public lands. This we believe was the only proviso of the Constitution which received the unanimous vote of the Convention, and the ratification of the Constitution by the people seemed to place the reserve beyond reach of the lumberman's ax. But the enemies of trees were not to be so speedily outwitted, and at the last Legislature a constitutional amendment was proposed, which is to be voted upon on the 3d of November, virtually undoing the reform already accomplished, by permitting the leasing of five-acre plots.

⁂

The one specious argument under which this is urged, and which, we regret to say, has the support of the State Fisheries, Game, and Forest Commission, is the old one—that it will prove "a source of revenue to the State." This argument is a measure of the depth to which the State policy on this subject may descend. Here is a great forested region in the hands of the State, the spoliation of which would inflict a calamity upon the entire watershed of northern New York, as well as upon the canal system of the State, to the ultimate destruction, moreover, of the sanitary advantages of the Adirondacks, which the advocates of the new amendment affect to have at heart. Its preservation is beyond considerations of expense. It would be better from every point of view that the Adirondack reserve should remain intact, even if it were to be a considerable charge upon the taxpayers of the State—a remote contingency; for if the destruction of the forests which are now in private hands in the vicinity of the public reservation continues at the present rate, there is no doubt that the time will come when the principle of eminent domain will have to be invoked to save what is left. The leasing of small tracts throughout the park would simply result in the defeat by piecemeal of the main object for which the park was originally established. Voters would do well in this matter to follow the lead of the New York Board of Trade and of the New York State Association for the Protection of Fish and Game, in opposing at the polls this vicious amendment.

⁂

The semi-centennial of the American Missionary Association, of which we give a report in another column, was more than a local or a denominational jubilee. When this Association was formed, the slave power apparently dominated the continent. Texas had been annexed, with a promise that four new slave States should be organized out of it. The Mexican War was bringing another immense territory into the United States, which, but for the discovery of gold in California and the unexpected growth of anti-slavery sentiment in the North, would have been largely if not wholly given over to slavery. The two great political parties were bidding against each other for the vote of the slave States. The great missionary societies and a majority of the churches were silent respecting slavery or apologetic for it. This was the hour when a few earnest men, who did not think they must abandon Christianity because they were philanthropists, organized the American Missionary Association to preach a law embodied in the Golden Rule, and a Gospel which should proclaim liberty to all men—the law of human brotherhood and the gospel of freedom. The half-century of our noblest National life was remembered in Boston in this Jubilee celebration. It will be adequately celebrated only by a life of fifty years as courageous, honest, far-seeing, and devoted in completing the work which emancipation only began.

* * *

All prophecies that we have seen have been disproven in the appointment of the successor to the late Dr. Benson as Archbishop of Canterbury. The great office has been filled by the choice of the Rt. Hon. and Rt. Rev. Dr. Frederick Temple, Bishop of London, Provincial Dean of Canterbury, and Dean of the Chapels Royal. Dr. Temple is one of the ablest men in the Church; the only occasion for surprise at the appointment is furnished by his age; he is now about seventy-five years old. He has had a distinguished career both at the University and in the Church. He graduated at Oxford with the highest honors, after which he became a tutor there; later was master at Rugby, and afterward Bishop of Exeter. In 1885 he was appointed Bishop of London. He is the author of the first of the seven "Essays and Reviews" about which there was great controversy some years ago. He is a striking example of the tendency towards conservatism which often comes with age. A few years since he was recognized as a somewhat extreme Liberal; now he is regarded as a somewhat extreme Conservative: formerly he was a Broad Churchman; now he is a High Churchman. The honor could not have been more worthily conferred, and it has fallen upon the one next in the line of succession, although that order has not usually been observed in the past. Indeed, Mr. Gladstone offered the position to Dean Church before it was conferred upon Dr. Benson. If he were twenty years younger, a great career might be predicted for the new Primate. Under the circumstances his term of office must be brief, and no great innovations need be expected.

The New Archbishop of Canterbury

* * *

Several recent incidents indicate a better hope for the future of the Armenians—though the indications are slight, and not too much can be safely deduced from them. The Black Sea, apart from special treaty, is an open sea, to which any naval or commercial power would have right of access through the Dardanelles. But by the Treaty of London of 1871 the parties to that treaty agreed that foreign ships of war should not exercise this right without the consent of the Porte previously obtained. The United States is not a party to that treaty, and therefore is not bound by its provisions. The semi-official announcement that permission would not be granted to the United States to send a war-ship through the Dardanelles was replied to by fitting out the Bancroft, a vessel small enough to be within the limits of a guard-ship for the use of our Ambassador, such as the other Powers maintain in the Golden Horn. The Turk understands actions better than words, and the present indications are that not only will the Bancroft be allowed to pass up the Dardanelles, but that its presence will materially expedite some long and vexatiously delayed negotiations; that the Porte will abandon the claim hitherto maintained that a Turk cannot be naturalized and become a United States citizen without the Sultan's consent; that he will recognize as American citizens returning Armenians if naturalized and provided with United States passports; and that families of such Armenians will be hereafter permitted to come to the United States. Not less significant is the fact that the official organ of the Russian Government at St. Petersburg has suddenly learned that Christians have been massacred by the Turks at Van, which is near the Russian frontier. This, we believe, is the first information which has reached the Russian press of the Armenian massacres, and it indicates that Russia may be preparing to move on Turkey; if so, it is probably with the consent and approbation of Great Britain.

* * *

The criticism of Mr. Gladstone's position by the Rosebery portion of the Liberal party has apparently done nothing to change his opinions or lessen his courage. The cable announces a letter written by him last week and read at a meeting in London called to protest against Turkish atrocities. He is reported to have said that it would be a wild paradox to say that the enforcement of British treaty rights to stop the systematic massacres in Turkey would provoke hostilities from the Powers. He added that it would be abandoning duty and prudence to advertise beforehand, for the ears of the Great Assassin, that British action was limited to what the most backward of the Six Powers deemed sufficient. Following this comes Mr. Gladstone's cablegram to the managers of the Armenian meeting in New York City: "I rejoice in the rescue of any faction of the Armenians from the fangs of the Great Assassin. So long as the inaction of the Powers continues, the situation will be shameful as well as sad, but the deeds are recorded both in Heaven and before man, and constantly accumulating horrors may yet work the downfall of that crying iniquity known as the Turkish Empire." Per contra is the extraordinary report that the German Emperor has taken this time to present to the Sultan a portrait of himself and, of all things most incredible, his wife, as a special token of his friendly regard, and, it is hardly too much to say, a notification to the other European Powers that any attack on the Porte will be regarded as an attack on his own personal friend, which Germany will be bound in honor to resent and resist. That in case of war Austro-Hungary would join her forces with those of Germany is certain; it is not certain whether Italy could keep out of the war, or, if she engaged in it, where she would be found. Terrible as a general European war would be, impossible as it is to see what would be the final issue, it is almost absolutely certain that it would end the domination of the Turk and result in the overthrow of the Ottoman Empire. Some events are worse than war; such an event is cowardly acquiescence in wholesale massacre.

⁂

The Italian royal wedding by which Princess Helen of Montenegro becomes the Crown Princess of Italy is a matrimonial event of no ordinary importance. It is known that the present Czar has had a friendly interest in furthering this event, both from family and from political reasons. So pleased was Alexander III. with the matrimonial alliances of two daughters of the Prince of Montenegro with members of the Russian royal family that he wished his son to become the husband of Princess Helen. The son, however, willed otherwise, but was enough impressed with the beautiful princess to have especial attention shown her at the Moscow coronation, and to see that she and the Crown Prince of Italy saw as much of each other as possible. The result is the marriage which was celebrated with fitting ceremonies in Rome on Saturday of last week. The impulsive and generous Italians are overjoyed at the event, for Victor Emanuel had advanced beyond the age when most princes marry. It has been an open secret that for years King Humbert has been endeavoring to obtain for his son a proper matrimonial alliance. Protestants were ruled out, of course, and there was slim chance of obtaining the hand of any Catholic princess, since the royal house to which she belonged had to choose between recognizing the King or abandoning fealty to the Pope. The difficulty, as we have seen, has been solved by Princess Helen, who from the Greek Catholic Church becomes a convert to the Roman Catholic. Up to within a few months the relations between Russia and Italy have been much strained on account of the Abyssinian war, but as the Prince of Montenegro was once spoken of by Alexander III. as "the only friend I have in Europe," it is understood that the strain has now been relieved. With Italy more and more drawn to Russia, and consequently to France, it is easy to see that the Triple Alliance may one day lose its weakest member.

⁂

The difficulties of the Spanish Government do not diminish as time goes on. On the one hand, the concession of anything like autonomy to Cuba would probably mean not only the overthrow of the Cánovas Ministry, but would very likely imperil the existence of the monarchy itself; on the other hand, the enormous expenses involved in the hitherto futile attempt to reconquer the island have brought Spain to the verge of bankruptcy. Money must be raised in large amounts, but the indications are that a loan cannot be made unless the Government's policy in Cuba is radically changed. No money will be forthcoming from European capitalists until there is a decided change in the Cuban situation, either in the way of decisive Spanish successes or of a great reduction of expenses. Neither of these conditions is likely to be secured.

The Political Issues

IV.—Safeguards of Democracy

History abundantly demonstrates that a chief peril of democracy lies in the unregulated and unrestrained passions of the populace. The judgment of the common people can be trusted when there is time to call it into exercise. But wise judgment requires deliberation, and deliberation requires time; too often masses of men acting together without deliberation, and inciting each other's illusive hopes or feverish fears, create now a sanguine delusion, now a perilous panic, the one as groundless as the other. This tendency of the mass to become a mob and of the mob to act without reason is sufficiently familiar to the student of history, sufficiently evident to the reflective student of our own times; it needs not here to be either demonstrated or illustrated.

To guard against this dangerous tendency of democracy and save it from self-destruction, the framers of the United States Constitution provided three restrictions on the otherwise absolute power of the majority. They discarded the single chamber which had been attempted by France—though afterwards abandoned even there—and provided a United States Senate, which could not be radically changed at a single National election. They framed a written Constitution, and reserved to the States all the powers not in that Constitution expressly delegated to the Federal government. And they provided a Supreme Court, whose members, elected for life, would be as independent of popular prejudice and passion as permanency of tenure could make them, and to the final arbitrament of this independent tribunal referred all questions which might arise as to the respective powers, under the Constitution, of the Executive and Legislative Departments. The ablest political writers, both English and American, have recognized in the Supreme Court the greatest contribution made in recent history to the science of self-government. Any attempt to weaken the threefold restraint which democracy has thus put upon itself—by the construction of the Senate, the supremacy of the written Constitution, and the authority of the Supreme Court—is fraught with peril to self-government upon this continent. Is such an attempt implied in that clause of the Democratic platform which intimates a possible method of overcoming the decision of the Supreme Court respecting the constitutionality of the income tax law? That clause is as follows:

> "We declare that it is the duty of Congress to use all the constitutional power which remains after that decision, or which may come from its reversal by the Court as it may hereafter be constituted, so that the burden of taxation may be equally and impartially laid, to the end that wealth may bear its due proportion of the expenses of the government."

The Outlook does not believe in a Federal income tax. But it is perfectly legitimate for those who do so believe to employ in favor of the imposition of such a tax all the constitutional power which remains after the Supreme Court's decision. Whatever is objectionable in this plank of the Chicago platform is comprised in the apparently innocent words "or which may come from its reversal by the Court as it may hereafter be constituted." Whether these words are innocent or menacing depends upon the construction given to them. For there are three ways in which that Court may be hereafter so constituted as to reverse its decision. The number of Judges may be increased by Congress, and the increased number may be appointed by the President for the purpose of reversing the income-tax decision. This is a perfectly possible method of reconstituting the Supreme Court, and it is one which would wholly destroy its moral power. The decision of such a Court would have no greater moral influence than the decision of the party whose creation it was and whose decree it registered. Or, without any such instant reversal of its decision by partisan legislation, when from time to time death produced vacancies, the President, or successive Presidents, might appoint Judges for the purpose of securing a reversal of the preceding decision. This would produce a similar result by a slower process. The tendency would still be to make the Supreme Court a partisan tribunal, constituted, not to render impartial judgments, but to facilitate party purposes. The fact, if it be a fact, that something like this has been done in the past does not tend to reconcile the lover of his country to a repetition of the operation in the future. Finally, in the natural course of events the personnel of the Supreme Court must change, as deaths and new appointments follow each other, and it is entirely possible that by this process such changes might be made in the Court, accompanying a gradual change in public sentiment, as would secure from the Court in the future a judgment that the income tax is constitutional. To such a reconstitution of the Court no one could or would object. For it is a mistake to suppose that any considerable body of Americans think that Court is infallible, or that it is above criticism, or that one may not differ from it, or hope for a future reversal of its decision, or even anticipate such a reversal. It is the function of the Supreme Court, not to be a substitute for the popular judgment or the popular will, but to put such a check on the popular will as to preserve the Nation from its own undeliberate judgment and consequent follies, panics, and passions.

There are three reasons for apprehending that more than such a very gradual and unintentioned reconstitution of the Supreme Court is threatened by the plank which we have quoted above.

The first is the very ambiguity of the phraseology. A suggestion of peril is sufficient to put the cautious man upon his guard. It is not necessary to affirm that the more revolutionary thought was in the minds of those who drafted this platform; it is enough, in the absence of any clear and emphatic disavowal, to affirm that it is capable of that interpretation. If the Chicago candidates were elected, the country could not charge them with inconsistency if they attempted to reconstitute the Supreme Court by the most radical of the methods above suggested, and it is not impossible that the more radical of their party would charge them with cowardice if they did not.

A second reason for seeing a menace to the Supreme Court in this plank is the general spirit of the platform. That spirit may at least be characterized as one of popular impatience of restraints upon the popular will. The injustice wrought by the gold standard is to be corrected by the immediate free coinage of silver, regardless alike of foreign and domestic credit, of present contracts, and of serious commercial disaster. The ebullition of popular passion in a mob threatening the United States mails and inter-State commerce is not to be interfered with unless the local authorities choose to interfere. The power of the Executive to appoint party or personal favorites to office is not to be restrained by the regulations of a civil service system. It is quite consonant with these expressions of an impatient democracy that it should wish to revolutionize the Supreme Court whenever it finds the Supreme Court an obstacle to its wishes.

A third reason for seeing in this plank a menace to the independence of the judiciary is to be found in the well-known opinions of the Presidential candidate who stands upon it. If in his defense of this plank he has disavowed the more drastic interpretation, we have failed to see such disavowal; and his previously expressed opinions, though they do not of themselves justify the charge that he would sanction an immediate reconstruction of the Supreme Court for the purpose of securing a judicial approval of the income tax, do justify the assertion that, in his judgment, that Court should be a reflection of the popular will, not a check upon it. We quote from an interesting article by the Hon. William J. Bryan, published in the June number (1896) of the "Nebraska Literary Magazine," a quarterly issued by the English Club of the University of Nebraska. The paragraph here quoted contains all that he says respecting the Federal judiciary:

> "The present method of selecting Federal judges is wrong. Nearly all the States elect the judges who preside over State courts, and find no difficulty in securing competent officials. When a judge is elected for a limited term, he can be re-elected if his conduct is such as to so merit it; but a judge appointed for life can only with very great difficulty be deposed, no matter how unsatisfactory he may prove. A President, who generally appoints upon the recommendation of a few members of the dominant party, cannot choose as intelligently as the people themselves, and the power to depose by a refusal to re-elect is an essential restraint even upon a judge. All human beings, to a greater or less extent, acquire a certain bias from association and environment, and on the great questions which divide society that bias unconsciously influences the mind of the judge. Life positions are apt to breed indifference in the public servant, no matter in what position he is placed."

To Mr. Bryan's opinion on this subject The Outlook is diametrically and earnestly opposed. Whether judges are elected or appointed is a minor matter: some very good judges have been elected—and some very bad ones; some very bad judges have been appointed—and some very good ones. What is essential is that, once elected or appointed, they should be absolutely independent of the electing or appointing power. It is well-nigh as fatal to the independence of the judiciary to have the judges come before the people periodically for re-election—and before the machine for renomination—as it is to have them dependent on a king or a president for continuance in their office. Officials appointed to carry out the will of the people ought to hold offices of short tenure. But judges are not appointed to carry out the will of the people. They are often the only protection a hapless minority possesses against the tyranny of numbers. Anything which tends to make them subservient to popular impulse tends to the overthrow of popular government. For, as the most essential quality in the self-government of the individual is the power of self-restraint, so the most essential quality in democratic government is the same quality of self-restraint, at once symbolized and made effective in a judiciary absolutely independent of popular caprice.

In our judgment, a serious, perhaps the most serious, criticism on the Chicago platform and the Chicago party is the tacit condemnation in the first and the evident impatience in the second of the safeguards of democracy in the constitutional provisions for its self-restraint.

❧

The Work of a Great University

President Cleveland in his address at Princeton last week admirably summed up the seemingly many functions of a great university—though they are really all one; and Dr. van Dyke, in his historical article, written with the affectionate reverence of an alumnus, and published in this week's issue of The Outlook, shows how nobly this function has been fulfilled by Princeton University.

Princeton is, in the popular estimation, synonymous with conservatism; but we need constantly to remind ourselves that conservatism is the mother of progress, and that all true radicalism is a great conservator; that progress in the future grows naturally and normally out of the past; and that a root which has in it no growth and a branch which has lost its vital connection with the root are equally in the way that certainly leads to death. The function of a great university is to learn from the past the lessons which experience teaches, and teach them to new generations; it is to discern beneath the ever-varying phenomena of life the eternal reality of which they are the manifestation. It is, therefore, at once scientific and religious: scientific because it ascertains and interprets the laws which phenomena reveal; religious because these laws are themselves expressions of God, and a comprehension of them is a comprehension of him, and his presence and authority in the world. Thus the evolution of great universities is itself the evolution of the community in which they live and which they influence. The university which is true to itself is at once an inspirer of progress and a conservator of truth, a leader toward a better future, but a cautious and wise leader, never forgetting the lessons of the past. In the university shines that light of experience which Patrick Henry so eloquently characterized as the only true light upon the pathway of a safe progress.

Thus the great university is the especial need of a democratic country and a democratic age. For the peril of democracy lies in its passions and its self-conceit. Great bodies do not always move slowly; on the contrary, great masses of men, acting collectively, are very apt to be governed by their prejudices, to be impatient of the delay necessary for deliberation, to take impulse rather than reflection as their guide, and to be led rather by the impassioned and imaginative orator than by the cautious and sober-minded statesman. And this tendency to undeliberate and impulsive action is intensified by the spirit of self-conceit which democratic institutions tend to foster in the unthinking. That all power is vested in the people, that their will is supreme, that they can do whatever they will, is constantly told them by press and from platform. Under such teaching there is a tendency to imagine that majorities are both infallible and omnipotent. Said Professor Felix Adler in his sermon last Sunday morning: "We cry to the other civilized nations, Watch! Copy! Follow us. We have nothing to get from you, but you must come and learn from us. Alienists call this the 'delusion of grandeur.'" Democracies are always susceptible to this "delusion of grandeur," and our remarkable growth since the formation of the Union has intensified this dangerous susceptibility in America. The remedy is that at which Professor Adler has also hinted. We must learn that "our assertions are not borne out by the facts. We have drawn on the old nations for all the best they have and the best we have. Our culture, our art, our literature, is determined by them."

This double service the university renders to the community: it restrains the passions and it mitigates the self-conceit of democracy. It sends out every year into the community men prepared, by their education, their social position, and in many cases by the very nature of their profession, to be leaders of the people—men who have thoroughly learned that every question has two sides, that unregulated impulse is a dangerous guide, that all experiments are hazardous and the greater the nation the greater the hazard, and that no progress is possible which is not preceded by deliberation and counseled by caution; men, too, who know that to older nations we owe all the best we have, that the lessons of their experiments cannot be safely disregarded, that the people are neither infallible nor omnipotent, that their suffrages cannot change the operations of God's laws, which are inexorable, eternal, and immutable. This effect he who has been observant of university life has often seen produced on individual students, who have entered the university, as the phrase is, "very fresh," and who graduate, after four years of university influence, with the enthusiasms of their youth unabated, but moderated, controlled, and directed by the lessons of historic experience.

The growth of universities and colleges in the United States is, therefore, one of the encouraging signs in our National life. The growth of Princeton from a body of students 268 in number in 1868 to 1,100 in 1896 is a typical fact. Analogous growth would be disclosed by a similar history of the other great universities of our land. But this growth in number of students is the least important fact. The standards of education have been improved, the methods advanced, and the equipment enriched in equal or greater proportions. That we have in the United States to-day upwards of 66,000 students who are pursuing the highest education, the great majority of them under competent instructors, and with measurably adequate facilities in books and apparatus, who are going out to be the teachers, preachers, jurists, and let us hope editors and political leaders, of the Nation, is a fact full of hopeful augury for the future.

We need not add here any eulogy of our own to the eloquent and well-deserved panegyric which Dr. van Dyke has written with a self-restraint more eloquent than any abandon could be. The history of Princeton is—with differences of detail—the history of every university of equal or nearly equal age, and will be in time the history of every more recently endowed university. The glory of Princeton is one which every college graduate, nay! every patriotic American, shares; for it is a part of the glory of the Nation, to whose highest and noblest life Princeton has so richly ministered.

Why Not?

To the Editors of The Outlook:

I wish to make a suggestion which possibly has come to you from many directions. Can we not add force to the movement in America and England respecting the Armenians, by asking the leaders of religious thought to appoint a day for this subject? Here is our Thanksgiving, close at hand; soon, too, our Christmas. How dreadful it is for us to sit in peace, and let this destruction go on unheeded! On some Sabbath before Christmas, the sooner the better, there ought to be a sermon preached upon the Armenian question in every church in the land—in every church in Christendom.

Now, it seems to me that The Outlook could take this up, and that such men as Dr. Hale, Washington Gladden, Dr. Parkhurst, Albert Shaw, and fifty other people whom you can reach, could help to begin this thing properly, and give it the preliminary organization. If such a thing can be started, let me know what I can do to help in California. The old-fashioned "day of fasting and prayer" would seem to fit the case, but there ought also to be a good deal of fighting spirit infused into the movement. It is time that the Turk was hurt—time for another crusade, on a much better basis and with more reason than in the Middle Ages.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES H. SHINN.

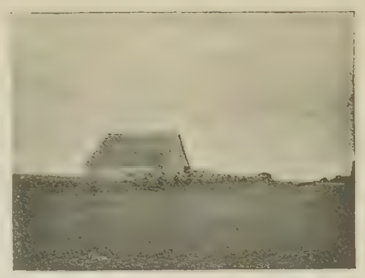
University of California, October 20, 1896.

We heartily approve this suggestion. It were well if every pulpit in the land could give a trumpet call to the conscience and courage of Christendom against the unreportable cruelties now being practiced in Turkey. The Outlook will co-operate in any way it can with such a movement.

The Spectator in the Northwest

The bonanza farm! How the words stir the imagination of the city dweller, or even of the tiller of the soil in the overcrowded East, with its books about "Ten Acres Enough"! What a difference between the old-fashioned farmer, whose work, though pleasant and healthful, was laborious and only moderately remunerative, and the "bonanza farmer," with his princely domain and his regiment of workmen to till it and to harvest the vast crop that would fill the granaries of Joseph in a single one of the seven fat years! The work of the one seems to be growing less and less attractive to the youth of the land, who yearly leave the old homesteads in increasing numbers for the easier life of the cities; the work of the other seems as alluring to the average dissatisfied mortal as the possession of a castle in Spain or a pleasure-dome of Kubla Khan's. The trouble with the bonanza farms is that there are not enough of them to go around; if Uncle Sam were to give us all one of these farms, instead of "forty acres and a mule" he would have to bestow ten thousand acres and a couple of hundred mules, to say nothing of reapers by the score and plows by the hundred. In fact, a good many of the bonanza farms are too big to be owned, as they are all too big to be cultivated, exclusively by one individual farmer; they are the property of joint-stock companies, and are operated by salaried employees just as is any ordinary commercial undertaking, raising wheat as a factory makes cloth, and paying dividends and salaries out of the product.

The Bonanza Farm Homestead



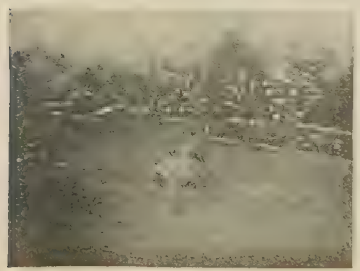
A Few Self-Binders

Hay Shed with 350 Tons of Hay

The Red River of the North

❀

Such was the character of the bonanza farm which the Spectator saw on a recent trip to North Dakota. In this farm there were some ten thousand acres in a single block of land, and elsewhere the company had five or six thousand more. Ten thousand acres may not seem impressive to the landless man whose thoughts have not been occupied with "sections," "quarter-sections," and "townships;" but the privilege of driving all day behind a good horse on one farm, and then seeing only a part of its great domain, would make almost any one realize the magnitude of a bonanza farm of the Northwest. Another thing that will help the average reader to get the bearings of a ten-thousand-acre tract was the remark of the farm's manager (the "Vice-President of the Company" gives one a better idea of the dignity of his official position) as, with the Spectator, he drove away from the railroad station at Larimore, the little frontier town whose name is closely associated with the big farm. "From this point," said he, "we plow a straight furrow six miles long." The Spectator was afterwards told that there was another section at the end of this furrow which was plowed separately, so that his informant might have said "seven miles;" but he was grateful for the moderation of the first statement. "The men start in the morning from the house and plow one furrow; they return by noon, plowing another furrow; and they do the same round in the afternoon. Four furrows constitutes their day's work." If the plowmen had to walk behind their teams and lift the plow around stumps and over stones, as they do in some places known to the Spectator, twenty-four miles of plowing would be a great day's work; but on seeing the plowmen later at work, the Spectator concluded that they had an easy job. They ride behind the plow, the soil is a soft, porous black loam that cuts like cheese—pot-cheese, let us say—and "the mules learn to do all the work on the place," remarked the genial manager, with only a half-twinkle in his eye as he said it.



"The Only Stone in the County"

Plowing "Section 27"

❀

The "Red River Valley" they call this region, but it has here none of the usual characteristics of a valley. In almost any direction one sees an apparently illimitable expanse of perfectly level prairie, for the most part covered with the finest wheat in the world. Now and then we pass a circular depression a couple of hundred feet in width, in which the wheat fails to grow with its usual luxuriance. The name "buffalo wallow" takes one back with a start to the time when these great ranges were the happy hunting-grounds of the Sioux, when the black shaggy bison roamed in thousands over the Dakota plains, and took their comforting dust-baths in these huge basins. Again the monotonous level is broken by a "cooly," not of the Celestial but of the terrestrial variety—a broad low depression which in springtime furnishes the bed for a streamlet running to the river, whose course in its deeply cut bed we see marked out by the trees growing along its banks—almost the only trees we do see, except here and there a "grove" of stunted cottonwood, the feeble result of the now repealed "timber culture act." Only two crops fail to thrive in this "garden of the world"—trees and stones. Not till late in the afternoon in his day's drive did the Spectator see a stone large enough to throw at a jack-rabbit—and then the stone he finally discovered was too large. He shows herewith a photograph which he took of this only aboriginal stone in the county. There are some others, but the residents say they were brought in as curiosities.

❀

Roads are easily made in this stoneless, level land; a road-scraper drawn by six horses cuts down the weeds and grass, and the road is made. The soil is so soft that a drive even over plowed land is not grievous. Such a drive the Spectator took in following up the plowmen shown in the picture. "Are they plowing a long furrow here?" he asked. "No; only a mile." There were eighteen teams at work here; when all the force is plowing they plow about three hundred acres a day. A farm like this employs nearly two hundred men during harvest time, who get from $20 a month to $3.75 a day. This force is gradually reduced until in winter there are only three or four men on the place. This economy of labor in part accounts for the large profits of these great farms; this Elk Valley Farm had paid as high as 40 per cent. on its investment, and even in a poor year had paid 16 per cent. And this latter with wheat at 50 cents a bushel! With wheat at 43 cents, however, which was the price in August of this year, the profits will be less; and some of the small farmers of this region assured the Spectator that they were being gradually pushed to the wall by the decline of prices. Bad weather, of course, hurts some; the Spectator overheard a fine specimen of the genus Granger—a large-limbed, huge-headed Colossus, one of a group who seemed in stature to be the fitting product of an environment of magnificent distances—say to his friends, "I have sixteen hundred acres up North, and not a hundred dollars' worth of stuff on the whole of it this year." The Spectator saw the fine house and barns of a man who in a dozen years had made a fortune of $40,000; he met another man who in the same place in the same time had made only a bare living and was anxious to sell his farm at any sacrifice.

A Load of Binding-Twine

Norwegian Farmers in Fargo

* * *

Railway construction seems to be almost as simple as road-building in this part of Dakota. The Great Northern, which has many branches through the State, appears to be laid out in simple geometrical fashion. The track stretches out ahead of the train in an absolutely straight line until it is lost in the distance. No curves to lessen speed, no bridges to perplex the railway builder: laying the ties and fastening the rails to them, mile after mile, seems to be all that railway art requires here. But, for all that, the railroads must be well built to carry the traffic. The great crops must all be carried away on these single-track roads, and the traffic can be imagined from the fact that a million bushels of wheat have been taken during one season from a single one of these local stations.

A Sea of Wheat

* * *

"Employment For All" was the agreeably optimistic inscription which the Spectator saw on a Fargo signboard. "The country is full of tramps; 150 got off here from one freight train yesterday," was the item which caught his eye in a Fargo newspaper. Was this a case of demand and supply? Unhappily, no. The employment, the Spectator found, was principally for man and wife (no children) on the farms in the surrounding country; there was no greater demand here than elsewhere for tramps as laborers. Occasionally, of course, the latter get work among the farmers, especially at harvest time; but a large percentage are not looking for work. Such were the colonies which were camped near the bonanza farm; they made nightly descents on the farm's vegetable gardens and pig-pens, but it was apparently judged to be safe policy to ignore their thieving. Under a freight platform during a shower the Spectator saw a motley gathering of perhaps two hundred of these wanderers (he regrets that his kodak failed him in the endeavor to take a picture of this group from the train); he read of the robbery of eighteen harvest-hands, after a pitched battle, by a regiment of tramps. So it seems that abundance of the richest soil in the world (only one-fifth of the Red River Valley, it is said, is under cultivation) open to settlement on favorable terms does not solve the problem of the "out-of-works."

Hinckley Redivivus
(Snap-Shot from Express Train)

"The Handsomest Street in the Country"

University of North Dakota

* * *

There are many Scandinavians in the Dakotas. Young Norwegians constitute the majority of the workers on the great farms; one sees "John Bjorgson, Tailor," on signboards, and "Landsökare!" on posters before land offices. The Spectator was approached in a large town by a quaint-looking old man who uttered broken words which were finally understood to mean, "Are you a Scandinavian?"—a compliment due probably to a fair complexion. The Spectator talked with a number of these people, and found them mostly intelligent but simple-minded folk. The Americans in this section share this intelligence, but add the characteristic Western "push" and alertness. They discuss politics in the cars, in the hotels, and everywhere, but they do it so well that one can almost forgive them for it! And they are so loyal to the West! They actually seem to love their blizzards themselves. The Spectator fell into conversation with a woman (a lady, the Spectator might remark, is still the preferred Western term) who had originally come from the East. "The first two or three years I was here," she said, "I was desperately homesick. Finally I went back East for a year. That cured me. I returned to the West, am thoroughly contented now, and would on no account go back to live in the East. The West is livelier. And the winters are much warmer than when I first came here."

A "Cooly"

* * *

The Northwest does nothing in a small way. It has the largest wheat-fields and the biggest flour-mills in the world, the longest rivers and the largest lakes, the severest blizzards and the deepest snows, and now it has the most remarkable "burnt district" to travel through. From Duluth to St. Paul for many miles one travels between endless files of charred tree-trunks, which raise their blackened skeletons as far as the eye can reach on either side of the track. Perhaps a thousand square miles are included in this district, which has scarcely yet begun to recover from the disastrous forest fires of 1894. And yet, strange to say, while the country seems ruined, the towns which were then destroyed have been largely rebuilt. The Spectator took a snap-shot from the rapidly moving train while it was passing Hinckley, the town which in 1894 lost half its inhabitants and all its property by the fire. He points with pride to the brick school-house which the Hinckley people are building, and also records with pleasure that he took the picture from one of the cars which helped to rescue the 475 people who ran the gauntlet of fire on that terrible day of '94, and heard the story from the lips of a brakeman who helped to rescue the survivors. How the people of this lumber town succeed in making a living now that the forests are destroyed, and what is the present raison d'être of Hinckley, are mysteries which the Spectator cannot perfectly comprehend, but the fact of recuperation seems evident.

Largest Flour-Mill in the World

◆

The "handsomest street in the country" is to be found in almost every thriving city; but, local pride aside, the Spectator would have little difficulty in giving his decision in the competition. It would be—the last one of these streets that he has seen. Is this a trifle ambiguous? It were better to remain so. But no one can fail to place Summit Avenue, St. Paul, near the head of the list of beautiful residence streets. It has charming cottages and stately mansions—so have other streets; it has broad sidewalks, smooth lawns, and fine trees—and so has many another aristocratic thoroughfare; it has a repose and a quiet dignity that belie its years—and wealth and exclusiveness have given these qualities to other residence quarters. But few streets have the natural advantages of situation that characterize Summit Avenue. It is within and yet seemingly without a great city; placed so high above the city that it seems to be apart from while yet of it; overlooks the busy marts of trade, and beyond them gives the tired eye and brain restful visions of river, woods, and fields; furnishes that delightful combination of city life and country scenery, of man's art and of nature's bounty, that seems to form the ideal outward setting for human happiness. There may be lovelier streets than this of St. Paul, but the Spectator doesn't wish to see them just yet. He will be satisfied for a while to have his memory of Summit Avenue undisturbed.

Princeton, 1746-1896

By Henry van Dyke, D.D.

PRINCETON is one of the three great historic American colleges which have done so much to mold the character and direct the development of this Nation. A century younger than Harvard, and nearly half a century younger than Yale, Princeton yet dates back, like them, to the formative period of American history. The celebration of its one hundred and fiftieth anniversary is an event of national importance, and, we may justly claim, of international interest. The record of its prosperity and growth is the record of an incorporated idea faithfully and beneficently applied to the conditions of American life.

The College of New Jersey was founded in 1746 to meet a condition and to embody a principle. The condition was the urgent need of more preachers of the Gospel in this new land—a need caused by that religious movement called the "Great Awakening," among whose leaders were George Whitefield, Jonathan Edwards, the Tennents, and other "New Light" divines. The principle was that the best way to meet this need, and to serve both Church and State, was to provide more freely for the liberal education of young men on a foundation definitely Christian and as distinctly non-sectarian.

Princeton is not now and has never been a denominational institution in any exclusive sense. It is true that the bulk of the money to support it has come from Presbyterian sources; but that is because the Presbyterian Church has always believed most strongly in liberal education. It is true, also, that Princeton in its turn has rendered a very large service to Presbyterianism in training men for the ministry; but this is no more than a fair return for the support which has been received. All the loyal sons of Princeton hope that this mutual relation of generous support and fruitful service between a great church and a great college will always be continued. But Princeton is so far from being a sectarian school that it is the first academic institution in America in whose charter the principle of religious liberty was distinctly embodied. The charter especially provides "that no person be deprived of any of the privileges of the said college on account of any speculative principles of religion; but those of every religious profession shall have equal privilege and advantage of education in said college." The first board of trustees of the College contained representatives of the Episcopal Church and of the Society of Friends. Among the graduates of Princeton there have been distinguished ministers of almost all religious denominations. The names of Bishops Hobart, Meade, McIlvaine, and Johns among the Episcopalians, and Doctors Manning and Smith among the Baptists, will indicate the quality of the contributions which Princeton has made to other churches than that from which she drew her chief support.

The College was at first established in the house of its earliest President, the Rev. Jonathan Dickinson, of Elizabethtown, N. J. It was then removed to Newark under the presidency of the Rev. Aaron Burr, the noble father of a notorious son. It was under his administration that the College was finally fixed at Princeton, in the year 1756. Largely through the warm interest and liberal patronage of Governor Jonathan Belcher, of the Province of New Jersey, Nassau Hall, its first college building, and one of the finest and most substantial structures of the kind in the American colonies, was erected. Under the first five Presidents, Dickinson, Burr, Jonathan Edwards, Samuel Davies, and Samuel Finley, the energies of Princeton were chiefly directed to supplying the need which called it into existence. The average size of the graduating class for the first twenty years was fifteen; and one-half of each class entered the Christian ministry. But in 1768 a new President, the Rev. John Witherspoon, was called from Scotland; and new conditions gave a new direction to Princeton's energies, and a new application to the formative principle of its life. The great struggle for liberty and national independence came upon the American colonies, and Princeton became in a peculiar sense a nursery of patriotism and a fountain-head of republican ideas. Witherspoon, although (or perhaps we might say because) he was born in Scotland, was peculiarly fitted to give clear and powerful and philosophic expression to such ideas. He was an ardent patriot, a wise councilor as well as "a high son of liberty," and the only clergyman and college professor among the signers of the Declaration of Independence. Under his administration of twenty-five and a half years, extending from 1768 to 1794, 489 students graduated. Of these 120 entered the ministry; among the remaining 369 graduates we find the names of 1 President of the United States, 1 Vice-President, 3 Judges of the United States Supreme Court, 1 Secretary of State, 1 Postmaster-General, 3 Attorney-Generals, 2 foreign ministers, 12 members of the Continental Congress, 24 members of the House of Representatives, 13 Governors of separate States, 20 officers in the Army of the Revolution, and at least 43 who took arms in defense of the liberties of their country. In the Convention which framed the American Constitution there were 55 members; 32 of these were college men. London, Oxford, Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Aberdeen contributed 1 each; 5 came from William and Mary, 1 from the University of Pennsylvania, 2 from Columbia, 3 from Harvard, 4 from Yale, and 9—the largest number of all—from Princeton. The two plans which were presented to the Convention were both the work of Princeton graduates. The large State plan was prepared by James Madison; the small State plan was the work of William Paterson; and the compromise which was finally adopted was suggested and supported by Oliver Ellsworth and William R. Davie, who were both Princetonians. In view of these facts, it is not too much to claim that the influence of Princeton in the formation of the United States was greater than that of any other college.

JAMES McCOSH, D.D., LL.D.

GRAVES OF THE PRESIDENTS OF PRINCETON COLLEGE

The record of Princeton during the middle period of its history, under the administrations of Presidents Samuel Stanhope Smith, Ashbel Green, James Carnahan, and John Maclean, is one of slow and steady growth and unfaltering devotion to the cause of liberal, Christian education. Two points are deserving of particular mention—the influence of Princeton as a mother of other colleges; and its attitude towards science as a necessary part of academic training. Of thirty-two colleges which were established in this country between the years 1746 and 1810, the founders or the principal supporters of seventeen were alumni of the College of New Jersey. Brown, Union, Hamilton, Washington, Hampden Sidney, Cumberland, and many other institutions of learning, drew their life and their principles from Princeton. Princeton was also the first of the American colleges to recognize the full importance of natural science, and to introduce the study of chemistry as a distinct branch of academic study. Dr. John Maclean was called from Scotland in 1795, as Professor of Chemistry; and his successors, Henry Vethake and Professor John Torrey, kept up the high standard of work which Dr. Maclean had begun. In later years the course of scientific instruction at Princeton was greatly enriched and enlarged. The John C. Green School of Science was founded in 1872. At least three Princeton professors have won an international fame as scientists—Joseph Henry, in Electricity; Arnold Guyot, in Physical Geography; and Charles A. Young, in Astronomy.

The history of modern Princeton begins in 1868. Just one hundred years after the arrival of President Witherspoon, a second Scotchman and an equally great one, James McCosh, was called to the presidency of the College. He also was an American "born out of his native country." He threw himself as promptly and as thoroughly as his great predecessor had done into the conditions of American life, and identified himself in citizenship and all other interests with his new home. He was a commanding personality, a man of mark, ardent in spirit, generous in heart, profound in intellect, clear and simple and strong in Christian faith. He came to Princeton with a firm resolve and a distinct policy. The College must be kept true to its ancient traditions as a Christian institution of sound learning and patriotic culture. At the same time it must be developed and enlarged to meet the new conditions of American life, and to become, as rapidly as possible, a modern university, with the fullest equipment for education in philosophy, science, and the liberal arts.

President McCosh was himself a philosopher, and his influence impressed upon Princeton the stamp of a distinctly philosophic spirit in regard to all the problems of scholarship and education. He was one of the first of orthodox divines to recognize, and to say publicly, that the theory of evolution was not necessarily hostile to religion. He held that the spiritual philosophy could only prove its right to exist by dealing frankly and fairly with all facts actually discovered by science. He was a firm believer in the liberty of scholarship. He taught his pupils to weigh conclusions rather than to take sides. The practical effect of his teaching and of his example was to lead men into an attitude of profound reverence toward truth and unshaken confidence in the verities of the Christian religion.

He introduced wide and fruitful changes into the college curriculum, but he introduced them in a conservative rather than in a radical spirit. The first two years of the academic course were still to be devoted almost entirely to required studies arranged very largely upon the old basis of the classics, mathematics, natural science, and philosophy. But with the third year of the course elective studies were introduced and given an increasing prominence and a wider range. The teaching force of the College was rapidly enlarged. New branches of study were introduced with almost every year; post-graduate courses and special schools were established; and the College moved forward swiftly toward a university basis. The increase in the number of students and in the influence of the College was remarkable, and has continued without intermission to the present time. At Dr. McCosh's accession the number of students was 268; at the present time Dr. Francis L.

VIEW OF FRONT CAMPUS

Patton, the twelfth President of Princeton, stands at the head of an institution of 1,100 students and over eighty professors and instructors—a powerful and harmonious association of non-professional schools, grouped around a central philosophic idea, and qualified to assume, with full right and dignity, the title of Princeton University.

In its physical aspects Princeton is one of the most beautiful and impressive of American seats of learning. The wise foresight of its founders gave it a most favorable situation on the long, sloping ridge of a hill, the highest point on the road between New York and Philadelphia. The campus, which is very extensive, is adorned with fine trees, many of which were planted by President Samuel Stanhope Smith, and are as old as the present century. It commands a wide prospect over the fertile plain of New Jersey, extending to the hills of the seacoast. The buildings, which have sprung up, as if by magic, during the last twenty years, are large and costly, and compare favorably with those of any other American college. But the most interesting, and, to my eye at least, the most dignified of all, is the original Nassau Hall—"old North College"—which stands practically unchanged as it stood in the days of the Revolution. Within its walls in 1776 the Provincial Congress of New Jersey adopted the first State Constitution. Here the British troops, flying before the victorious army of Washington after the battle of Princeton, took refuge. The American artillery, attacking them, sent a cannon-ball crashing through the roof, and tore the picture of George II. from its frame on the wall of the chapel. Six years later the American Congress assembled in the same building, and held their sessions here for more than four months. At the Commencement in 1783 Washington was present, and showed his interest and recognized the debt which the new-born nation owed to Princeton, by a personal gift of fifty guineas to the College. This was expended in the purchase of a portrait of Washington painted by Peale, which still hangs in the same frame from which the picture of George II. was shot away by the American guns. Remembering these things, the sons of Princeton must always look with pride upon the gray walls of Nassau Hall, and feel that there is justice in the assertion of the historian, Professor William M. Sloane, that this building "has no peer as the most historic university pile in the world. This contention rests on the fact that it saw the discomfiture of the British at the ebb-tide of the American Rebellion, harbored the government of the United States in its critical moments, and cradled the constitution-makers of the greatest existing republic. No other university hall has been by turns fortress and barrack, legislative chamber and political nursery in the birth-throes of any land comparable to our land."

CLIO HALL

The undergraduate life of Princeton does not differ essentially from that of any other of the great American colleges. It is thoroughly democratic in its spirit, and heartily athletic in its physical embodiment. Princeton has won many honors upon the field of manly sports, and encourages in every legitimate way the development of physical strength and courage in its students. With the abuses which have crept into college athletics in late years through publicity and professionalism, Princeton has no sympathy. It does not believe that the chief end of a college is to train oarsmen, or baseball-players, or football teams, but it does believe in the cultivation of a rounded manhood on a firm physical basis. It proposes to continue the practice of those games and exercises which tend to promote health and bodily vigor and self-control and bravery, and it takes a fair pride in the prowess with which Princeton students have carried the orange and the black to the front on the athletic field, and proved their fitness to play a good part in the minor, as well as in the greater, contests of life.

MARQUAND CHAPEL MURRAY HALL

There is no more accurate and searching test of the inward life of an institution of learning than the quality of the voluntary societies which are established and controlled by the students. The class-rooms are part of a systematic drill; and even the public exercises of religion may assume the aspect of the inevitable. But the associations which the men form and maintain among themselves are altogether free, and therefore profoundly significant. They express character. They unconsciously utter ambitions and ideals. They confess and they determine the tone of student life.

ALEXANDER HALL

Three voluntary societies have long been flourishing

PRESIDENT PATTON

and potent at Princeton. Clio Hall and Whig Hall, the two literary societies, have had a deep and strong influence upon the history of the institution. Clio Hall was founded in 1765, and Whig Hall in 1769. They are both secret in their organization and internal arrangements. But it is an open secret that their common object is to train their members in the arts of expression and argument, to fit them for debate, and to make them understand the laws and courtesies by which men must be governed when they come together to deliberate and discuss and act. These halls are, in fact, little Houses of Congress in a miniature republic. In them the Princeton students have received, for more than a hundred years, much of their most valuable training and discipline. The rivalry between the two societies lends spirit and verve to the public debates and oratorical contests in which they engage every year. They have retained their vigor and kept alive their traditions more fully than any other college literary societies of equal age. They have done more for the intellectual life of Princeton than they could have done if they had been a part of the curriculum. The visitor who has not been admitted to one or the other of their twin white marble temples can hardly understand to the full the influences which have kept the fire of patriotism and public service burning so brightly on Princeton's altars.

The third of the principal voluntary associations among the students is the Philadelphian Society. It was founded in 1825, and is the oldest college religious society in America. It is entirely in the hands of the undergraduates, and welcomes members of all denominations to an equal brotherhood in Christian worship and work. The beauty and simplicity of the building which was erected for the Society in 1879 by the will of Hamilton Murray, one of its members, who perished in the loss of the ill-fated "Ville du Havre," is a fitting type of its spirit and service.

NASSAU HALL

WITHERSPOON HALL

In a country like ours, which is so fond of change that it does not always stay to ask whether change means progress, and so rich in new opportunities that it is not always patient in carrying forward great enterprises to their legitimate destiny, it is a fine thing to see an institution which has moved steadily forward through a century and a half of work to complete as well as to maintain the ideas of its founders, and which has been true to the past without being blind to the present or deaf to the calls and promises of the future. The true conservative is the man who keeps the tree well pruned of its dead branches. The true progressive is the man who brings the harvest from the seed that has been planted in the past. The glory of Princeton lies in the strength and self-consistence of its intellectual and ethical spirit. It has been for one hundred and fifty years distinctly philosophic, and patriotic, and Christian. Its temper has been well expressed by Professor Andrew F. West, who speaks in the name of that strong company of young professors, most of them sons of Princeton, who are to carry the College forward under its new title of a University, along the old lines, to a wider career of usefulness. He says: "As Princeton faces the problems of metaphysics, her temper is theistic and realistic. Toward the questions of jurisprudence, politics, and economics her attitude is ethical. In the sphere of science this temper appears as the spirit of inductive reasoning, which, though severely laborious in its examination of facts, manages to arrive at something beyond facts. In the spheres of literature and art it appears as the conviction that these studies are worth most as expressions of the ever-struggling human spirit striving to utter itself with nobility and beauty. In the presence of the truths of Christianity it appears as clear faith. Of course we have not begun to realize all these, and are not even realizing them as we might, but the illustrations given above show what is the spirit with which Princeton faces the deep questions which meet every university."

The distinguished audience which assembled last week in Princeton to take part in the Sesquicentennial Celebration heard the voice of this spirit very distinctly. It was a brilliant throng that crowded the fine auditorium of Alexander Hall and filled the marble benches of its stately bema. Representatives of the learned societies and universities of the Old World and the New World were there. Men of mark in science, literature, and philosophy, leaders in all departments of human thought and action, sat together in a great assembly of sympathetic intelligence. The countenance of the audience was instinct with knowledge and power. The brilliant hues of the various academic hoods and gowns spread over the crowd a glow of color like a solar spectrum. The lofty notes of the freedom of scholarship, the brotherhood of letters, the obligations of culture to humanity, and the deep reverence of true philosophy, sounded clearly through all the simplicity and dignity of the ceremonial. And every one who was present felt that the noble past of the College of New Jersey was the fit and harmonious prelude to the large and high future of Princeton University.

TAPESTRY MADE AT THE MERTON ABBEY FACTORY
The Visit of the Magi. Design by Burne-Jones

A Visit to William Morris's Factory

By Rho Fisk Zueblin

NOT many years ago, Joseph and Elizabeth Robins Pennell made a Canterbury Pilgrimage—a modern pilgrimage, since, unlike the Monk and Knight, Nun and Wife of Bath, they rode a tricycle; a very modern pilgrimage, as described in Mrs. Pennell's sprightly and slightly irreverent pages. After exciting mishaps all along the way, the final catastrophe reads thus: "The verger pointed to the pavement, 'which now,' he said solemnly, 'you have come to the shrine of the saintly Thomas.' We had reached our goal. We stood in the holy place. Even the verger seemed to sympathize with our feelings. For a few moments he was silent; presently he continued: ''Enery the Height', when he was in Canterbury, took the bones, which they was laid beneath, out on the green, and had them burned. With them he took the 'oly shrine, which it and the bones is here no longer!' "

Last summer two other travelers made a still more modern pilgrimage, since we not only rode a tandem, in a gala spirit, but we journeyed to a Pagan shrine. Alas! the catastrophe was changed, for, though monks and priests no longer roam the monastery walks at Merton Abbey, and it could doubtless be said of its patron saint, Austin, "the 'oly shrine and his bones are here no longer," yet the spirit of a religion dwells here in such might that the pilgrim learns many lessons in truth and beauty. Of this religion, the present patron saint of the Abbey, Mr. William Morris,[1] gives an idea, by words in a letter to a friend: "I am an artist or workman, with a strong inclination to exercise what capacities I may have, and a determination to do nothing shabby, if I can help it; or, if I do anything shabby, to admit that I have done so, and to be sorry for it. This appears to me to be the socialist religion."

Our missal for this pilgrimage was the writings of Mr. Morris on Art, its glories and duties and sorrows, providing such texts as these to ponder: "It is right and necessary that all men should have work to do, which shall be worth doing, and be of itself pleasant to do; and which should be done under such conditions as would make it neither over-wearisome nor over-anxious." "In a properly ordered state of society every man willing to work should be insured: 1. Honorable and fitting work. 2. A healthy and beautiful house. 3. Full leisure for rest of mind and body."

These are some of the tenets of the high priest of this religion. Will a visit to the shrine show them a mockery, or will there be an ardent living and working toward this ideal?

Mr. Triggs has written: "In 1861 Morris and Burne-Jones and Rossetti formed an art firm—a guild of idealists! The distinguishing mark of these artists was their conviction of the honor of labor and the glory of thoroughness. Each was gifted with a love of order and splendor, and filled with a deep sense of the need of beauty and human life. To join art to labor, to add pleasure to the things of common use, was the purpose of this company." We crossed over a small stream which could easily be thought of as forming an ancient moat, but which now, after curving through the grounds, has the peaceful duty of making the mill-wheel go! We found Mr. Triggs's description true: "Under the trees are gathered the low and unpretentious buildings of the factory. From the garden comes an odor of grass and roses. There is no air of the factory, no clang of machinery, no dust, no haste or distraction." The fact most impressed upon me by these grounds (in which we were lost several times before we could find the factory) and by the insignificance of the factory buildings, was that the just emphasis is put upon the nobility of the work and life within its walls. Mr. Morris has acted consistently with these words of his: "Love of nature in all its forms must be the ruling spirit of works of art, and the brain that guides the hand must be healthy and hopeful, must be keenly alive to the surroundings of our own days."

---

[1] Of course this article was written before the death of Mr. Morris.

At the station we asked to be directed to the Morris factory, and the man, pointing over the way, said: "You see all those trees? well, right straight in through them you'll find it." Not by any gigantic smoke stack was this factory revealed, but—ponder it—by trees! And with a true ring still sound these words of William Morris: "Pray do not forget that any one who cuts down a tree wantonly or carelessly, especially in a great town or its suburbs, need make no pretense of caring about art."

Our guide was delightful, being one of the workmen in the stained-glass rooms. His face shone with good will, and he had such a factory complexion as I had never seen—the most wonderful glow of health. The stained-glass work was first shown to us. Here the genius of Burne-Jones reigns supreme, since all the stained-glass work in the Morris factory is from his designs. We saw many of the cartoons, and the glass in all degrees of disarrangement and arrangement, the cutting with the diamond chisel, and the hand shading of the brush. A genial, gray-headed man had under his brush Stephen dividing his cloak with his sword. While we were admiring the rich coloring, the art workman jocosely said: "'E's not cuttin' 'is cloak in 'alf: the hother won't get 'is good share." In these stained-glass rooms the signs of work were cheery and inspiring. Often there was the buzz of friendly talk, and the whole fellowship appeared to be one of intelligence and mutual interest, and, certainly in that department, these words of Morris have been fulfilled: "This seems to me most important—that our daily and necessary work, which we could not escape if we would, which we would not forego if we could, should be human, serious, and pleasurable, not machine-like, trivial, or grievous. I call this, not the very foundation of architecture in all senses of the word, but of happiness also in all conditions of life." Amid this glass art work we are pleasantly reminded of the story of Morris's and Burne-Jones's college days together, of their query as to calling in life, since they were both supposed to be destined for the service of the Church, and, finally, of their mutual pledge to devote their lives to art. This comradeship of purpose and work has lasted long years, and many English churches have been abundantly served in these glorious windows.

WILLIAM MORRIS

Next we passed into the mazes of weaving—the plainer rug-weaving, the daintier silk-weaving, and the wonderful tapestry-work. In all these rooms there were simply hand-looms, which moved back and forth with a sort of click-clack of sociability, but with no wearying thunder. There were younger people at the heavier looms where the rugs were growing, but the two places of honor were held by the patriarchs of the art: a gray-haired man who was carrying through his loom the daintiest silk brocade in white and green and gold, and who stopped with the pleasure of the artist to turn it over that we might see the beautiful imagery of the light side; over by a quiet window sat an old, old lady gently casting her shuttle threaded with pale blue silk, and who smiled when we wondered what fair maiden should be gowned in it. Of this beautiful work, yet possibly monotonous, William Morris writes quite justly: "I do not call the figure-weaver's craft a dull one, if he be set to do things which are worth doing; to watch the web growing day by day, almost magically, in anticipation of the time when it is to be taken out, and one can see it on the right side in all its well-schemed beauty, to make something beautiful, that will last, out of a few threads of silk and wool, seems to me not an unpleasant way of earning one's livelihood, so long as one lives and works in a pleasant place, with work-day not too long, and a book or two to be got at."

But, oh! the tapestries! Two looms were bearing these lovely burdens. One picture growing in most delicate tints was a copy of Botticelli's "Spring," this the first time it has ever gone into tapestry, it being the special order of a woman who had long fancied it would well lend itself to being thus wrought. The other was "The Visit of the Magi," this being from Burne-Jones's design, and the third time, I think, it has gone on the Merton Abbey loom. The only discouraging feature of the tapestry-weaving was that these sensitive, quick fingers belonged to men from the Far East, and that it is not yet an English art. Our appreciative guide spoke in honest, rapturous terms of tapestries that during their weaving had lent their beauty to the factory and to all the workers. A series representing the King Arthur legends had been with them seven years. Seemingly they had grown to love them as their life, and now in rich memories their thoughts followed them to the courtly home whither they could not go. I know of no home adornment that Morris writes of with more keen feeling and love than of wall-hangings. These are his words in an essay where he is mourning the decadence of the art: "What a noble art it once was! To turn our chamber walls into the green woods of 'the leafy month of June,' populous of bird and beast, or a summer garden with man and maid playing round the fountains, or a solemn procession of the mythical warriors and heroes of old: that surely was worth the trouble of doing, and the money that had to be paid for it; that was no languid acquiescence in an upholsterer's fashion." In "Jason" he verses an ideal:

> With richest webs the marble walls were hung,
> Picturing sweet stories by the poets sung
> From ancient days, so that no wall seemed there,
> But rather forests black and meadows fair.
> And streets of well-built towns, with tumbling seas
> About their marble wharves and palaces;
> And fearful crags and mountains; and all trod
> By changing feet of giant, nymph, and god,
> Spear-shaking warrior, and slim-ankled maid.

The pattern-stamping room seemed quite natural, for there we saw the glorious designs and rich coloring in the cretonnes and velvets and fabrics which American importers have graciously made more familiar to us. An old design was slowly growing under the strong and skillful hands of one of these art workers—a design that could easily suggest Mr. Morris's dictum, "The absolute necessities of this art are beauty of color and restfulness of form." It required muscle to carry the copper plate steadily, and perfection of touch to plant it firmly in its proper place. The coloring was in rich golden brown, which the interested stamper told us was the most durable color, it being practically rust! We all know Mr. Morris's love of the Persian designs which reappear with new life under his pencil, in stamped fabrics and in woven stuffs. If we heartily enjoy these gorgeous things, we may partially sympathize with Mr. Morris's feeling about the old Persian workers and designers when he writes: "I believe I am not thinking only of my own pleasure, but of the pleasure of many people, when I praise the usefulness of the lives of these men, whose names are long forgotten, but whose works we still wonder at. In their own way they meant to tell us how the flowers grew in the gardens of Damascus, or how the hunt was up on the plains of Kirman, or how the tulips shone among the grass in the Mid-Persian valley, and how their souls delighted in it all, and what joy they had in life; nor did they fail to make their meaning clear to some of us."

The allied craft of nearly all these arts is that of the dyer, and these pure, ravishing colors we next traced to their abiding-place in the Merton Abbey vats. Certainly these seemed like magic caldrons! We hear much of the poet's love of color, and this poet's fondness is also ascribed to Morris. Mr. Triggs speaks of his "Summer Dawn" as "touched with grayness."

The summer night waneth, the morning light slips,
Faint and gray, 'twixt the leaves of the aspen,
    betwixt the closed bars
That are patiently waiting there, for the morn
Patient and colorless, though Heaven's gold
Waits to float through them along with the sun.
Far out in the meadows, above the young
    corn,
The heavy elms wait, and, restless and cold,
The uneasy wind rises; the roses are dun;
Through the long twilight they pray for the
    morn,
Round the lone house, in the midst of the corn.

ENTRANCE TO FACTORY

But what other poet, besides feeling color and writing of color, could say, in discussing the niceties of the color craft, as Morris does in such plain workman's prose—"I myself have dyed wool by the self-same process that the Mosaical dyers used"! Mr. Morris rather enjoys color tirades, and, after having delighted in the perfect glasses or wools or fabrics from the factory, or having felt his painstaking care when looking in a vat where the dye had stood for seven years, we can quite easily sympathize with an attack upon the new dyes like this: "The fact is that every one of these colors is hideous in itself, whereas all the old dyes are in themselves beautiful colors—only extreme perversity could make an ugly color out of them. Under these circumstances it must, I suppose, be considered a negative virtue in the new dyes that they are as fugitive as the old ones are stable; but even on that head I will ask you to note one thing that condemns them finally—that whereas the old dyes, when fading, as all colors will do more or less, simply gradually change into paler tints of the same color, and are not unpleasant to look upon, the fading of the new dyes is a change into all kinds of abominable and livid hues. I mention this because otherwise it might be thought that a man with an artistic eye for color might so blend the hideous but bright aniline colors as to produce something at least tolerable; indeed, this is not unfrequently attempted to-day, but with small success, partly from the reason above mentioned, partly because the hues so produced by 'messing about,' as I should call it, have none of the quality or character which the simpler drug gives naturally. In short, this is what it comes to, that it would be better for us, if we cannot revive the now almost lost art of dyeing, to content ourselves with weaving our cloths of the natural color of the fiber, or to buy them colored by less civilized people than ourselves."

The workers in all these crafts, by their goodly occupation, eight-hour working day, and highest wages known in the trade, seem to be realizing, as far as is possible at present, the claims of a decent life as Mr. Morris has himself stated them: "First, a healthy body; second, an active mind in sympathy with the past, the present, and the future; thirdly, occupation fit for a healthy body and an active mind; and, fourthly, a beautiful world to live in."

Our visit to Merton Abbey Factory was over, and with reluctance, yet with satisfying thoughts, we left the interesting group of people behind, and passed again through the trees into the dingy world. The charm of William Morris's idealism was not broken by having visited the spot where of all others this ideal must be tested. We felt, indeed, that this visit had marked our most hopeful and instructive and inspiring day in England. Juliana Horatia Ewing says of one of her heroines what very well belongs to a character-sketch of William Morris: "It is so easy to become more thick-skinned in conscience, more tolerant of evil, more hopeless of good, more careful of one's own comfort and one's own property, more self-satisfied in leaving high aims and great deeds to enthusiasts, and then to believe that one is growing older and wiser! And yet those high examples, those good works, those great triumphs over evil which single hands sometimes effect, we are all grateful for, when they are done, whatever we may have said of the doing. But we speak of saints, and enthusiasts for good, as if some special gifts were made to them in middle age which are withheld from other men. Is it not rather that some few souls keep alive the lamp of zeal and high desire which God lights for most of us while life is young?" William Morris and Burne-Jones have valiantly and radiantly kept their college-day pledge to Art.

Among modern prophets, Ashbee[1] has written: "It is only in the reconstructed workshop that we may hope to find our citizen perfected in heart and hand and head." The artist, Mr. G. F. Watts, in his preface to "Plain Handicrafts," writes: "To lead the weary toiler along the dreary road of every-day mechanical work into its wayside gardens, to open closed eyes to a world of loveliness and grace, where every flower that blows and every tendril that twines enlist themselves in his service and become his friends, is the function of the Plain Handicrafts." Ruskin has said, "Life without industry is guilt, and industry without art is brutality." We might easily have said, "These are hard sayings; who can hear them?" But with the grand reality and accomplishment at Merton, such words no longer fall upon our ears with a hollow tone of hopelessness and impossibility, but with the stirring ring of alarum and incentive.

With good faith in William Morris's hand and heart, in his sense and vision, we can read such words of his own as the following. In "A Dream of John Ball" he says: "Forsooth, brothers, fellowship is heaven, and lack of fellowship is hell; fellowship is life, and lack of fellowship is death; and the deeds that ye do upon the earth, it is for fellowship's sake that ye do them." He makes Sigurd say to the King of the Niblungs:

And I would that the loving were loved, and I would that the weary should sleep,
And that man should hearken to man, and he that soweth should reap.

---

[1] Ashbee, "Workshop Reconstruction and Citizenship" (D. C. Heath & Co.).

In one of his essays he writes: "What other blessings are there in life save these two, fearless rest and hopeful work? Troublesome as life is, it has surely given to each one of us some times and seasons when, surrounded by simple and beautiful things, we have really felt at rest; when the earth and all its plenteous growth, and the tokens of the varied life of men, and the very sky and waste of air above us, have seemed all to conspire together to make us calm and happy, not slothful, but restful. Still oftener, belike it has given us those other times, when at last, after many a struggle with incongruous hindrances, our own chosen work has lain before us, disentangled from all encumbrances and unrealities, and we have felt that nothing, not even ourselves, could withhold us from doing the work we were born to do, that we were men and worthy of life. Such rest and such work I earnestly wish for myself, and for you, and for all men: to have space and freedom to gain such rest and such work is the end of politics; to learn how best to employ it is the end of education; to learn its inmost meaning is the end of religion."

THE MERTON ABBEY FACTORY

With paramount force and insistency we have been taught the fleetness of life, resulting in great stress upon immortality. In hard, narrow fashion has this truth been carried into our lives. The Bible words, noble and beautiful, are often too much with us: "My days are consumed like smoke;" "My days are like a shadow that declineth;" "He knoweth our frame, he remembereth that we are dust;" "As for man, his days are as grass, as a flower of the field so he flourisheth; for the wind passeth over it and it is gone, and the place thereof shall know it no more."

FROM THE RIVER

But this is only a half-truth; the place thereof shall know it more; the quasi-immortality of material things is also true, magnificently and gloomily true. Our deeds live after us, and how stubbornly and sturdily, in the things we build! The tree we hew down for our street railway, for our factory, can never bloom a leaf for our grandchild. The ugly mansion we build so solidly may be the life-torment of our son or somebody else's son. Some gracious bit of beauty your hand leaves behind may be the treasure of some ardent heart for many a year! The Bible tells us this, too: "Of old hast Thou laid the foundation of the earth, and the heavens are the work of Thy hands. Thy years shall know no end. The children of Thy servant shall endure, and their seed shall be established." "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." This thought, this belief, makes for us two duties: to make our works beautiful and true, that their everlasting life may be wealth and benediction for those who come after, and also to demand like things from others, that beautiful things, noble things, may represent the activities of all men and women. With this view we can understand Ruskin's extreme statement, "Taste is the only morality," since it simply means the constant duty of appreciating all material values in terms of life.

October

By William Morris

O love, turn from the unchanging sea and gaze
Down these gray slopes upon the year grown old,
A-dying 'mid the autumn-scented haze
That hangeth o'er the hollow in the wold,
Where the wind-bitten ancient elms enfold
Gray church, long barn, orchard and red-roofed stead,
Wrought in dead days for men a long while dead.

Come down, O love; may not our hands still meet,
Since still we live to-day, forgetting June,
Forgetting May, deeming October sweet—
Oh hearken, hearken! through the afternoon
The gay tower sings a strange old tinkling tune!
Sweet, sweet and sad the toiling year's last breath,
Too satiate of life to strive with death.

And we, too—will it not be soft and kind,
That rest from life, from patience, and from pain,
That rest from bliss we know not when we find,
That rest from love which ne'er the end can gain?—
Hark, how the tune swells that erewhile did wane!
Look up, love!—ah, cling close and never move!
How can I have enough of life and love?

—From "The Earthly Paradise."

ROOM IN SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS'S BUSINESS PREMISES, ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYARD, IN WHICH THE FIRST YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION COMMITTEE ASSEMBLED

Sir George Williams

Founder of Young Men's Christian Associations

By Lord Kinnaird

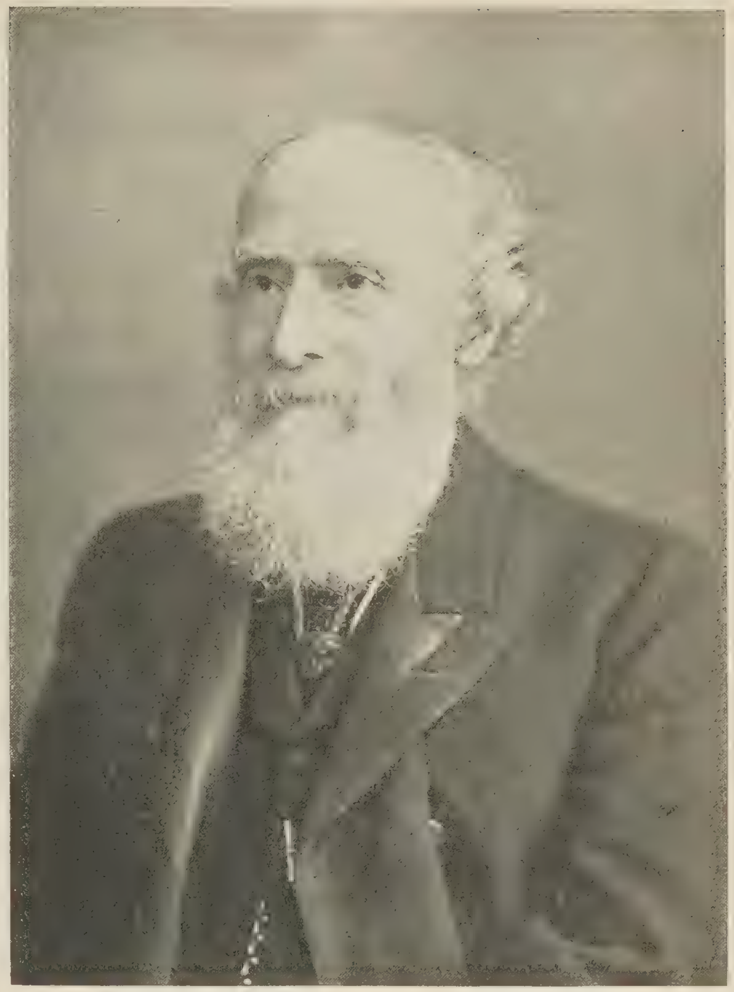
Sir George Williams
(About 1860)

"There is not any other one man in the world to-day who has touched so many men for good." Such is the pronouncement of the Hon. John Wanamaker, ex-Postmaster-General of the United States, in regard to the subject of this brief sketch. It refers to Sir George Williams, of course, in the light of his life's work—the Young Men's Christian Association. To trace his career is of necessity to recite the leading facts in the history of that great and beneficent movement, so completely has he absorbed himself in it. While all forms of religious and philanthropic effort have for many years received his munificent support—at the present time he is President of not a few societies—he has been pre-eminently the Friend of Young Men, and, to an extent altogether unique, has devoted himself and his substance to the promotion of their highest and best interests, not alone in this country, but in all the principal countries of the world.

The remarkable series of gatherings in London in June, 1894, which celebrated the Jubilee of the Y. M. C. A., and of which he was the central figure, gave unmistakable evidence of the vitality and universality of the work; showing, as Canon Fleming aptly put it, that it had "made a deep mark upon the young men of this age, upon the Church of God, and, indeed, upon the world at large." The Convention, it was estimated, was the largest delegated Evangelical assembly that had ever met. Two thousand men, speaking seventeen languages, represented the work as it is carried on in twenty-six nationalities; and all delighted to honor the man whom God had thus honored in originating and developing their beloved enterprise. Huge meetings, in almost bewildering succession—in Exeter Hall, Westminster Abbey, St. Paul's Cathedral, the Guildhall, the Royal Albert Hall, the Metropolitan Tabernacle, the City Temple, and the Great Park at Windsor—gathered around the founder in demonstrative acknowledgment of what, by the blessing of God, he had been enabled to accomplish; the press of the whole country, as well as of America and the Colonies, cordially indorsed the tribute; and, to the utmost gratification of members of the Association in all lands, her Majesty the Queen signified her approval of the lifelong effort of "a peaceful hero" by conferring upon him the dignity of knighthood, while the Corporation of London marked their appreciation of his services to young men in the metropolis by bestowing upon him the honorary freedom of the city. Probably no such distinguished public recognition had been given to any work of the kind that had been in existence fifty years only.

Sir George treated the matter with characteristic modesty. "It has been to me a glorious service," said he. "In it

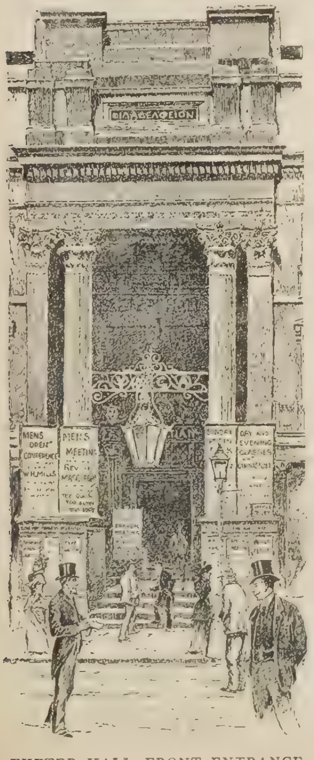
I have experienced the happiest moments of my life. . . . To Almighty God be all the praise. He it was who inspired the thought."



SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS
From a recent Photograph

This confession is noteworthy, from the circumstance that it illustrates what has ever been with Sir George Williams a first principle of his faith—that he has been in everything the steward and instrument of God. It was this dominating conviction within him that inspired the few young fellows who joined him in forming the Association in 1844, in the business house of Mr. George Hitchcock, in St. Paul's Churchyard, London, to which he had come as a junior assistant from Bridgewater three years previously. It was this that made a profound impression upon his employer, who at a subsequent period had the joy of testifying that the Association started under his roof had been the means of bringing him to a knowledge of himself and of Christ. It was this that gave life and impetus to the movement in all its early years; for the youthful promoter marked his overwhelming sense that "the thing was of God" by contributing to it at the rate of more than a third of his entire income. And while the conviction, conscientiously acted upon, has—because God will be no man's debtor—enriched his experience, his experience all through life has been such as to deepen the conviction. An abundant return has been made to him for his faithfulness; a return which has been maturing for half a century, but which will reach its climax only when he hears the "Well done" that is to be the final reward of all those who are good and faithful servants of the Lord Jesus Christ.

"Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." It was by keeping steadily before him this grand triple rule of life that Sir George reached the position which he has now so long and honorably filled, as head of one of the largest and best-reputed business establishments in the greatest city of the world. In the exalted position, as well as in the humbler, he has been faithful to the great trust divinely reposed in him, and has dispensed with generous hand the good gifts of God placed in his keeping. His large-heartedness is manifested in this; but it is evinced in no less a degree, also, in the breadth of his sympathies with all forms of real and practical Christian work. Here, as well as in other respects, he bears strong resemblance to his predecessor in the presidency of the English work—the late noble Earl of Shaftesbury. His views are pronouncedly evangelical, but he combines with definiteness of creed a spirit of generous toleration and charitableness, and the outflow of his affection to all who bear the name of Christ and are seeking to extend his kingdom has none of the limitations which sectarian differences are apt to engender. Further than this, his heart has always been large enough to enable him sympathetically to share and relieve the burdens of difficulty brought under his notice by individual young men. Not only since his sons have been able to divide with him the responsibilities of his great business, but all through his life, he has ever been ready to set aside his own concerns for a period of each day, important as they have been, in order to help in the affairs of others; and the number of callers he has been in the habit of receiving day by day, upon all conceivable errands of necessity, has for many years been very large.



EXETER HALL, FRONT ENTRANCE

Sir George has always observed the utmost simplicity and plainness in his style of life. His seventy-fifth year finds him still quick of perception and strong of purpose, buoyant in spirit, genial, gentle, lovable; while both Lady Williams and himself maintain and exhibit an unflagging and inexhaustible interest in all the concerns of young manhood.

The history of the Young Men's Christian Association is as full of interest as the life of the founder. The work was commenced in the realization of a pressing need, and was shaped with a very definite purpose in view—the salvation of young men. The aim was to unite Christian young men, first, for development and upbuilding in their most holy faith; and, next, in order that they might make concerted effort in behalf of their companions. They were to do this in the sphere of their daily calling—that is to say, they were to bear their testimony in their life. With the passing of years, diversification and variety of method have come: but first principles are still adhered to. They are not generally popular—no Christian expects that vital religion ever will be; but the healthy and useful environment in which, within the Associations, they have been maintained, has not failed to convince right-thinking people everywhere of the wisdom of giving to an institution for the benefit and improvement of young men a distinctly spiritual basis. This is the only leaven that will effectually prevent deterioration.

Whether consisting of six or six hundred young men, the management of each Association is vested alone in the membership, which is essentially Christian and missionary.

There is associateship for young men of good moral character, carrying with it participation in all privileges except control. Each Association is absolutely autonomous. Organization is not wanting, either so far as district, State, national, or international matters are concerned. Indeed, it is wonderfully complete; but, after all, the cement that binds the Associations together is not of men's manufacture—it is to be found in the pursuit of a common and exalted purpose, in the carrying on of an active propaganda in behalf of young men on a spiritual and evangelical foundation.

Throughout the world the Young Men's Christian Association is now represented at over 5,500 centers, and has a membership of over half a million. But these figures are no gauge of the extent of its influence. It probably gets into close touch each year with five times as many men as those whose names appear upon its books. The Archdeacon of London attributes its success to the fact that it represents and maintains: (1) the grand principles of unity and co-operation (its plan and platform are interdenominational); (2) the spiritual priesthood of the laity (it puts the obligation upon each member of doing all that in him is to extend the kingdom of Christ by becoming an evangelist to his fellow young men); and (3) the divine doctrine proclaimed by our Lord of the brotherhood of men in himself. Hundreds of ministers of the Gospel at home and abroad received their early stimulus or training at the hands of the Association. D. L. Moody and John McNeill are among the many who acknowledge its invaluable aid; and quite recently the general service rendered by the institution to the churches has received the emphatic witness of the Rev. H. E. Fox, M.A., Hon. Secretary of the Church Missionary Society, who mentions a remarkable fact: that almost every male candidate offering himself to that great Society confesses to having been influenced by the Young Men's Christian Association at some point of his life—either owing to its instrumentality his conversion, or his incentive to and training for missionary work. And what is true of the Association in regard to missionary enterprise abroad applies with equal force to its relation to the ministry at home; while strong indorsements come also from business men on every hand, who, so far from finding the Association an agency for the development of namby-pamby men—as is often laid to its charge—testify that they have secured from the ranks of the membership many of their smartest and most trustworthy employees.

W. H. Mills

Secretary International Committee Young Men's Christian Association

The Association seeks by all means to win the souls of men; but much of its usefulness has arisen from the fact that it has not been slow to recognize that they have also minds and bodies which require looking after. It is one of the largest physical agencies in the world: it has also done most valuable educational work, and is likely, in countries where such work is not already provided for by secular institutions, to make great developments in this direction. But all the departments, whether of club or home or school or playground character, subserve the one supreme end—that of bringing men to the Saviour.

There is not space in this article to give any adequate idea of the extent to which the Associations have by this time encompassed the world. America, to which country the work was directly transmitted from England, affords perhaps the most striking example of development—possessing over fourteen hundred Associations, many of them with fine and substantially endowed buildings, and carrying on a far-reaching departmental work among students and railway employees, as well as among young men generally. A large number of the Associations on the Continent were brought into the general organization at the Paris Conference, and are year by year developing their work along the lines pursued so successfully in Great Britain and the United States. In Japan there has been a remarkable growth of the work; and in India also, where great scope and opportunity are presented for Association enterprise in behalf of the many thousands of educated English-speaking young men. In Australia the Associations are not numerous, and have suffered as a consequence of commercial depression; but they have nevertheless done and are doing excellent work, particularly among young emigrants, who reach the largest towns in great numbers. The first United Conference has just been held in South Africa, where the movement has obtained good hold and is creditably represented. Scattered Associations are achieving good results in almost every other country of the world; and the general experience is that—despite all the activities for the benefit of young men which the Associations have prompted and quickened—the need for their specific work, as it was borne in upon the mind and heart of Sir George Williams half a century ago, so far from declining, is continually on the increase.

When the Report of Our Meeting here on Wednesday is Out I will
D.V. send you a
Copy
"all well
Yours very truly
George Williams

FACSIMILE OF SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS'S WRITING

❧

The Rt. Hon. the Lord Kinnaird

The Right Hon. Lord Kinnaird

With the single exception of Sir George Williams himself, as President and Founder, Lord Kinnaird is probably the best-known friend of the Young Men's Christian Associations of Great Britain and Ireland. And in several other important religious and philanthropic movements, centrally represented in London, Lord Kinnaird, because his sympathies are similar, is brought into close and intimate touch with Sir George. Hence the peculiar appropriateness and value of his article upon Sir George's life and work.

SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS'S LIBRARY

Arthur Fitzgerald Kinnaird was born in 1847, and succeeded in 1887 to his present title, which carries with it the dignity of English as well as Scottish peerage. In Scotland his seat is Rossie Priory, Inchture, Perthshire; he has town and suburban residences also in the metropolis, where his busy working days are spent.

For Lord Kinnaird is brimful of activity. As partner in one of the principal banking houses in London, he undertakes constant and responsible work; and his readiness to assist good enterprises of any and every kind further entails upon him much exacting labor—often to the extent of spending the greater part of the night in a train, if by this deprivation a worthy cause may be advanced and workers in it helped or encouraged. His Parliamentary duties, moreover, as a peer of the realm, are not infrequently very heavy. Only recently he has given much attention, as a member of her Majesty's Royal Commission on Sunday observance, to the law in relation to this important question.

In earlier years Lord Kinnaird was largely identified with Mr. Quintin Hogg in an endeavor to ameliorate the condition of the poorer classes of boys in London. But while the flux of time has tended to focus Mr. Hogg's efforts upon the oversight and development of his splendid Polytechnic Institution in Regent Street, it has widened the sympathies of Lord Kinnaird, and greatly enlarged the sphere of his generous help. He is still one of the warmest supporters of the Homes for Working Boys; but he displays also very cordial and practical interest in the work of numerous other prominent Christian enterprises, such as the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Religious Tract Society, the London City Mission, etc.

SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS'S HOUSE
13 Russell Square, Bloomsbury, W. C.

Most of all, perhaps, his time and resources are freely devoted to furthering the work of the Young Women's and the Young Men's Christian Associations. Of the former—in behalf of which his sisters, the Hon. Misses Kinnaird, are zealous workers—he is President; he is President also of the Scottish Union of Young Men's Christian Associations; and is a leading Vice-President of the English Union of the same organization.

It is significant in regard to his connection with the Young Men's Christian Association, for the spiritual side of whose work he is an earnest champion, that Lord Kinnaird is keenly interested in all branches of athletics, particularly in football, and that he holds office as President of the National Football Association. Nothing will more surely serve the best interests of an institution like the Young Men's Christian Association than to have prominent on its governing body men of Lord Kinnaird's energeti robust, and practical influence.

The Junior Republic at Freeville

By Washington Gladden

A DELIGHTFUL ride of thirty-eight miles on the first day of September, through the ripening corn-fields and the heavily laden apple orchards of Tioga and Tompkins Counties in New York, brought a carriage-load of us to the gates of the Junior Republic at Freeville. Gates must be taken metaphorically; for road-fences are not in vogue in these parts, and the domain of the Republic is open on one side to the highway. Our chariot stopped in front of a small frame cottage, designated as the "Capitol" by a pasteboard label on the door. A young man of thirty, coarsely clad, was talking with some animation to a group of visitors; a few boys and girls, more or less clothed, were standing near him apparently waiting for an interview; to him one of our party presented himself, and found, as he had supposed, that he was speaking to the founder and President of the Junior Republic, Mr. W. R. George. For the rest of the afternoon, and for two or three hours the next day, Mr. George was kind enough to devote himself largely to our instruction, and we were able to gain considerable insight into the administration of this notable commonwealth.

At the time of our visit the census of the Republic showed a population of 173 boys and girls, from the age of eight or nine to seventeen or eighteen—all gathered from the slums of the great cities, most of them from New York. A few remain through the year, but the great majority are residents for only two months in the summer; two days after our visit camp was broken, and the body of the citizens returned to their homes and were reabsorbed by that larger and worse-governed community which generally takes its orders from Tammany Hall. But for two months they have been a free and self-governing society, working out an experiment of great interest to philanthropists and statesmen.

IN THE BANK

The cashier of the bank shown in the above picture was the capitalist of the Junior Republic last summer. He was also Senator the greater part of the season. He immortalized himself while in Congress in the season of 1895 by framing and introducing the bill that effectually abolished the public support of paupers, the terms of the bill declaring that "A feller what don't work sha'n't eat."

WILLIAM R. GEORGE

Mr. George, whose home is now in New York, is a native of Freeville, a country hamlet nine miles from Ithaca; and the impulse in which this movement originated was a desire to give some of the children of the slums a taste of country life, as he remembered it, among these hills. With the aid of his mother he brought, five or six years ago, twenty-two children into the country for a two weeks' outing; the next year his caravan numbered two hundred and ten, and he kept them in camp the same length of time; for the next three years the number averaged about two hundred and fifty. These brief summer camps were under his own and his mother's care; they tried to give some instruction in religion, patriotism, and various simple industries. In the summer of 1895 the Junior Republic was fully organized, and the term of residence was two months. Early this summer the farm of forty-eight acres was purchased by the trustees of the corporation which has now been formed to support this project; the barns and sheds have been rudely remodeled to serve as barracks, in some of which are located the offices and assembly-rooms; some of the sleeping-rooms and restaurants are in extemporized shelters with canvas walls. In these unpretending quarters, and on the broad expanse of this sightly hill, are gathered eight or ten score boys and girls, drawn from the least promising homes of New York; and here they constitute a civil and industrial society, with a Congress, with civil and criminal courts, with police and executive officers, with a military organization and a prison, with a bank, also, and a currency of their own, and with industry and commerce in full blast. Mr. George is President of this Republic, by divine right, I suppose; he reserves the veto power and uses it sparingly; but he assumes no dictatorship; the responsibility for the government rests upon the citizens. The Constitution of the United States and the laws of the State of New York are accepted as fundamental in this Republic, but the legislative body enacts such laws as may be needed by this community, and enforces them by its own executive and judicial officers. Last year the Cabinet officers were adults, chosen from among the helpers of Mr. George; this year he has selected his advisers from among the citizens of the Republic. The Judge of the Civil Court is a boy of sixteen or seventeen; he is also commander of the battalion. The Judge of the Criminal Court is a boy of perhaps fourteen; he is adjutant of the militia.

The Congressional term lasts only one week, and its representation, like that of the mediæval cities, is by guilds. There are six industrial classes—in farming, landscape-gardening, carpentry, cooking, millinery, and sewing; each of these was originally represented in the lower house, there being one representative for every twelve members. This made a body too large and too expensive, for officials are paid a moderate stipend in the coin of the Republic; the number of representatives in the lower house has been reduced to seven. The Senate consisted of one representative from each of the six classes, and Senators held office two weeks. All laws must pass both houses and be signed by the President. The statute-book, which lay open upon a table in one of the offices, contained such enactments as these:

"The right of suffrage is hereby extended to all citizens over twelve years of age, without distinction of sex."

"Candidates desiring to practice law in the Republic shall pass the civil service examination, and also a special examination before the judges."

"Gross impoliteness at table or in other places shall be regarded as a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment."

"A poll-tax of thirty cents shall be levied on every citizen for the week ending July 20. Those who are unable to pay shall work out the amount in government employment."

A GUARDIAN AND HIS WARD

Boys and girls under twelve years of age are not admitted to the Junior Republic unless some junior citizen above that age adopts the young person and assumes all the responsibility of a regular parent or guardian. This little boy, nine years of age, created quite a sensation a short time ago in the city of Syracuse. He committed arson on three occasions and burglary twice. He is now in the custody of the Junior Republic, and is consummately happy in the midst of his new surroundings.

That the laws of this Republic would be sometimes violated in a society composed of such elements might be safely predicted, but the provision for the detection and punishment of misdemeanors seems to be adequate. The policeman is, indeed, much in evidence. This is the department of government which possesses a special attraction for the average New York boy. His estimate of the blessedness of a policeman's life is not that of the familiar lyric; and the list of applicants for appointment on the police force is always formidable at the opening of the season. But the civil service examination proves an insuperable barrier to the ambition of many of them, and gives them a new and vivid sense of the value of an English education. One youngster, who had risen, hopelessly plucked, from this examination, exclaimed: "I don't play hooky this winter, you bet! I'll come back here next year and git to be a cop." The boys thus selected are distinguished by a simple uniform and equipped with a club, and the peace of the Republic is committed to their keeping. Most of them act very promptly and courageously in any case of disorder, and the sense of the sacredness of law enables the small boy with the policeman's badge to lead to the lockup a lawbreaker much bigger than himself.

A LAWYER AND HIS CLIENT

The prisoner when arrested is taken before the magistrate; if the offense is not bailable, he is committed for trial. These trials are conducted in regular form—the prosecuting attorney conducts the case for the people, the prisoner has his counsel, and a jury of boys is empaneled. Mr. George says that, as a rule, these verdicts are remarkably just; that they nearly always command the popular approval. Offenders are sentenced by the court to labor "on the gang," as the boys call it; they are reduced to the grade of convicts and taken in charge by a keeper, and dressed in stripes; they exchange their name for a number, and work all day instead of half a day, receiving no wages, and only the plainest fare. The severity of this treatment makes an impression even on the toughest boys of the East Side gangs. Mr. George told us of one boy who had been sent to jail in the afternoon before our arrival. "I saw that boy," he said, "sentenced once by a Police Judge in New York, and he laughed in the Judge's face; the spirit of the outcast was so strong in him that he deemed himself a hero because he had fallen under the ban of the civil law, and he knew that he would be so regarded by all his associates. But this afternoon, when a boy no older than himself pronounced upon him the sentence of our court, he broke down and cried. I have seen this very thing four times in this place."

To the query whether this regimen of actual prison bars and stripes is not pretty severe, Mr. George replies that it undoubtedly is, but that he does not wish the boys to get the impression that a prison is a picnic ground, or that the way of the transgressor is easy. And his testimony is that the discipline is effectual: that offenses rapidly lessen as the weeks pass.

The economic features of this commonwealth are not less interesting. Self-support as well as self-government is required of these citizens. The moment a boy arrives on the scene he is made aware of the fact that he must live by his industry. Work is ready for him in the industrial classes named; for this work he will be paid in the coin of the realm—his wages varying with his fidelity and efficiency, and out of these wages he must pay for his own food and lodging. A little more than half of the day is devoted to work, the remainder to recreation. No one is compelled to work except by the compulsion of his own necessities. If he choose to play ball or to lie upon the grass, that is his privilege; but when dinner-time comes he must have in his hand the price of his dinner or he will not be admitted to the restaurant. Possibly he may borrow of his industrious and thrifty neighbor, but this soon becomes difficult. The government does not support a pauper class in idleness. One of the earlier statutes declares that "No tax shall be levied for the support of the boy or girl who can work and won't." The afternoon of our arrival a gang of boys were at work with pickaxes, shovels, and a wheelbarrow, grading a portion of the grounds under the supervision of an overseer. It was after working hours, and I inquired of the overseer, in short trousers, what they were doing. "Oh," said he, "these fellows are out of money, and they have been set at work, under government employ, to earn enough to pay for their supper and their breakfast. We make them work about three hours, at ten cents an hour; to-morrow, if they don't like this, they can go to work and earn their living in the regular way." "But how do they happen to be out of money?" I asked. "They have been lazy, or else they have squandered their money." "How do boys squander their money here?" "On candy, or apples, or whatever they see that they want to buy."

IN THE LAUNDRY

IN THE ARMORY

The coin of the realm consists of tin discs, of diameters similar to those of our silver and nickel coins, and bearing the same denominations; in this money laborers and officials are paid, once a week, for their services; with this money they must pay for meals and lodgings, and there is a store filled with contributed second-hand clothing and other useful goods in which purchases can be made for their money. There is also a commercial class which manages to procure and bring into the camp fruit, candies, and various knickknacks, which are sold to the laboring and professional classes for their currency, and some of these thrifty traders contrive to amass wealth; social distinctions quickly appear in this rudimentary society, and you hear the boys talking about the "rich fellers" and the "plutocrats."

The life of the camp is, of course, of the plainest; the beds are wooden cots, and the bill of fare, at the best, offers none but the commonest viands. But even here there are degrees, and the boys have dubbed their best lodging-house the "Waldorf," while the high-grade restaurant where the "plutocrats" take their meals is known as "Delmonico's," and a less expensive one as "Sherry's."

One does not wisely pronounce upon the probable outcome of a social experiment as new and as bold as this; but it is safe to say that Mr. George has seized upon a great idea, and that his attempt to realize it appears, thus far, to be meeting with a fair measure of success. To bring two or three hundred boys and girls of this class into the country and put them under conditions where self-support and self-government are required of them is a daring undertaking; if even partial success can be reported it is a notable fact. And I cannot doubt that strong and salutary impressions are made upon most of these boys and girls. The great majority of them come from homes in which the habit of dependence is forming, and the sentiment of the submerged tenth, that the world owes them a living, is apt to prevail. Here they find themselves in a society which stoutly repudiates that sentiment, maintaining that it owes to no citizen anything more than a fair chance to earn an honest living, and which proposes to deal summarily with him if he refuses to accept that chance. And the order of things is such that the lazy and extravagant must eat the fruit of their own doings; there is nobody to step in here, as our public and private charities are constantly doing, to protect them from the consequences of their own folly. What they sow they must reap. Those who are diligent and frugal live well, enjoy the respect of their fellow-citizens, accumulate the money of the realm, exchange it for real values, and go home with decent clothes and with food and raiment purchased with their savings for their friends. Those who will not work, or who waste their earnings, sleep much of their time in paupers' beds, are forced to work for their keeping while the rest are at play, and go home at last as ragged as they came, with no recompense in their hands.

THE POLICE COURT

It is needless to say that those who return in that plight do not think well of the Junior Republic, and that their parents, who have trained them to be idlers and sponges, are often highly indignant when their children come home to them in this condition. To such the Republic would have seemed a far better thing if it had taken them into the country, fed them in idleness for a few weeks on milk and honey, and sent them home laden with the spoils of the charitable.

Mr. George asks all the boys and girls of the Republic, on one of the last days in camp, to put down, with entire frankness, in writing, their impressions of the commonwealth. A large number of these are printed in the last report, and some of them are explicit in their dislike of the whole business. One says: "I don't like sinc im here for we starf an i wish i wars home caus i dont haf to work." Another testifies that he doesn't like the boys—"they tease me so much cause ime poor. I would like it better if it was near a candy store."

Others, however, put a different estimate on their experience. One boy writes: "I have learned a great deal. I didn't know what the Legislature was when I came here, but I know what it is good for now. I have saved $45 since I am here. I have worked for every cent I got. I think I am a good citizen now. I know how to vote and I am proud of it." And another testifies: "The prison taught me a good lesson. You bet I won't get in there any more." And another: "The bank has helped me very much in saving my money." And still another, who is clearly one of the most thoughtful of all:

"What is charity? It is to me, to tell the honest truth, but the ruining of the majority of the people who receive it. In time they rely on charity, expect things, and think it is all right if they do not work for their living. It breeds them into pauperism to such an extent that they begin to be a heavy weight on the commonwealth. How is it that we have tramps? What are they in other sense of the word but paupers? Are you helping them? No, you are ruining them. Do not give things unless they work for them, and then tramps shall diminish and our country far more prosperous. We are taught here to rely on ourselves. Without working we cannot get food and clothing. What are we to do? We must work. It places all responsibility on ourselves. We are taught what citizenship means. We make the laws a training which shall last us through life. Our money is the machine in city politics but not out here. We are put on our own resources. We have to pay for our meals. How proud I felt the first week when I saw the money I earned! How I prized it! It was almost sacred. Why was it that I prized it? Because I earned it. Why was it my meals tasted so good? Because I paid for them."

IN THE POTATO-FIELD

It is clear that this Junior Republican has caught the idea—quite a number of ideas—that a large share of our senior republicans—makers of laws, platform orators, administrators of charity—have failed to catch. If even a few hundred boys can be thoroughly furnished with such ideas and distributed through the city populations, they may prove to be the little leaven which shall leaven the whole lump.

PRISON CORRIDOR

There is a pathetic little sketch in the last report of a boy who through idleness and extravagance had been for several weeks on the pauper list, and who finally turned right about and made a stand for independence. Mr. George found him looking over his weekly earnings, which he had tied up in seven parcels—money enough for each day's expenses—"dis pile for Monday, dis for Tuesday, and so on. You see, don't youse," he explained, "dat I've got 'em tied up so dey can't get away!" And then, with a more serious air, he told Mr. George that his father's weekly wage was wont to disappear during the first two or three days of every week, and that the children were apt to go hungry for the rest of the week unless the "mission folks" helped them. "An' I was t'inkin' just now, when you come up, dat if dis fixin' up camp money worked for me all right, I could tell me parents, an' mebby we could make it work wid pop's money." His letter at the end of the summer shows that he had made a great discovery. "I hev learned how to save money, and how to work for my money. . . . At first I was paupper caus I did not no how to save money but I no how to save money now and I am not paupper any more." The spelling of this brief extract is not all accurate, but there is more of a sound philosophy of life in it than in some whole economic libraries, and in several cart-loads of campaign speeches.

It is easier to criticise than to create, and it may seem ungracious to offer any suggestions of amendment; but,

POLICEMAN AND U. S. MAIL-CARRIER

CARPENTER SHOP

because this thing is so essentially good, one does not wish to see its success imperiled by remediable errors. My own hasty inspection leads to the belief that a few things could be mended.

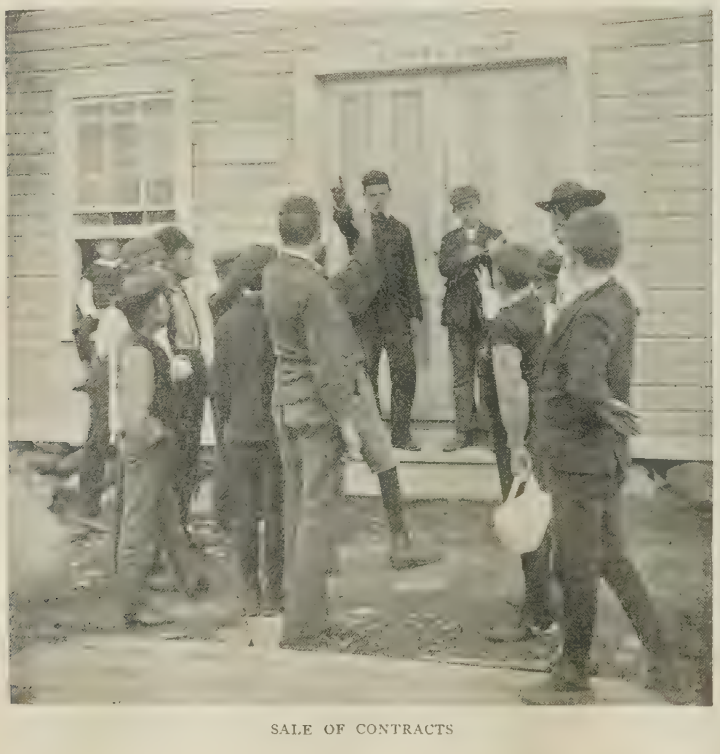
1. Some of the citizens are too young to profit by the discipline. The lower limit of twelve years of age should be strictly adhered to.

2. I doubt the wisdom of co-education in this case.

3. The term of the camp is too short. Four months or six would be far better.

4. Mr. George ought to be relieved by some capable executive officer of all the business details of the administration, that he might devote himself wholly to the social interests of the Republic.

5. Some limit should be placed upon the admission of visitors, by whose presence the time of the officers is absorbed and the business of the community impeded. I am one of the offenders on this score, and I should be glad to prevent others from repeating my offense.



SALE OF CONTRACTS

6. Most serious of all is what seems to me an error in the undue complication of economic questions through a system of importations and a tariff which constantly affects the value of the camp currency, and tends to promote speculation and to discourage honest industry. Curiously enough, all these symptoms were apparent in this miniature Republic at the time of my visit. Financial questions of this grade are too deep for any but the shrewdest of these citizens, and it is doubtful whether it is wise to train them in operations largely speculative. It would be wiser if there were no importations and no tariff; if the articles employed in the trade of the Republic were furnished by the managers at uniform prices, to be paid for in the currency of the Republic, so that traffic might flow on in an even and normal current, unflurried by booms or panics.

These criticisms, which are submitted, under correction, for what they are worth, do not touch the essential spirit and purpose of the scheme, in which I am deeply interested. And one does not need to be many hours upon the grounds before he discovers that, while the plan is a novel one, and while great possibilities in the way of education seem to be suggested by it, the real motive power of it all is the faith and hope and love in the heart of the man who is its founder.

For a Day

By William Watson

Just for a day you crossed my life's dull track,
Put my ignobler dreams to sudden shame,
Went your bright way, and left me to fall back
On my own world of poorer deed and aim.

To fall back on my meaner world, and feel
Like one who, dwelling 'mid some smoke-dimmed town,—
In a brief pause of labor's sullen wheel,—
'Scaped from the street's dead dust and factory's frown,

In stainless daylight saw the pure seas roll,
Saw mountains mirroring the perfect sky,
Then journeyed home, to carry in his soul
The torment of the difference till he die.

—Selected.

A SETTING OF ELMS AND LAWN
·Greenwich, Conn.

The Rural Church

II.—" A Gem Without a Setting "[1]

By J. Cleveland Cady

WHEN, "once upon a time," a distinguished man, and a devoted lover of nature, came to settle in one of the most rural suburbs of New York, he found the leading men of the place intent upon building a church which, to his alarm, was to be of a cheap but very "showy" character—"a cathedral in a bandbox." The modest means, attained only with great difficulty, of course limited the outlay, while the uncultivated tastes of the people demanded a building as pretentious as those of the larger communities with which they were acquainted. With considerable shrewdness the newcomer offered to furnish the services of an architect of repute as his donation—an offer which was gladly accepted, no one realizing how it would probably affect the character and outcome of the scheme.

Church committees often regard the architect as one who puts into a practical "working" shape a scheme which they have mutually agreed upon—they seldom foresee the serious results of their choice of a practitioner; that if he is uncultivated and tasteless, he will of necessity lead their efforts to a crude and disagreeable outcome; that if he is not particularly in sympathy with the work, he will guide them in ways that will be sure to be regretted while the edifice lasts.

In the case which we narrate the architect was in love with his work, and his enthusiasm for that which would be sensible and beautiful gradually turned the ideas of the people from a tall, ambitious building in stucco to a simple, low-walled church of stone, greatly to the relief of the newcomer, as he realized that the hamlet would be beautified instead of disgraced by its new house of worship. With great interest he often called the attention of his friends to what were to him very attractive features of the scheme: the coziness suggested by its low, massive walls; the dignity of its simple, dominating roof; the picturesque character gained in a most natural way from two of its very useful features—the generous Sunday-school hall, and the broad, spreading porch that seemed to speak "welcome" to every passer-by. He also called attention to the fact that in the perspective the architect had suggested that a portion of the very ample grounds be used as "God's acre"—the burial-place of the hamlet.

There was one danger, however, which he did not realize—a danger arising from a very common fault among our countrymen—that of underestimating the importance of a suitable and generous site. He was, therefore, greatly surprised one day to hear the chairman of the committee remark that they would place the new building about fifteen feet back of the roadside walk! The architect, who was present, was the first to recover from surprise (and lose his temper), and exclaimed, with considerable heat, that "such an atrocious course would ruin the building," and "they might as well give the whole thing up."

The chairman, however, coolly remarked that "in Putney," where he was brought up, "the church was only nine feet from the sidewalk, and it was dreadfully convenient; besides, it had the advantage that every one could see the building all the way up and down the road a great deal better than if it had been further back."

The architect replied that "it was far more interesting not to see the whole of a building at once, but little by little—the sight of one part stimulating the desire to see more; that curiosity and interest were excited by being obliged to make some effort to view the whole; that it was gratifying to find something still in store after the first glance had been taken." "Furthermore," he said, "a low, spreading, rambling building, such as ours will be, will especially need an ample setting of grounds to bring out its beauties; its easy lines will not be suited to a stiff, cramped, mechanical-looking plot."

As the rural committee, however, did not feel the force of these remonstrances, they determined upon locating the church not far from the street; and the newcomer, seeing that nothing could be gained by further argument, determined upon a piece of strategy that accomplished his purpose.

---

[1] For the previous article see The Outlook for September 26.

Being appointed, with the chairman and secretary, a committee to locate the corner stake for the builders to base their building lines upon, he suggested to his two committeemen that they should take the end of the tape-line and go to what would be the further end of the church—a hundred feet or more away: he would tell them where to stop, and then the peg could be driven. So he allowed the elderly gentlemen to go forward until he was quite satisfied that the church would be well away from the road, when he called upon them to stop, and, hurrying to them, assisted in driving the stake. When he was afterwards asked by friends, who found out the joke practiced, how he "could thus do evil that good might come," he replied that he was only carrying out the injunction of the Apostle—"catching them with guile."

No sooner, however, did the massive walls go up than every one realized what a serious mistake would have been made had not the handsome foreground been secured for the building; and still later, when a tasteful use of trees and shrubs gave great beauty to the site, there was a general feeling that they had narrowly escaped a serious blunder.

A thoughtful person, speaking of it, said: "I think the beauty of our lovely church is more than doubled by its charming setting of lawn, trees, shrubs, and vines; it reminds me of a contrast a lapidary showed me not long since—two precious stones, equal in size and beauty, one without setting and the other with the most skillful and ingenious one that artist could devise—a setting that strikingly displayed the beauty of the gem, that seemed also to separate it by a harmonious environment from all surrounding objects. One could not believe the other stone to be as valuable; as I have thought it over, I have realized that without its beautiful grounds our church would be 'a gem without a setting.'"

How well this characterizes any beautiful rural church that does not possess ample grounds tastefully and judiciously treated!

In a picturesque New England town the writer not long since met a very instructive example of this kind—a beautiful, carefully studied Gothic church, the design of one of our most eminent architects.

The stone used in construction was a soft, warm gray, which exhibited its pretty detail and pleasing features to excellent advantage. It was apparently about fifty feet in width by one hundred in length, and, surprising to relate, was placed on a plot only seventy-five feet in width. As treated, a passage of ten feet was left on the north side, and one of fifteen feet on the south, which was the entrance front of the building. The chancel being on the end toward the street, the main porch, the tower, and other features were placed on this long south front with its fifteen-foot strip of ground, the limitations of which were strongly emphasized by a high, uncompromising fence that the owner of the adjoining property had erected to keep the "church people" and Sunday-school children off his grounds.

The space on either side of the building being fully occupied by road and path, there was, of course, no space for trees or grass. As careful observation revealed the beauty of the design, the wonder grew that it should have been built upon so limited a plot, and the regret that this architectural gem so completely lacked a setting quite neutralized all pleasure in it. It was found to be a difficult matter to get any good idea of its merits without entering the neighboring properties; the chancel was the only portion that could be seen to advantage, and that was but one end of a long, rambling structure.

Let us consider what was lacking in this instance, besides the opportunity to see the various portions of the building to advantage.

The first lack in this and any similar case is that of perspective. By this is meant the lack of space and natural surroundings that seem to bring the several portions and features of the building into more complete unity and better relationship. In the pleasing vistas which are obtained, different portions and features become prominent, while from some points the entire ensemble is visible, its outline softened and modified by the foliage of the great overhanging trees.

"GOD'S ACRE" THE SETTING
Betchworth Church, England

Still another lack, where such grounds are wanting, is that of color.

From the neatly kept turf, the varied foliage of trees and vines, a charming variety of greens is brought in contrast with the stone of the walls and the covering of the roofs. This, with the play of light, of shadow and sunshine, modifies and softens the otherwise monotonous, and possibly hard, color of the building as by magic, and we wonder at the subtle charm.

Lastly, the lack of suitable grounds involves not only a lack of perspective and color, but also of sentiment—an element which is sure to be felt or missed as the case may be, though the cause of our sensations may not always be recognized.

The impression made by any beautiful spot is one that lingers long and delightfully in the memory, but when it is strongly associated with tender and sacred memories its impressiveness is greatly deepened.

In journeying through rural England one is often charmed, not only with the country church, but especially with its surroundings. Within its inclosure is the "churchyard," with its grassy mounds that remind of those who generations ago came here to worship; who perhaps were christened, married, and buried here; whose most hallowed hours and brightest hopes were connected with this place; there they slumber under the shadow of its low, sturdy tower and spreading trees—a beautiful and enviable resting-place.

As we pass on, what a lovely view we get of the tower, framed between the arching branches of the great trees! Perhaps it is spring, and the tall lilacs, trimmed as trees, are in beautiful bloom and delicious odor. How they recall early impressions, and many a personality whose memory is most sweet and fragrant!

Nature, in its changing moods so full of varied beauty, is continually reminding us of the power and wisdom of Him whose worship is celebrated here. Surely the relation of gem and setting is a very intimate and important one.

In a locality where the charming accessories of nature are within reach, is it not a great mistake to fail to devote a reasonable portion of the means in hand for securing them?

Would it not be better to build more simply, to forego something of ornamentation, and gain such great natural attractions; and, even if our "gem" be a very humble one, give it the charm that a judicious "setting" can add—a charm which would constantly increase with the changing seasons and the flight of years?

KATE CARNEGIE[1]

By Ian Maclaren

Author of "Beside the Bonnie Brier-Bush," "The Days of Auld Lang Syne," etc., etc.

CHAPTER XXI.—LIGHT AT EVENTIDE

The Rabbi had been careful to send an abstract of his speech to Carmichael, with a letter enough to melt the heart even of a self-sufficient young clerical, and Carmichael had considered how he should bear himself at the Presbytery. His intention had been to meet the Rabbi with public cordiality and escort him to a seat, so that all men should see that he was too magnanimous to be offended by this latest eccentricity of their friend. This calculated plan was upset by the Rabbi coming in late and taking the first seat that offered, and when he would have gone afterward to thank him for his generosity the Rabbi had disappeared. It was evident that the old man's love was as deep as ever, but that he was much hurt and would not risk another repulse. Very likely he had walked in from Kilbogie, perhaps without breakfast, and had now started to return to his cheerless manse. It was a wetting spring rain, and he remembered that the Rabbi had no coat. A fit of remorse overtook Carmichael, and he scoured the streets of Muirtown to find the Rabbi, imagining deeds of attention—how he would capture him unawares mooning along some side street hopelessly astray; how he would accuse him of characteristic cunning and deep plotting; how he would carry him by force to the Kilspindie Arms and insist upon their dining in state; how the Rabbi would wish to discharge the account and find twopence in his pockets—having given all his silver to an Irish Presbyterian minister stranded in Muirtown through peculiar circumstances; how he would speak gravely to the Rabbi on the lack of common honesty, and threaten a real prosecution when the charge would be "obtaining a dinner on false pretenses;" how they would journey to Kildrummie in high content, and—the engine having whistled for a dog-cart—they would drive to Drumtochty manse, the sun shining through ther ain as they entered the garden; how he would compass the Rabbi with observances, and the old man would sit again in the big chair full of joy and peace. Ah, the kindly jests that have not come off in life, the gracious deeds that never were done, the reparations that were too late! When Carmichael reached the station the Rabbi was already half-way to Kilbogie, trudging along wet and weary and very sad, because, although he had obeyed his conscience at a cost, it seemed to him as if he had simply alienated the boy whom God had given him for a son in his old age—for even the guileless Rabbi suspected that the ecclesiastics considered his action foolishness and of no service to the Church of God. Barbara's language on his arrival was vituperative to a degree; she gave him food grudgingly, and when, in the early morning, he fell asleep over an open Father, he was repeating Carmichael's name, and the thick old paper was soaked with tears.

His nemesis seized Carmichael so soon as he reached the Dunleith train in the shape of the Free Kirk minister of Kildrummie, who had purchased six pounds of prize seed potatoes and was carrying the treasure home in a paper bag. This bag had done after its kind, and as the distinguished agriculturist had not seen his feet for years, and could have stooped only at the risk of apoplexy, he watched the dispersion of his potatoes with dismay, and hailed the arrival of Carmichael with exclamations of thankfulness. It is wonderful over what an area six pounds of (prize) potatoes can deploy on a railway platform, and how the feet of passengers will carry them unto far distances. Some might never have been restored to the bag had it not been for Kildrummie's comprehensive eye, and the physical skill with which he guided Carmichael, till even prodigals that had strayed over to the neighborhood of the Aberdeen express were restored to the extemporized fold in the minister's top-coat pockets. Carmichael had knelt on that very platform six months or so before, but then he stooped in the service of two most agreeable dogs, and under the approving eyes of Miss Carnegie; that was a different experience from hunting after single potatoes on all fours among the feet of unsympathetic passengers, and being prodded to duty by the umbrella of an obese Free Kirk minister. As a reward for this service to the aged, he was obliged to travel to Kildrummie with his neighbor—in whom for the native humor that was in him he had often rejoiced, but whose company was not congenial that day—and Kildrummie laid himself out for a pleasant talk. After the sorts had been secured and their pedigree stated, Kildrummie fell back on the proceedings of Presbytery, expressing much admiration for the guidance of Doctor Dowbiggin, and denouncing Saunderson as "fair dottle," in proof of which judgment Kildrummie adduced the fact that the Rabbi had allowed a very happily situated pig-sty to sink into ruin. Kildrummie, still in search of agreeable themes to pass the time, mentioned a pleasant tale he had gathered at the seed-shop.

---

[1] Copyright, 1896, by John Watson.

"Yir neebur upbye, the General's dochter, is cairryin' on an awfu' rig the noo at the Castle"—Kildrummie fell into dialect in private life, often with much richness—"an' the sough o' her ongaein's hes come the length o' Muirtown. The place is foo' o' men—tae say naethin' o' weemin; but it's little she hes tae dae wi' them or them wi' her—officers frae Edinburgh an' writin' men frae London, as weel as half a dozen coonty birkies."

"Well?" said Carmichael, despising himself for his curiosity.

"She hes a wy, there's nae doot o' that, an' gin the trimmie hesna turned the heads o' half the men in the Castle, till they say she hes the pick of twa lords, five honorables, and a poet. But the lassie kens what's what; it's Lord Hay she's settin' her cap for, an' as sure as ye're sittin' there, Drum, she 'ill hae him.

"Ma word"—and Kildrummie pursued his way—"it'll be a match, the dochter o' a puir Hielant laird, wi' naethin' but his half-pay and a few pounds frae a' fairm or twa. She's a clever ane: French songs, dancin', shootin', ridin', actin', there's nae deeviltry that's beyond her. They say upbye that she's been a bonnie handfu' tae her father—General though he be—an' a' peety her man."

"They say a lot of . . . lies, and I don't see what call a minister has to slander," and then Carmichael saw the folly of quarreling with a veteran gossip over a young woman that would have nothing to say to him. What two Free Kirk ministers or their people thought of her would never affect Miss Carnegie.

"Truth's nae slander," and Kildrummie watched Carmichael with relish; "a' thocht ye wud hae got a taste o' her in the Glen. Didna a' hear frae Piggie Walker that ye ca'd her Jezebel frae yir ain pulpit, an' that ma' lady whuppit oot o' the kirk in the middle o' the sermon?"

"I did nothing of the kind, and Walker is a . . ."

"Piggie's no very particular at a time," admitted Kildrummie; "maybe it's a mak-up, the story aboot Miss Carnegie an' yirsel'.

"Accordin' tae the wratch," for Carmichael would deign no reply, "she wes threatenin' tae mak a fule o' the Free Kirk minister o' Drumtochty juist for practice, but a' said, 'Na, na, Piggie, Maister Carmichael is ower quiet and sensible a lad. He kens as weel as onybody that a Carnegie wud never dae for a minister's wife. Gin ye said a Bailie's dochter frae Muirtown 'at hes some money comin' tae her and kens the principles o' the Free Kirk.'

"Noo, a' can speak frae experience, having been terrible fortunate wi' a' ma wives. . . . Ye'll come up tae tea; we killed a pig yesterday, an' . . . Weel, weel, a wilfu' man maun hae his wy," and Carmichael, as he made his way up the hill, felt that the hand of Providence was heavy upon him, and that any high-mindedness was being severely chastened.

Two days Carmichael tramped the moors, returning each evening wet, weary, hungry, to sleep ten hours without turning, and on the morning of the third day he came down in such heart that Sarah wondered whether he could have received a letter by special messenger; and he congratulated himself, as he walked round his garden, that he had overcome by sheer will-power the first real infatuation of his life. He was so lifted above all sentiment as to review his temporary folly from the bare, serene heights of common sense. Miss Carnegie was certainly not an heiress, and she was a young woman of very decided character, but her blood was better than the Hays', and she was . . . attractive—yes, attractive. Most likely she was engaged to Lord Hay, or, if he did not please her—she was . . . whimsical and . . . self-willed—there was Lord Invermay's son. Fancy Kate . . . Miss Carnegie in a Free Kirk manse—Kildrummie was a very . . . homely old man, but he touched the point there—receiving Dr. Dowbiggin with becoming ceremony and hearing him on the payment of probationers, or taking tea at Kildrummie manse—where he had, however, feasted royally many a time after the Presbytery, but . . . This daughter of a Jacobite house, and brought up amid the romance of war, settling down in the narrowest circle of Scottish life—as soon imagine an eagle domesticated among barn-door poultry. This image amused Carmichael so much that he could have laughed aloud, but . . . the village might have heard him. He only stretched himself like one awaking, and felt so strong that he resolved to drop in on Janet to see how it fared with the old woman and . . . to have Miss Carnegie's engagement confirmed. The Carnegies might return any day from the South, and it would be well that he should know how to meet them.

"You will be hearing that they hef come back to the Lodge yesterday morning, and it iss myself that will be glad to see Miss Kate again; and very pretty iss she looking, with beautiful dresses and bonnets, for I hef seen them all, maybe twelve or ten.

"Oh, yes, my dear, Donald will be talking about her marriage to Lord Kilspindie's son, who iss a very handsome young man and good at the shooting; and he will be blowing that they will live at the Lodge in great state, with many gillies and a piper.

"No, it iss not Janet Macpherson, my dear, that will be believing Donald Cameron, or any Cameron—although I am not saying that the Camerons are not men of their hands—for Donald will be always making great stories and telling me wonderful things. He wass a brave man in the battle, and iss very clever at the doctrine, too, and will be strong against human himes (hymns), but he iss a most awful liar, iss Donald Cameron, and you must not be believing a word that comes out of his mouth.

"She will be asking many questions in her room as soon as Donald had brought up her boxes and the door was shut. Some will be about the Glen, and some about the garden, and some will be about people—whether you ever will be visiting me, and whether you asked for her after the day she left the kirk. But I will say, 'No; Mister Carmichael does not speak about anything but the religion when he comes to my cottage.'

"That iss nothing. I will be saying more, that I am hearing that the minister is to be married to a fery rich young lady in Muirtown who hass been courting him for two years, and that her father will be giving the minister twenty thousand pounds the day they are married. And I will say that she is very beautiful, with blue eyes and gold hair, and that her temper is so sweet they are calling her the Angel of Muirtown.

"Toot, toot, my dear, you are not to be speaking about lies, for that is not a pretty word among friends, and you will not be meddling with me, for you will be better at the preaching and the singing than dealing with women. It iss not good to be making yourself too common, and Miss Kate will be thinking the more of you if you be holding your head high and letting her see that you are not a poor lowland body, but a Farquharson by your mother's side, and maybe of the chief's blood, though twenty or fifteen times removed.

"She will be very pleased to hear such good news of you, and be saying that it iss a mercy you are getting somebody to dress you properly. But her temper will not be at all good, and I did not ask her about Lord Hay, and she said nothing to me, nor about any other lord. It iss not often I hef seen as great a liar as Donald Cameron.

"Last evening Miss Kate will come down before dinner and talk about many things, and then she will say at the door, 'Donald tells me that Mister Carmichael does not believe in the Bible, and that his minister, Doctor Saunderson, has cast him off, and that he has been punished by his Bishop or somebody at Muirtown.'

"'Donald will be knowing more doctrine and telling more lies every month,' I said to her. 'Doctor Saunderson—who is a very fine preacher and can put the fear of God upon the people most wonderful—and our minister had a little feud, and they will fight it out before some chiefs at Muirtown like gentlemen, and now they are good friends again.'

"Miss Kate had gone off for a long walk, and I am not saying but she will be calling at Kilbogie Manse before she comes back. She is very fond of Doctor Saunderson, and maybe he will be telling her of the feud. It iss more than an hour through the woods to Kilbogie," concluded Janet, "but you will be having a glass of milk first."

Kate reviewed her reasons for the expedition to Kilbogie, and settled that they were the pleasures of a walk through Tochty woods when the spring flowers were in their glory, and a visit to one of the dearest curiosities she had ever seen. It was within the bounds of possibility that Doctor Saunderson might refer to his friend, but on her part she would certainly not refer to the Free Church minister of Drumtochty. Her reception by that conscientious professor Barbara could not be called encouraging.

"Ay, he's in, but ye canna see him, for he's in his bed, an' gin he disna mend faster than he wes daein' the last time a' gied him a cry, he's no like tae be in the pulpit on Sabbath. A' wes juist thinkin' he wudna be the waur o' a doctor."

"Do you mean to say that Doctor Saunderson is lying ill and no one nursing him?" and Kate eyed the housekeeper in a very unappreciative fashion.

"Gin he wants a nurse, she 'ill hae tae be brocht frae Muirtown Infirmary, for a've eneuch withoot ony fyke (delicate work) o' that kind. For twal year hev a' been hoosekeeper in this manse, an' gin it hedna been for peety a' wud hae flung up the place.

"Ye never cud tell when he wud come in, or when he wud gae oot, or what he wud be wantin' next. A' the waufies in the countryside come here, and the best in the hoose is no gude eneuch for them. He's been an awfu' handfu' tae me, an' noo a' coont him clean dottle (silly). But we maun juist bear oor burdens," concluded Barbara piously, and proposed to close the door.

"Your master will not want a nurse a minute longer; show me his room at once," and Kate was so commanding that Barbara's courage began to fail.

"Who may ye be," raising her voice to rally her heart, "'at wud take chairge o' a strainger in his ain hoose an' no sae muckle as ask leave?"

"I am Miss Carnegie, of Tochty Lodge; will you stand out of my way?" and Kate swept past Barbara and went upstairs.

"Weel, a' declare," as soon as she had recovered, "of a' the impident hizzies," but Barbara did not follow the intruder upstairs.

Kate had seen various curious hospitals in her day, and had nursed many sick men—like the brave girl she was—but the Rabbi's room was something quite new. His favorite books had been gathering there for years, and now lined two walls and overhung the bed after a very perilous fashion, and had dispossessed the looking-glass—which had become a nomad and was at present resting insecurely on John Owen—and stood in banks round the bed. During his few days of illness the Rabbi had accumulated so many volumes round him that he lay in a kind of tunnel, arched over, as it were, with literature. He had been reading Calvin's Commentary on the Psalms, in Latin, and it still lay open at the 88th, the saddest of all songs in the Psalter; but as he grew weaker the heavy folio had slid forward, and he seemed to be feeling for it. Although Kate spoke to him by name, he did not know any one was in the room. "Lord, why castest Thou off my soul? . . . I suffer Thy terror, I am distracted . . . fierce wrath goeth over me . . . lover and friend hast Thou put far from me . . . friend far from me."

His head fell on his breast, his breath was short and rapid, and he coughed every few seconds.

"My friend far from me. . . ."

At the sorrow in his voice and the thing which he said the tears came to Kate's eyes, and she went forward and spoke to him very gently. "Do you know me, Doctor Saunderson—Miss Carnegie?"

"Not Saunderson . . . Magor Missabib."

"Rabbi, Rabbi"—so much she knew; and now Kate stroked the bent white head. "Your friend, Mister Carmichael. . . ."

"Yes, yes"—he now looked up and spoke eagerly—"John Carmichael, of Drumtochty . . . my friend in my old age . . . and others . . . my boys . . . but John has left me . . . he would not speak to me . . . I am alone now . . . he did not understand . . . mine acquaintance into darkness . . . here we see in a glass darkly . . . (he turned aside to expound the Greek word for darkly), but some day . . . face to face." And twice he said it, with an indescribable sweetness, "face to face."

Kate hurriedly removed the books from the bed, and wrapped round his shoulders the old gray plaid that had eked out his covering at night, and then she went downstairs.

"Bring," she said to Barbara, "hot water, soap, towels, and a sponge to Doctor Saunderson's bedroom immediately."

"And gin a' dinna?" inquired Barbara, aggressively.

"I'll shoot you where you stand."

Barbara shows to her cronies how Miss Carnegie drew a pistol from her pocket at this point and held it to her head, and how at every turn the pistol was again in evidence; sometimes a dagger is thrown in, but that is only late in the evening, when Barbara is under the influence of tonics. Kate herself admits that if she had had her little revolver with her she might have been tempted to outline the housekeeper's face on the wall, and she still thinks her threat an inspiration.

"Now," said Kate, when Barbara had brought her commands in with incredible celerity, "bring up some fresh milk and three glasses of whisky."

"Whisky!" Barbara could hardly compass the unfamiliar word. "The Doctor never hed sic a thing in the hoose, although mony a time, puir man . . ." Discipline was softening even that austere spirit.

"No, but you have, for you are blowing a full gale just now; bring up your private bottle, or I'll go down for it.

"There's enough," holding the bottle to the light, "to do till evening; go to the next farm and send a man on horseback to tell Mr. Carmichael, of Drumtochty, that Doctor Saunderson is dying, and another for Doctor Manley, of Muirtown."

Very tenderly did Kate sponge the Rabbi's face and hands, and then she dressed his hair, till at length he came to himself.

"This ministry is . . . grateful to me, Barbara . . . my strength has gone from me . . . but my eyes fail me. . . . Of a verity you are not . . ."

"I am Kate Carnegie, whom you were so kind to at Tochty. Will you let me be your nurse? I learned in India, and know what to do." It was only wounded soldiers who knew how soft her voice could be, and hands.

"It is I that . . . should be serving you . . . the first time you have come to the manse . . . no woman has ever done me . . . such kindness before. . . ." He followed her as she tried to bring some order out of chaos, and knew not that he spoke aloud. "A gracious maid . . . above rubies."

His breathing was growing worse, in spite of many wise things she did for him—Doctor Manley, who paid no compliments, but was a strength unto every country doctor in Perthshire, praises Kate unto this day—and the Rabbi did not care to speak. So she sat down by his side and read to him from the "Pilgrim's Progress"—holding his hand all the time—and the passage he desired was the story of Mr. Fearing.

"'This I took very great notice of, that the valley of the shadow of Death was as quiet while he went through it as ever I knew it before or since. I suppose these enemies here had now a special check from our Lord and a command not to meddle until Mr. Fearing was passed over it. . . . Here also I took notice of what was very remarkable: the water of that river was lower at this time than ever I saw it in all my life. So he went over at last, not much above wet-shod. When he was going up to the gate . . .'"

The Rabbi listened for an instant.

"It is John's step . . . he hath a sound of his own . . . my only earthly desire is fulfilled."

"Rabbi," cried Carmichael, and, half kneeling, he threw one arm round the old man, "say that you forgive me. I looked for you everywhere on Monday, but you could not be found."

"Did you think, John, that I . . . my will was to do you an injury or . . . vex your soul? Many trials in my life . . . all God's will . . . but this hardest . . . when I lost you . . . nothing left here . . . but you . . . —my breath is bad, a little chill— . . . understand . . ."

"I always did, and I never respected you more; it was my foolish pride that made me call you Doctor Saunderson in the study; but my love was the same, and now you will let me stay and wait on you."

The old man smiled sadly, and laid his hand on his boy's head.

"I cannot let you . . . go, John, my son."

"Go and leave you, Rabbi!" Carmichael tried to laugh. "Not till you are ready to appear at the Presbytery again. We 'ill send Barbara away for a holiday, and Sarah will take her place—you remember that cream—and we shall have a royal time, a meal every four hours, Rabbi, and the Fathers in between," and Carmichael, springing to his feet and turning round to hide his tears, came face to face with Miss Carnegie, who had been unable to escape from the room.

"I happened to call"—Kate was quite calm—"and found Doctor Saunderson in bed; so I stayed till some friend should come; you must have met the messenger I sent for you."

"Yes, a mile from the manse; I was on my way . . . Janet said . . . but I . . . did not remember anything when I saw the Rabbi."

"Will you take a little milk again, . . . Rabbi?" and at her bidding and the name he made a brave effort to swallow, but he was plainly sinking.

"No more," he whispered; "thank you . . . for service . . . to a lonely man; may God bless you . . . both. . . . He signed for her hand, which he kept to the end.

"Satisfied . . . read, John . . . the woman from coasts of—of—"

"I know, Rabbi," and, kneeling on the other side of the bed, he read the story slowly of a Tyrian woman's faith.

"It is not meet to take the children's meat and to cast it to dogs."

"Dogs"—they heard the Rabbi appropriate his name—"outside . . . the covenant."

"And she said, Truth, Lord, yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their master's table."

"Lord, I believe . . . help mine . . . unbelief."

He then fell into an agony of soul, during which Carmichael could hear, "Though . . . He slay . . . me . . . yet will I trust . . . trust . . . in Him." He drew two or three long breaths and was still. After a little he was heard again with a new note—"Not put to confusion . . . nor break the bruised reed." Then he opened his eyes and raised his head, and said in a clear voice, full of joy, "My Lord, and my God."

It was Kate that closed his eyes and laid the old scholar's head on the pillow, and then she left the room, casting one swift glance of pity at Carmichael, who was weeping bitterly and crying between the sobs, "Rabbi, Rabbi!"

CHAPTER XXII.—WITHOUT FEAR AND WITHOUT REPROACH

Doctor Davidson allowed himself, in later years, the pleasant luxury of an after-luncheon nap, and then it was his habit—weather permitting—to go out and meet Posty, who adhered so closely to his time-table—notwithstanding certain wayside rests—that the Doctor's dog knew his hour of arrival, and saw that his master was on the road in time. It was a fine April morning when the news of the great disaster came, and the Doctor felt the stirring of spring in his blood. On the first hint from Skye he sprang from his chair, declaring it was a sin to be in the house on such a day, and went out in such haste that he had to return for his hat. As he went up the walk, the Doctor plucked some early lilies and placed them in his coat; he threw so many stones that Skye forgot his habit of body and ecclesiastical position; and he was altogether so youthful and frolicsome that John was seriously alarmed, and afterward remarked to Rebecca that he was not unprepared for calamity.

"The best o's tempts Providence at a time, and when a man like the Doctor tries tae rin aifter his dog, jidgment canna be far off. A'm no sayin'," John concluded, with characteristic modesty, "that onybody cud tell what was coming, but a' jaloused there wud be tribble."

The Doctor met Posty in the avenue, the finest bit on our main road, where the road has wide margins of grass on either side, and the two rows of tall, ancient trees arch their branches overhead. Some day in the past it had been part of the approach to the house of Tochty, and under this long green arch the Jacobite cavaliers rode away after black John Carnegie's burial. No one could stand beneath those stately trees without thinking of the former days, when men fought, not for money and an easy life, but for loyalty and love; and in this place the minister of Drumtochty received his evil tidings like a brave gentleman who does not lose heart while honor is left. During his years in the Glen he had carried himself well, with dignity and charity, in peace and kindliness, so that now, when he is dead and gone—the last of his family—he still remains to many of us a type of the country clergyman that is no longer found in Scotland, but is greatly missed. It seemed, however, to many of us—I have heard both Drumsheugh and Burnbrae say this, each in his own way—that it needed adversity to bring out the greatness of the Doctor, just as frost gives the last touch of ripeness to certain fruits.

"Fower letters the day, Doctor—ane frae Dunleith, ane frae Glaisgie, another frae Edinburgh, and the fourth no clean stampit, so a' can say naethin' aboot it. Twa circulars an' the 'Caledonian' maks up the ha'e hypothic" (complete stock).

Posty buckled and adjusted his bag, and made as though he was going, but he loitered to give opportunity for any questions the Doctor might wish to ask on foreign affairs. For Posty was not merely the carrier of letters to the Glen, but a scout who was sent down to collect information regarding the affairs of the outer world. He was an introduction and running commentary on the weekly paper. By and by, when the labor of the day was done, and the Glen was full of sweet, soft light from the sides of Ben Urtach, a farmer would make for his favorite seat beside the white rose-tree in the garden, and take his first dip into the Muirtown "Advertiser." It was a full and satisfying paper, with its agricultural advertisements, its roups, reported with an accuracy of detail that condescended on a solitary stirk, its local intelligence, its facetious anecdotes. Through this familiar country the goodman found his own way at a rate which allowed him to complete the survey in six days. Foreign telegrams, however, and political intelligence, as well as the turmoil of the great cities, were strange to him, and here he greatly valued Posty's laconic hints, who, visiting the frontier, was supposed to be in communication with those centers. "Posty says that the Afghans are no makin' muckle o' the war," and Hillocks would sally forth to enjoy Sir Frederick Roberts's great march, line by line, afterward enlarging thereon with much unction, and laying up a store of allusion that would last for many days.

Persons raised to the height of a daily newspaper, like the minister, might be supposed independent of Posty's précis, but even Doctor Davidson, with that day's "Caledonian" in his hand, still availed himself of the spoken word.

"Well, Posty, any news this morning?"

"Naethin', Doctor, worth mentionin', except the failure o' a company, Glaisgie wy; it's been rotten, a' wes hearin', for a while, an' noo it's a fair stramash. They say it 'ill no be lichtsome for weedows an' mony decent fouk in Scotland."

"That's bad news, Posty. There's too many of those swindling concerns in the country. People ought to take care where they place their savings, and keep to old-established institutions. We're pretty hard-headed up here, and I'll wager that nobody in the Glen has lost a penny in any of those new-fangled companies."

"The auld fouk in Drumtochty pit their siller in a pock an' hode it ablow their beds, an', ma certes, that bank didna break;" and Posty went along the avenue, his very back suggestive of a past, cautious, unenterprising, safe, and honest.

The Doctor glanced at the envelopes and thrust the letters into his pocket. His good nature was touched at the thought of another financial disaster, by which many hard-working people would lose their little savings, and all the more that he had some of his private means invested in a Glasgow bank—one of those tried and powerful institutions which was indifferent to every crisis in trade. Already he anticipated an appeal, and considered what he would give, for it did not matter whether it was a coal-pit explosion in Lanarkshire or a loss of fishing-boats in the Moray Firth, if widows needed help the Doctor's guinea was on its way within four-and-twenty hours. Some forms of religious philanthropy had very little hold on the Doctor's sympathy—one of the religious prints mentioned him freely as a Unitarian, because he had spoken unkindly of the Jewish mission—but in the matter of widows and orphans he was a specialist.

"Widows, Posty said; poor things! and very likely bairns. Well, well, we 'ill see what can be done out of Daisy's fund."

Very unlikely people have their whims, and it was his humor to assign one-fourth of his income to his little sister, who was to have kept house for him, and "never to leave you, Sandie," and out of this fund the Doctor did his public charities. "In memory of a little maid" appeared in various subscription lists; but the reference thereof was only known after the Doctor's death.

"The Western Counties Bank did not open its doors yesterday, and it was officially announced at the head office, Glasgow, that the bank had stopped. It is impossible as yet to forecast the debts, but they are known to be enormous, and as the bank is not limited, it is feared that the consequences to the shareholders will be very serious. This failure was quite unexpected, the Western Counties Bank having been looked on as a prosperous and stable concern."

He read the paragraph twice, word by word—it did not take long—he folded the paper carefully and put it in his pocket, and he stood in the spot for five minutes to take in the meaning in its length and breadth. A pleasant spring sun was shining upon him through a break in the leafy arch, a handful of primroses were blooming at his feet, a lark was singing in the neighboring field. Sometimes the Doctor used to speculate how he would have liked being a poor man, and he concluded that he would have disliked it very much. He had never been rich, and he was not given to extravagance, but he was accustomed to easy circumstances, and he pitied some of his old friends who had seen it their duty to secede at the Disruption, and had to practice many little economies, who traveled third class and had to walk from the station, and could not offer their friends a glass of wine. This was the way he must live now, and Daisy's fund would have to be closed, which seemed to him now the sweetest pleasure of his life.

"And Jack! Would to God I had never mentioned this wretched bank to him! Poor Jack, with the few hundreds he had saved for Kit!"

For some five minutes more the Doctor stood in the place; then he straightened himself as one who, come what may, would play the man, and when he passed Janet's cottage, on his way to the Lodge, that honest admirer of able-bodied, good-looking men came out and followed him with her eyes for the sight of his firm, unbroken carriage.

"Miss Kate will be grieving very much about Doctor Saunderson's death," Donald explained at the Lodge, "and she went down this forenoon with the General to put flowers on his grave; but they will be coming back every minute," and the Doctor met them at the Beeches.

"May I have as fair hands to decorate my grave, Miss Catherine Carnegie," and the Doctor bowed gallantly; "but of one thing I am sure, I have done nothing to deserve it. Saunderson was a scholar of the ancient kind, and a very fine spirit."

"Don't you think," said Kate, "that he was . . . like A'Kempis, I mean, and George Herbert, a kind of . . saint?"

"Altogether one, I should say. I don't think he would have known port wine from sherry, or an entrée from a mutton chop; beside a man like that, what worldly fellows you and I are, Jack, and mine is the greater shame."

"I'll have no comparisons, Padre"—Kate was a little puzzled by the tone in the Doctor's voice; "he was so good that I loved him; but there are some points in the General and you, quite nice points, and for the sake of them you shall have afternoon tea in my room," where the Doctor and the General fell on former days and were wonderful company.

"It's not really about the road I wish to talk to you," and the Doctor closed the door of the General's den, "but about . . . a terrible calamity that has befallen you and me, Jack, and I am to blame."

"What is it?" and Carnegie sat erect; "does it touch our name or . . . Kate?"

"Neither, thank God," said Davidson.

"Then it cannot be so very bad. Let us have it at once," and the General lighted a cheroot.

"Our bank has failed, and we shall have to give up everything to pay the debt, and . . . Jack, it was I advised you to buy the shares." The Doctor rose and went to the window."

"For God's sake don't do that, Sandie. Why, man, you gave me the best advice you knew, and there's an end of it. It's the fortune of war, and we must take it without whining. I know whom you are thinking about, and I am . . . a bit sorry for Kate, for she ought to have lots of things—more dresses and trinkets, you know. But, Davidson, she 'ill be the bravest of the three."

"You are right there, Jack. Kate is of the true grit, but . . . Tochty Lodge."

"Yes, it will hit us pretty hard to see the old place sold, if it comes to that, when I hoped to end my days here . . . but, man, it's our fate. Bit by bit we've lost Drumtochty, till there was just the woods and the two farms left, and soon we 'ill be out of the place—nothing left but our graves.

"Sandie, this is bad form, and . . . you 'ill not hear this talk again; we 'ill get a billet somewhere, and wherever it be, the'ill be a bed and a crust for you, old man;" and at the door the two held one another's hands for a second; that was all.

"So this was what you two conspirators were talking about downstairs, as if I could not be trusted. Did you think that I would faint, or perhaps weep? The Padre deserves a good scolding, and as for you—" Then Kate went over and cast an arm round her father's neck, whose face was quivering.

"It is rather a disappointment to leave the Lodge when we were getting it to our mind; but we 'ill have a jolly little home somewhere; and I'll get a chance of earning something. Dancing, now—I think that I might be able to teach some girls how to waltz. Then my French is really intelligible, and most colloquial; besides revolver-shooting. Dad, we are on our way to a fortune, and at the worst you 'ill have your curry and cheroots, and I'll have a well-fitting dress. Voila, mon père!"

When the two Drumtochty men arrived next forenoon at the hall in Glasgow, where the shareholders had been summoned to receive particulars of their ruin, the dreary place was filled with a crowd representative of every class in the community except the highest, whose wealth is in land, and the lowest, whose possessions are on their backs. There were city merchants, who could not conceal their chagrin that they had been befooled; countrymen, who seemed utterly dazed, as if the course of the seasons had been reversed; prosperous tradesmen, who were aggressive in appearance and wanted to take it out of somebody; widows, who could hardly restrain their tears, seeing before them nothing but starvation; clergymen, who were thinking of their boys taken from school and college. For a while the victims were silent, and watched with hungry eyes the platform door, and there was an eager rustle when some clerk came out and laid a bundle of papers on the table. This incident seemed to excite the meeting and set tongues loose. People began to talk to their neighbors, explaining how they came to be connected with the bank, as if this were now a crime. One had inherited the shares and had never had resolution to sell them; another had been deceived by a friend and bought them; a third had taken over two shares for a bad debt. A minister thought that he must have been summoned by mistake, for he was simply a trustee on an estate which had shares, but he was plainly nervous about his position. An Ayrshire Bailie had only had his shares for six months, and he put it, with municipal eloquence, to his circle whether he could be held responsible for frauds of years' standing. No one argued with him, and indeed you might say anything you pleased, for each was so much taken up with his own case that he only listened to you that he might establish a claim in turn on your attention. Here and there a noisy and confident personage got a larger audience by professing to have private information. A second-rate stock-broker assured quite a congregation that the assets of the bank included an estate in Australia which would more than pay the whole debt, and advised them to see that it was not flung away; and a Government pensioner mentioned casually in his neighborhood, on the authority of one of the managers, that there was not that day a solvent bank in Scotland. The different conversations rise to a babel, various speakers enforce their views on the floor with umbrellas, one enthusiast exhorts his brother unfortunates from a chair, when suddenly there is a hush, and then in a painful silence the shareholders hang on the lips of the accountant, from whom they learn that things could not be worse, that the richest shareholder may be ruined, and ordinary people will lose their last penny.

Speech again breaks forth, but now it is despairing, fierce, vindictive. One speaker storms against Government which allows public institutions to defraud the public, and refers to himself as the widow and orphan, and another assails the directorate with bitter invective as liars and thieves, and insists on knowing whether they are to be punished. The game having now been unearthed, the pack follow in full cry. The tradesman tells with much gusto how one director asked the detectives for leave to have family prayers before he was removed, and then declares his conviction that when a man takes to praying you had better look after your watch. Ayrshire wished to inform the accountant and the authorities that the directors had conveyed to their wives and friends enormous sums which ought to be seized without delay. The air grew thick with upbraidings, complaints, cries for vengeance, till the place reeked with sordid passions. Through all this ignoble storm the Drumtochty men sat silent, amazed, disgusted, till at last the Doctor rose, and such authority was in his very appearance that with his first words he obtained a hearing.

"Mr. Accountant," he said, "and gentlemen, it appears to me as if, under a natural provocation and suffering, we are in danger of forgetting our due dignity and self-respect. We have been, as is supposed, the subjects of fraud on the part of those whom we trusted; that is a matter which the law will decide, and, if necessary, punish. If we have been betrayed, then the directors are in worse case than the shareholders, for we are not disgraced. The duty before us is plain, and must be discharged to our utmost ability. It is to go home and gather together the last penny for the payment of our debts, in order that, at any rate, those who have trusted us may not be disappointed. Gentlemen, it is evident that we have lost our means; let us show to Scotland that there is something which cannot be taken from us by any fraud, and that we have retained our courage and our honor."

It was the General who led the applause so that the roof of the hall rang; but it is just unto Ayrshire and the rest to say that they came unto themselves—all men of the old Scots breed—and followed close after with a mighty shout.

The sound of that speech went through Scotland and awoke the spirit of honest men in many places, so that the Doctor, traveling to Muirtown, third class, with the General, and wedged in among a set of cattle-dealers, was so abashed by their remarks as they read the "Caledonian" that the General let out the secret.

"Yir hand, sir," said the chief among them, a mighty man at the Falkirk Tryst; "gin it bena a leeberty, ilka ane o's hes a sair fecht tae keep straicht in oor wy o' business, but ye've gien's a lift the day," and so they must needs all have a grip of the Doctor's hand, who took snuff with prodigality, while the General complained of the smoke from the engine.

Nor were their trials over, for on Muirtown platform—it being Friday—all kinds of Perthshire men were gathered, and were so proud of our Doctor that before he got shelter in the Dunleith train his hand was sore, and the men that grasped it were of all kinds, from Lord Kilspindie—who, having missed him at the manse, had come to catch him at the station—"Best sermon you ever preached, Davidson"—to an Athole farmer—"I am an elder in the Free Kirk, but it iss this man that will be honoring you."

It was a fine instance of the unfailing tact of Peter Bruce that, seeing the carriage out of which the two came, and taking in the situation, he made no offer of the first class, but straightway dusted out a third with his handkerchief, and escorted them to it, cap in hand. Drumtochty restrained itself with an effort in foreign parts—for Kildrummie was exceptionally strong at the Junction—but it waited at the terminus till the outer world had gone up the road. Then their own folk took the two in hand, and these were the body-guard that escorted the Minister and the General to where our Kate was waiting with the dog-cart, each carrying some morsel of luggage—Drumsheugh, Burnbrae, Hillocks, Netherton, Jamie Soutar, and Archie Moncur. Kate drove gloriously through Kildrummie as if it had been a triumph; and let it be said to its credit that, the news having come, every hat was lifted; but that which lasted till they got home, and long afterward, was the handshake of the Drumtochty men.

[To be continued in the November Magazine Number of The Outlook]

William Morris

By Joel Benton

Out of England's dwindling choir
  A bard of pure Virgilian touch
Has fallen. His was no harp of fire,
  But tender, dreamy. It was such
As one who, fond of languorous tunes,
Could wish for summer afternoons,
Or hear with pleasure all the day,
Till Summer's self should fade away.

He gave us light from land and sea,
Rare tales of old mythologie;
And, if with sorrows sad enough,
Full of the marvelous lore of love.

No more fair dreams of Paradise
From his rapt lyre for us shall rise;
Ended is all that lulling verse
Which Jason's quest could so rehearse,
And which from Odin's polar sky
Drew wonders so idyllicly.

With lotus and nepenthe filled,
He had the artful power to gild
And touch with charm each tale he told,
And make its sorcery manifold.

But now Death comes, and, ruthless, steals away
"The idle singer of an empty day."

◆

The historian must be a poet; not to find, but to find again; not to breathe life into beings, into imaginary deeds, but in order to reanimate and revive that which has been; to represent what time and space have placed at a distance from us.—Joseph Roux.

Books and Authors

New Books

[The books mentioned under this head and under that of Books Received include all received by The Outlook during the week ending October 16. This weekly report of current literature will be supplemented by fuller reviews of the more important works.]

Pre-eminent among the novels of the week is Henryk Sienkiewicz's Quo Vadis. In this the great Polish writer enters a third field of fiction; he has achieved fame in the novel of Polish historical romance and in that of psychological analysis, and now he attempts to reconstruct for us the life of Rome in the early days of Christianity. The time chosen is the reign of Nero, and St. Paul and St. Peter are among the characters. The author works on a large canvas, with many figures and a close attention to detail. One misses the humor and vivacity of "With Fire and Sword" and its sequels, but there is in their place a calm strength and a distinct purpose. The book is deserving of a careful and thoughtful reading. (Little, Brown & Co., Boston.)——Maurice H. Hervey's Amyas Egerton, Cavalier, is a manly and spirited story of the end of the war between Charles I. and his rebellious subjects. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)——Captain Shannon, by Coulson Kernahan, is a clever detective story growing out of a dynamite outrage. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)——Nell Haffenden, by Tighe Hopkins (same publishers), is a singular mixture of weakness and excellence; the spirit and intent of the author are admirable, and the characters are fairly interesting, but their talk is too often trivial and tiresomely drawn out, and there is too much forced liveliness. A good deal of compression would improve the story. An "American boarding-house" in London introduces us to certain strange creatures labeled Americans, who talk the extraordinary dialect used by Americans only on the English stage and in English novels; a lesson in Yankee dialect from Miss Wilkins would be of use to the author.——The End of the Beginning, by an anonymous writer, appeals to a thoughtful rather than a popular audience. Its recurrent question, "What is love?" is answered by the title and by the cover-motto, "Life is love, and love is eternity." The chief character is a New England girl of peculiar refinement of spirit, but with an underlying romantic vein. The philosophy is optimistic, and there is a distinctly original flavor in the style. (Little, Brown & Co., Boston.)——Tales of Our Coast comprises five exceedingly good English short stories of coast and sea life; their excellence is assured in advance by the authors' names—S. R. Crockett, Gilbert Parker, W. Clark Russell, "Q" (Mr. Quiller-Couch), and Harold Frederic; and the opinion thus formed is amply confirmed by a reading of the stories; that by "Q" is particularly fine. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)——Redburn, by Henry Ochiltree (same publishers), introduces a new exponent of Scotch rural life, and a new practitioner in "Doric" dialect. The author is worthy to join the band of popular writers now having such wide and well-deserved vogue. He has an admirable knack at character-observation, and if the imagination and humor are less strong than with Mr. Barrie and Mr. Watson, the realism is sound and true.

Mr. S. R. Crockett's The Gray Man is a semi-historical story of Scotch feuds in the reign of James VI. of Scotland (James I. of England). Launcelot Kennedy, the young squire, who is the hero, is a manly and brave fellow, and his fighting and love-making are both picturesque. The faction quarrels are a little confused to the average reader's mind. The incident of Sawney Bean's cannibals and their cave, though founded on fact, is too horrible for the uses of fiction, and is not well treated at that. While Mr. Crockett has won a good measure of success in books like this and "The Man of the Moss Hags," he has not, it seems to us, struck in them the note of individual strength and originality found in "The Stickit Minister," and even in "The Lilac Sunbonnet." (Harper & Brothers, New York.)

The Green Mountain Boys, by Eliza F. Pollard, is a patriotic and spirited tale of the Revolution, in which the lines of history are closely followed. It has a love story also. It can be cordially commended for young people's reading (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York); as can also a pleasant story about a jolly and lively group of young people, called We Ten, from the same publishers. Barbara Yechton is the author.——Mr. William Drysdale has found a new subject for a boy's book in The Fast Mail. It is really the life of a train-boy, and includes an interesting study of the details of railway work. Boys will like it. (W. A. Wilde & Co., Boston.)——Henry Kingsley, as a novelist, deserved greater fame than he obtained in his lifetime. Of late his merits have been more widely recognized. The Mystery of the Island was intended as a boy's book, and while it is not to be compared with "Ravenshoe" or "Geoffry Hamlyn," it is a readable story of "bush and pampas, wreck and treasure trove." (J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia.)——Mr. J. P. Webster's Oracle of Baal is the offspring of a riotous imagination, and has little literary merit. (Same publishers.)——Shod with Silence, by Edward S. Ellis, is the first of a series of boys' stories which will deal with frontier life, under the general title "The Boone and Kenton" series. Simon Kenton is the hero of this book. (H. T. Coates & Co., Philadelphia.)——Two excellent stories of outdoor life for boy readers are Mr. J. Macdonald Oxley's The Boy Tramps, and Professor C. G. D. Roberts's Around the Camp-Fire. Both have their scenes laid in Canada, and the heroes of both have thrilling adventures in abundance. (T. Y. Crowell & Co., New York.)——From the same publishers comes a new edition of that justly popular girls' story, Half a Dozen Girls, by Anna Chapin Ray.

Lovers of "the gentle sport" have very generally been interested in the series of articles on Angling which have appeared in "Scribner's Magazine." These are now combined and printed in book form. Among the writers are Leroy M. Yale, A. Foster Higgins, Robert Grant, and C. F. Holder. The book belongs to the excellent "Out-of-Door Library." (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.)

The football season makes timely A Primer of College Football, by W. H. Lewis, a member of a former Harvard University team. It is clearly expressed, and illustrated by instantaneous photographs. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)

The Crowning of Candace is a thoroughly cheerful, sensible, and pleasantly written story for girls, by Katherine Pearson Woods. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)

The Mistress of Sherburne, by Amanda M. Douglas (Dodd, Mead & Co.), is a tale of ordinary domestic life—the interests, trials, sacrifices, and happinesses of pleasant, every-day folk.——Bushy, by Cynthia M. Westover (The Morse Company, New York), is a story of the adventures of a child in the Rocky Mountains. There are plenty of hairbreadth escapes and opportunities for bringing out the girl's plucky nature.——In Dwell Deep, or Hilda Thorn's Life Story, by the author of "Probable Sons," we follow the experiences of a deeply religious girl who succeeds in standing aside from the frivolities of life and in the end leads a few friends into her own way of thought. The style is immature. (Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.)——The hero in The Majesty of Man certainly does not live up to this title in his early career. Ambition, selfishness, and love collide, and it takes ten years of experience to discover that duties do not conflict and to suggest a return to a devoted and a neglected wife. The lesson that "the majesty of man comes out in the love of 'im" is unfolded in several characters and from different standpoints. The book is by "Alien," and is beautifully published by Messrs. Dodd Mead & Co., New York.——Nephelé, by Francis W. Bourdillon, is a plea for "telepathic consciousness." Probability and possibility are each swallowed up in the supernatural. The author follows his victims relentlessly through the mystic communion of their kindred souls—to brain fever. Nephelé is the betrothed of the hero's best friend, but in mysterious music-language the two musicians confess their mutual love and then Nephelé dies, while the hero and the affianced husband are left lamenting. (The New Amsterdam Publishing Company, New York.)——An Egyptologist, with a resurrected mummy for his bride and an avenging Fate in the spirit of the bride's rejected suitor of centuries ago, make up the rather unusual dramatis personæ of Iras. An overwrought brain, a clairvoyant, and an ancient inscription help to solve the riddle, and one follows with interest the fortunes of the mummy-princess. The author of the story is Theodore Douglas, and the volume is attractively published by Messrs. Harper & Brothers, New York.

Midnight in a Great City, by the Rev. Cortland Myers (Merrill & Baker, New York), is the title of a volume recounting the woes, vices, and miseries of the metropolis. The style is feverish and hysterical.——Reminiscences of an Octogenarian of the City of New York, 1816 to 1860, by Charles H. Haswell (Harper & Brothers, New York), is an interesting volume by the well-known author of the "Mechanic's and Engineer's Pocket Book of Tables." Mr. Haswell tells us that he does not propose to furnish a history of the city during the period designated, as there are several histories in existence which in detail and extent are in advance of any essay that either his recollection or information would attain. He succeeds well, however, in giving his recollection of certain matters which have come under his own observation, and of certain individuals who are prominently before the public. Perhaps the most interesting descriptions in his book are those of the old theaters and of the Macready-Forrest riots.——To the already astonishing number of year-books has now been added The Northfield Year-Book (Fleming H. Revell Company, New York), selected and arranged by Delevan L. Pierson, and illustrated by Mary A. Lathbury. The combination of selected passages in the text is better than the combination of illustrations.——The new edition of A Primer of American Literature, by Charles F. Richardson, of Dartmouth (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.), contains an appendix giving portraits of eight American authors, with illustrations of their homes. This appendix is not remarkable, but the book is. It offers to the busy man exactly the condensed text for which he craves, and it is a good book to be in any one's hands.

Messrs. Marquand and Frothingham, Professors of Archæology and the History of Art in Princeton University, have issued a small History of Sculpture which finds fit place in the "College Histories of Art." (Longmans, Green & Co., New York.) A concise survey of the history of sculpture is something needed everywhere. We note with pleasure the rapid description of prehistoric sculpture in this volume, and we heartily agree with the reason given for such brevity, namely, that the connection of prehistoric sculpture with the flow of civilization is at the present too remote and too ill defined. This reason is to a certain extent true of the history of Saracenic, Indian, Chinese, and Japanese sculpture, and hence we are glad to see that the authors of this volume pass over as quickly as possible those periods which do not directly affect our own time. We can go to the work of Perrot and Chipiez and others for illustration on various periods of sculpture; what we have to do now is, in the first place, to get a correct and concise survey of the whole history before attending to any one period—and it is safe to say that such a correct and concise survey is had by few persons, even those who are supposed to know much about art: then to judge correctly of what makes the art life of to-day as represented in sculpture. A good feature of this book—and one which should be imitated—is the list indicating where casts and photographs may best be obtained. Of course such a volume is amply indexed.

Old Houses of the Antient Town of Norwich, 1660 to 1800, by Miss Mary E. Perkins, is a large and sumptuously published volume. The text is entertaining, and is supplemented by many maps, illustrations, and genealogical tables. We learn that this book is one of a projected series of volumes which will aim to give an account of the old houses of Norwich, their owners and occupants, from the settlement of the town to the year 1800. Of course the volume will appeal to those who have lived in Norwich, or whose ancestors lived there, or who know the town in any way; but even to him who does not, but who loves New England, there is in the old-time portraits from miniatures, silhouettes, daguerreotypes, and paintings, and in the reproduction of lovely old houses, such a charm that, after having fingered the book once, one is moved to go back to the beginning and look it all over again. Copies of the book may be obtained by addressing the author at No. 148 Pequot Avenue, New London, Conn.

M. François Coppée's On Rend l'Argent has been adapted to the class-room, and edited, with introduction and notes, by Thomas Bertrand Bronson, Master in the Lawrenceville School. (Henry Holt & Co., New York.) Nothing could be more happy than the book's dress, and the notes are both ample and helpful.

The Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, Jr., has gathered a series of Lent papers into a small volume, and has published them through Messrs. E. P. Dutton & Co., New York. The great merit of these short sermons is in their exceeding simplicity, and in that respect this is a commendable devotional book. The volume's title is The Christian Life.

An attractive holiday book will be the translation into English of M. André Theuriet's Rustic Life in France, illustrated by M. Léon Lhermitte. (T. Y. Crowell & Co., New York.) We reserve fuller notice until later.

Dean Hodges, of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, has put forth a notable book, Faith and Social Service (Thomas Whittaker, New York), it being a collection of eight lectures delivered before the Lowell Institute. There is no one at the present day uninterested in the new social service, which, abreast of the "new theology," is demanded of all Christians. In Dean Hodges's lectures the economic questions raised are just those that have been most puzzling to most men, and, therefore, the book has a direct and practical value beyond the value of many books published at the present time. The Dean not only states the problem; he also goes far in solving it. We cannot too cordially commend his book. Perhaps the best means of introducing it will be to mention the titles of the chapters—they are in themselves suggestive: "The New Forces," "Indifference," "Doubt," "Poverty," "Labor," "Moral Reform," "The City," "The Divided Church." While there is something of the preacher in this book, there is a good deal more of the publicist. The volume has also an every-day-like, journalistic character which will insure its wide popularity.

Dr. W. G. Horder's Quaker Worthies, published by the Headley Brothers, London, contains a series of sketches of eminent Quakers, both English and American, from the hand of the eminent Congregational preacher of London.——A Manual for China Painters is described in its sub-title as "a practical and comprehensive treatise on the art of painting china and glass with mineral colors." The author does not claim to present anything new, but bases her book on the results of many years of observation and experience, and writes especially for those who are at the beginning of this difficult but fascinating minor art. (Lee & Shepard, Boston.)——Mr. Norman D. Gray, following in the footsteps of Mr. Bellamy, and with the same respect for charades as an intellectual diversion not to be too lightly tested or too swiftly finished, has prepared a little volume of '96 Charades well calculated to test the knowledge and ingenuity of its readers to the utmost. (Lamson, Wolffe & Co., Boston.)

Probably no illustrated book of the season will awaken a warmer personal interest than that which contains selections from the writings of John Burroughs under the title A Year in the Fields, with a series of delightful photographic illustrations in perfect harmony with the text, and presenting Mr. Burroughs in the various aspects of his life. The selections were made and photographs taken by Mr. Clifton Johnson. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.)

The publication of a long poem or of a volume of short poems from the hand of Mr. Thomas Bailey Aldrich is an event of the first interest and importance in current literary history. His latest venture into the field of verse, Judith and Holofernes, is dressed with the taste and dignity which the theme and the quality of Mr. Aldrich's work alike demand. Mr. Aldrich has used the old story for dramatic purposes, and has taken such liberties with the text as those purposes seemed to require. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.)

The third and final volume of Kate Douglas Wiggin and Nora Archibald Smith's "Republic of Childhood" contains an exposition and description of Kindergarten Principles and Practice. The three volumes taken together probably represent as much freshness of thought and of feeling as any recent contributions to educational literature, and they are of interest not only to kindergartners, but to all who are concerned with the training and development of children. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.)

In Modern Political Orations the editor, Mr. Leopold Wagner, has collected what he regards as the most notable examples of political oratory during the Victorian age. Lord Brougham, John Bright, Earl Russell, Lord Beaconsfield, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Chamberlain, Mr. Morley, and Richard Cobden are among those from whose orations selections have been made. (Henry Holt & Co., New York.)——The compact little volume by Lieutenant A. S. Rowan and Professor M. M. Ramsey on The Island of Cuba comes at a time when information touching that much-disturbed province of Spain is greatly needed. The volume treats the subject under three heads. First, it gives a descriptive account of the geographical and climatic features; next it fills in the historical background; and in the third part it discusses the political and commercial aspects. Several maps are introduced. (Henry Holt & Co., New York.)

Lovers of folk stories—and in these days they are a multitude—will be interested in the volume of Fairy Tales of the Slav Peasants and Herdsmen, translated from the French of Alexander Chodsko, and illustrated by Emily J. Harding. Many of these tales are now brought under the eye of English readers for the first time. The illustrations show considerable imagination, and the stories are full of it. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)——Probably very few readers who glance at the title of Katherine S. and Gilbert S. Macquoid's book, In the Volcanic Eifel, will know the country so pleasantly described by these experienced travelers and writers. That country lies between the valley of the River Rohr and the valley of the Moselle, and in this volume its volcanic remains, its crater lakes, its sparkling rivers, and its picturesque little inns are very familiarly and unconventionally described, with numerous illustrations. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)——The Rev. H. R. Haweis has filled two prettily made volumes with very familiar talk about his travels on this continent and in the Pacific islands, under the general title Travel and Talk. American readers will be especially interested in his comments on prominent men and women whom he met in this country, his impressions of American cities, traveling facilities, streets, architecture, and manners. His style is distinctly offhand. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)

Probably very few books of the year will have a more intimate interest than Mary Cowden-Clarke's autobiographic sketch of what she calls My Long Life. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.) It was her good fortune, not only to know a great many interesting people in a very interesting time, but to be herself a very interesting person. The volume is enriched with several portraits.——Legends from River and Mountain contains ten stories taken from the German of Carmen Sylva, all of them being of Roumanian origin. The remaining stories in the volume are collected from different parts of Germany. The book is not intended as a contribution to the study of folk-lore, but rather as a contribution to the entertainment of younger readers. For this purpose it is capitally illustrated. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)

The fourth volume of the Writings of Thomas Paine (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York) includes a number of interesting and characteristic pieces, among them the once famous "Age of Reason."——Few recent series of books have had a wider popularity or have more thoroughly deserved it than the "Story of the Nations," to which the latest addition is Mr. C. E. Maurice's Story of Bohemia, a chapter of history of which, as a rule, Americans know very little. The volume may therefore be said with entire accuracy to supply what was needed, and what in this form has not existed before.

The Memoirs of Mgr. Salamon, the Internuncio at Paris from 1790 to 1801, throw an interesting light on the tragic period of the Abbé de Salamon's residence in Paris. He was an eye-witness of some of the most striking scenes of the revolutionary epoch, and he describes what he has seen in a very direct and unconventional fashion. (Little, Brown & Co., Boston.)——A very pretty copy of Prosper Mérimée's Carmen has been issued by Little, Brown & Co. The translation from the French is made by Mr. Edmund H. Garrett. There is a memoir of the author by Miss Guiney, and there are five etched plates and seven etched vignettes, with a photogravure frontispiece of Calvé as Carmen.——A translation by F. Max Müller of Kant's Critique of Pure Reason very fitly commemorates the centenary of the first publication of that epoch-making work, and is put in a substantial and well-printed volume by the Macmillan Company.——The growing popular interest in architecture is evidenced by the rapidly increasing literature on the subject. To this literature no American is probably better qualified to make a contribution of lasting value than Mr. Russell Sturgis, whose European Architecture: A Historical Study, comes from the press of the Macmillan Company in a large, well-made, and generously illustrated volume. The story of the art is told from the time of prehistoric building to the architecture of western Europe so late as the close of the last century.

The Temple Shakespeare is nearing completion, The Rape of Lucrece and Venus and Adonis and Passionate Pilgrim being the thirty-eighth and thirty-ninth volumes, leaving one more to follow. (The Macmillan Company.)——The same publishers have added to the Modern Reader's Bible, recently noticed at length in these columns, The Judges, with Professor Moulton's introduction and notes.——They have also added to their new edition of Wordsworth's Works Vol. VII., which includes the Ecclesiastical Sonnets and the poems of 1823 and 1834, inclusive.——The same imprint is also upon Balzac's Beatrix, translated by James Warren, with the usual preface by Mr. Saintsbury. There is an excellent etching of Balzac's birthplace introduced by way of frontispiece.——The Bridal March, and One Day make up the fifth volume in the new edition of the novels of Björnson. The former was written in 1872, and the latter was first published in 1893. (The Macmillan Company.)

Messrs. Harper & Brothers have made an exceedingly pretty book of a number of Mr. Brander Matthews's short essays under the title Aspects of Fiction and Other Ventures in Criticism. Readers will be equally interested in what Mr. Matthews has to say about American literature, about "The Penalties of Humor"—one of his very characteristic essays—and about novels and the writing of novels, for on all these matters Mr. Matthews may be said to have expert knowledge.

Professor Corson's Selections from Chaucer's Canterbury Tales has been prepared, he tells us, as an introduction to the study of Chaucer as a poet rather than as a writer of fourteenth-century English. This was an excellent thing to do, and no American is more competent to do it than Mr. Corson. The Ellesmere text is used, and there are a very interesting general introduction, copious notes, and a glossary. (The Macmillan Company.)

The small boys and girls who wrestle with temptation and overcome it, and in return accomplish the thing they want to accomplish most, are the heroes and heroines of The Making of a Hero, by Mrs. George A. Paull. (Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.)

[For list of Books Received see Table of Contents]

The Religious World

Jubilee Meeting of the American Missionary Association

From our Special Correspondent

A peculiar interest always attaches to an annual meeting of the American Missionary Association. Including as it does in the scope of its labors the elements of both home and foreign missionary work, it is able to present all that is heroic and romantic in both lines of effort, and to appeal in an impressive manner to both patriotic and philanthropic sentiment. It addresses itself particularly to what are called the "despised races" in this country—a phrase which ought long ago to have been abandoned—the negroes in the South, the Indians upon the reservations, the Chinese on the Pacific coast, the illiterate "mountain whites" of the Appalachian range, and the Eskimos of Alaska. It is able to gather from these various fields a vast amount of fresh and telling material; and as the officers and workers of the Association have always been men and women of a conspicuously devoted type, the annual gathering of the Association in public meeting has long ranked among the most notable religious anniversaries of the year.

The meeting at Boston last week possessed an unusual interest from the fact that the Association has just completed fifty years of work, and the occasion was properly given something of a festival character. The place of meeting was the new Tremont Temple, whose spacious and brilliant auditorium was profusely decorated with the National colors and with banners bearing legends appropriate to the anniversary. More than a thousand delegates were in attendance, and a large audience was present at every session, the evening audiences particularly testing the full capacity of the hall.

There was, of course, much of reminiscence in the addresses which were given. Several of the speakers, notably the venerable Secretary, the Rev. Dr. M. E. Strieby, whose long years of connection with the Association have won for him distinguished honors, were able to draw from abundant resources in this line. There was frequent reference to the old anti-slavery days, and many a thrilling incident and heroic achievement were recalled, stirring the hearts of old and young alike. It was the privilege of the Association also to recall to its platform a number of speakers who represented in themselves the practical value of the Association's work; and, as these looked backward to the days of bondage and barbarism from which they had been rescued, their sense of gratitude shone forth at times in a way deeply pathetic. It was right that these noble men and women, with their host of redeemed fellows in the South and West, should be frequently referred to as the true monuments of the Association's work.

But while the reminiscent feature of the gathering was naturally prominent, the chief emphasis was laid upon present needs and opportunities. The fifty years of toil, sacrifice, and hardship were regarded, not as a cause for rejoicing and thanksgiving alone, but as furnishing a basis for yet more extended and hopeful effort. Indeed, this look toward the future was the pronounced characteristic of the anniversary. From the opening sermon by Dr. Lyman Abbott, in which the proclamation of brotherhood was eloquently set forth as the special mission of America, to the closing impassioned words of Dr. Alexander McKenzie, who urged the lifting up of Christ as the one who is drawing all men unto himself, this thought was continually uppermost: What is our present duty? How shall we best improve the vast opportunities opening before us? In special line with this thought was the notable address of Mr. Justice Brewer, of the United States Supreme Court, who dared to lift the veil of the future and describe the Nation with these various racial elements assimilated; also the scholarly consideration of the sociological bearings of the Association's work by the Rev. Dr. Washington Gladden, with its companion eloquent utterance regarding the patriotic relations of the work by the Rev. Dr. C. W. Hiatt; also the special addresses on various departments of the field by the Rev. Dr. Henry Hopkins, speaking for the Indians, the Rev. Dr. James Brand in behalf of the Mountain Whites, and the Rev. Dr. J. H. Twichell pleading for the Chinese. A most practical application of this thought was given Thursday afternoon, when, under the inspiration of two forceful addresses by the Rev. Drs. Nehemiah Boynton and Robert R. Meredith, an appeal was made to the audience to assist in the effort to reduce the debt of the Association by taking "Jubilee shares" of fifty dollars each. More than $20,000 had already been subscribed toward this fund (the debt now being $66,000 as against $96,000 a year ago), and, amid considerable enthusiasm, over $9,000 was pledged in a brief space of time, most of the contributions being in single shares or less. There was one vivid moment during the response to this appeal when a telegram from Florida was read announcing that the infamous Sheats Law had just been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of that State.

The anniversary was naturally a time for congratulation. Prominent in this connection were the addresses of Hon. Roger E. Wolcott, the acting Governor of Massachusetts, and Hon. Josiah Quincy, the Mayor of Boston, who welcomed the Convention in words of sincere appreciation and genuine Christian sentiment. Fraternal addresses were also received from eminent representatives of the six associated benevolent societies sustained by the Congregational churches of the country. Especially notable were the addresses of Bishop Benjamin F. Tanner, of the African M. E. Church, and of Bishop C. V. Galloway, of the M. E. Church, South. The latter address, which was as fine a piece of rhetoric as has ever been heard on the Association's platform, and as cordial in its brotherly feeling as it was perfect in diction, was received with marked demonstrations of satisfaction and approval.

By courtesy of the city authorities the Association was given permission to "rock the cradle"—which, in local parlance, means holding a meeting in Faneuil Hall, "the Cradle of Liberty." Two noon meetings were held in this historic edifice, and the hall was crowded each time with an enthusiastic audience. The presiding officers on the two occasions were Hon. S. B. Capen and Hon. A. H. Wellman, who both eulogized the work of the Association in promoting an exalted type of patriotism. The speakers were the Rev. Drs. Robert R. Meredith, Alexander McKenzie, Edward Everett Hale, and Alonzo H. Quint—names whose bare mention in such connection will suggest the nature of what was said, and its reception by the audience. Naturally, the all-prevailing political excitement could not be banished from such gatherings, and while no speaker was guilty of "offensive partisanship," there were numerous references to the currency question which indicated a practically unanimous sentiment in favor of "sound money." At the second of these "town meetings," to use Dr. Hale's felicitous phrase, a ringing resolution was adopted, under Dr. Hale's lead, demanding that the Armenian refugees be given an asylum in this country.

Other subordinate but none the less interesting gatherings were the Y. P. S. C. E. meeting in Park Street Church on Wednesday evening under the lead of Secretary J. W. Baer, which was characterized by the customary Christian Endeavor enthusiasm, and the Women's Meeting in Tremont Temple on Thursday afternoon, when the list of speakers included such noted names as Miss Susan Hayes Ward, Miss Alice L. Dawes, Miss Mary C. Collins, and Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer.

It was a great disappointment that neither Senator George F. Hoar nor Dr. Richard S. Storrs, who were announced for the closing session, could be present, Dr. Storrs being detained on account of sickness in his family, and Senator Hoar on account of—the fact need not be disguised—politics. The former, however, sent an eloquent letter, which was eloquently read by Dr. Lyman, of Brooklyn, in which he pointed out the providential leadings of the Association in its relation to American history and public affairs.

A most delightful feature of the sessions was the singing of a double quartette, composed of students and recent graduates from Fisk University. Their rendering of the old slave songs, inexpressibly sweet and musically artistic as well, was greatly enjoyed by the audience. Special mention should also be made of the admirable arrangements which had been devised by the local committee, under the lead of the Rev. Dr. W. E. Barton, of Shawmut Church, for the comfort and convenience of the delegates. The committee was not responsible for the abominable ventilation of Tremont Temple—a blemish upon this otherwise attractive place of meeting—but in every other respect its provisions were most liberal and acceptable.

The Convention as a whole was a splendid success from every point of view, and a new impetus will be given to the cause for which the Association is working, which is sure during the coming years to be productive of large results.

H. W. G.

◆

Fourth Convention of the Institutional Church League The selection of the Fourth Congregational Church in Hartford, Conn., as the meeting-place for the annual Convention of the Open and Institutional Church League was most appropriate. For ten years this church, under the admirable leadership of the Rev. H. H. Kelsey, has been with conspicuous force demonstrating to the traditional conservatism of the old order in New England the practicability of making the church not chiefly a school of teaching but a center of ministry. How helpful to this end have been the faculty and students of the Hartford Theological Seminary is a matter of history. The "Old Fourth" still stands, sadly deficient as a plant for its multiplied work, but hope for a building which may be adequate to its needs and at the same time yield an endowment income awaits only the favorable results of the present political struggle for its fruition. It need not be said that in such an environment this gathering of the workers and supporters of the so-called institutional churches found warm welcome. Excellent audiences were present at the more formal public meetings of the evenings of the 20th and 21st inst., and the discussions in the other sessions were vigorous, rich in sound principle and common sense, and full of courage and hope. Those who have watched the growth of the League for the three years of its history, and who have participated in its previous conventions in New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, perceive a definite increase of strength not only in the individual enterprises represented, but in the closer coherence of the constituent parts of the League. Their creed, that "ministration to all men and all of the man" is the function of the Church, has required no revision. The officers elected for the coming year are as follows: President, the Rev. Charles L. Thompson, D.D., of New York; Corresponding Secretary, the Rev. E. B. Sanford, D.D., of New Haven; Treasurer, Mr. John S. Huyler, of New York; Recording Secretary, the Rev. Gaylord S. White, of Brooklyn. Among the Vice-Presidents are such influential names as those of Drs. C. A. Dickinson and Everett D. Burr, of Boston; Drs. Russell H. Conwell, W. M. Paden, Kerr B. Tupper, and Sylvanus Stall, of Philadelphia; Dr. C. S. Mills, of Cleveland; Drs. John Clark Hill and Graham Taylor, of Chicago; Drs. Josiah Strong, F. M. North, Edward Judson, C. S. Harrower, and Leighton Williams, of New York; and Messrs. William E. Dodge and Robert C. Ogden.

The Discussions as Signs of the Times

The subject matter of the Convention is quite as significant as was its personnel, as the topics, even without the synopsis of the exceedingly able addresses, will indicate. Dr. Charles L. Thompson, of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church in this city, and Dr. Charles H. Richards, of the Central Congregational Church in Philadelphia, discussed both analytically and broadly the question, "Is the Church Fulfilling its Mission?" Stronger pleas for an open church, an every-day church, for the spirit and method of ministry shown in the Apostolic church, have not been uttered. Dr. Everett D. Burr, of the Ruggles Street Baptist Church in Boston, spoke on "The Spirit of Ministration as Exemplified in the Institutional Church," an address penetrated with truest sympathy for the poor and the workingman, and strong in illustrations from the daily experiences of the speaker's own ministry. Professor William F. Blackman, who holds the chair of Sociology in the Yale Divinity School, presented a most discriminating paper upon "The Institutional Church in its Relation to the Community," in which the kinship of this movement in the churches to the development of the social order and the true perspectives of theology was most effectively stated. From the remarkable successes of the Holland Memorial Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia as a free church, its able pastor, Dr. W. M. Paden, illustrated that very imperative question, "The Problem of Support." Professor W. O. Atwater, of Wesleyan University, whose eminent services in the field of agricultural chemistry are everywhere recognized, and who has been conducting practical experiments not only in the chemistry of foods but in the habits of the poor in the matter of food supply and cooking, discussed "Some Things the Church may do toward Improving the Food and Nutrition of the Poor." The mass-meeting of the second evening brought to the platform three speakers. Dr. Kerr Boyce Tupper, now pastor of the First Baptist Church of Philadelphia—a church with a plant which will cost $400,000 when finished, a membership of thirteen hundred, and a remarkably effective organization for church work—spoke of "Some Methods of Church Work which I Have Tried." Upon the present-day theme, "The Institutional Church an Essential Factor in City Evangelization," Dr. C. A. Dickinson, of Berkeley Temple, declared the truth as he saw it in the work of this first institutional church of the land; and the Rev. S. P. Cadman, of the Central Metropolitan Temple (Methodist) in New York, eloquently plead for broader foundations for evangelical thought and a wider scope for the ministries of the Church. Such a Convention, with such discussions, by men who in many different fields have won the right to a hearing, emphasizes the reality of the new era which has come to the Church and the world.

A Quiet Day

The Evangelical Alliance of the United States has issued a call for the observance of "A Quiet Day" by the ministers of the various churches of the United States as a means of preparation for the campaign of the coming winter. It suggests that a day of conference and prayer be spent together by all the ministers in each community, and that that day be November 17, and that in the evening of the same day all the officials of all churches be invited to be present. They call attention to the fact that most of the great movements in Christian history have been preceded by periods set apart for prayer and humiliation. The great missionary enterprises of this century had their origin in such a meeting. It is proposed that the ministers of the Free Churches of Great Britain unite in such a day this year. The call is issued in view of the fact that we are evidently in the midst of a period of transition, and such periods are crowded with great perils, and no less with great opportunities. The call, which is signed by William E. Dodge as President, Dr. Josiah Strong as Secretary, and representatives of all the evangelical churches, is itself an admirable and inspiring document. It can be secured in full from the Secretary at the general office in New York. We desire to give our influence to this movement. We can think of no better way for beginning the campaign in all the towns of the country than for the ministers and officers of the churches to meet for prayer and devout conference Let the call of the Evangelical Alliance be heeded, and the 17th day of November be observed as a quiet day by the ministers and church officers throughout the country.

The Greatest Work of the Age

Last week we referred to the annual meeting of the Congregational Union of England and Wales. This week we notice the annual meetings of the Baptist Union and of the Church Congress. The most significant utterance of the Baptist Union was contained in the address of the President, the Rev. T. Vincent Tymms, whose subject was "Authority, True and False." In the course of the address Mr. Tymms brought out the fact that the teachings of Christ are essentially revolutionary; that wherever the social order is not organized on the basis of righteousness it finds an implacable foe in Christianity. Concerning the social and political condition in England he said: "There is a schism in the body politic. The lower self is so far smitten and restrained by the higher mind which seeks to serve the law of God that it cannot fully execute its just designs, and is sometimes entirely arrested; but the higher is so fiercely resisted and impeded by the lower that its noblest purposes are often frustrated, and its best acts so marred and mixed with what is bad that its good is evil spoken of, and seems at times, both to Englishmen and foreigners, to be a fraud." Following, he declared that the greatest work of the age is the education of men for authority according to the method of Jesus Christ. He used these words: "It is a greater thing to make men fit for liberty . . . than it is to make them free. It is a greater thing to make men worthy of power than to put a scepter in their hands and to provide them with a realm which they may desolate." Following this he argued earnestly in favor of the distinctly spiritual work of the Church, and said: "I view with jealousy attempts to convert the Church into an engine for the performance of lower works than those for which she was created as a spiritual body." The main thought of the address was that the education of the people in moral ideas is the greatest work of the time, and that that can be accomplished better by the ministry and the churches devoting themselves to distinctly spiritual lines than to co-operation in schemes for political and social renovation.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew began its annual Convention in Trinity Church, Pittsburg, October 14. The meeting, while not as large as some which have preceded, was regarded as eminently successful. Among the more notable addresses were those of Bishop Sessums, who spoke on the subject of "Citizenship," and Bishop Whipple, who delivered the anniversary sermon. Six or seven hundred young men representing the Order were present. An interesting feature of the meeting was a session devoted to college men, in which there was a movement to induce them to turn their attention to the founding of college settlements, after the manner of other settlements already in existence both in Great Britain and America. From the report of the Council we notice that the growth of the Brotherhood during the last year has been comparatively small. Forty-nine new chapters have been added, making a total of 1,174. "The most notable incident in the life of the Brotherhood during the year was a visit of a committee representing the two American Brotherhoods to England and Scotland. One outcome of the visit was the formal organization of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in the Church of England. This occurred June 12 in the Church House, London. One of the interesting incidents of the visit abroad was the receipt of a cordial letter from Mr. Gladstone. From the report of these meetings in the "Churchman" we make the following extract concerning Bishop Whipple's sermon: "The Bishop paid a glowing tribute to the missionaries of other communions, and said that 'in the other land there will be but one communion.'" There is no indication that the Bishop went further, and intimated what that communion would be; but, being a peculiarly liberal and broad-minded man, we have no doubt that he referred to the common communion of saints. What a blessing it would be if there could be more of that common communion in all forms of Christian work before we reach that other land!

For the Little People

At Eventime

By Mary F. Butts

Swallow, dear swallow,
Hasten from the sky;
The ant with her pack
Has just hurried by.

Madame Honey-Bee,
Who started with the day,
Has carried home her honey,
And packed it all away.

Work and play are over,
The evening sky is red
Let all little people
Hurry home to bed.

The Two Orphans

By Nora Archibald Smith

There was a flutter, a splutter, a rustle, a scratching, and a squeak in the chimney, and, suspecting a mouse, I hurriedly called out "Scat!" Then there was more flutter, more rustle, and more squeak, and the noise of a light fall. It must be a bat, I thought; but who ever heard of a bat falling down a chimney?

The curious noise went on, so I cautiously stole to the fireplace and moved aside the fire-board a little, not at all sure what sight would meet my eyes. The light pouring in produced a marked effect, and the fluttering increased, while the other noise grew louder and sounded like a snake's hiss, alternating with a shrill chirp. Brave in the knowledge that snakes never crawl down chimneys, I thrust my head still further into the darkness, and there, clinging to the blackened bricks, was a half-grown swallow, in a high state of fear and excitement, apparently calling for his mother in one breath, and in the next bemoaning the ruffled, sooty condition of his first suit of feathers. In the ash-pan lay another swallow, not fully fledged as yet, and not as strong as his brother, but very bright-eyed, noisy, and watchful, while beside him were the nest, one long, pointed white egg, and the pieces of a broken one. Evidently while the parents were out for an airing the young birds had been having a nursery frolic, and down had come babies, cradle, and all. Knocking a thing down, as perhaps you have noticed, is really quite an easy matter, but putting it up again is often very different. The more I looked at the nest, the more sure I felt that fastening it to the bricks was a task altogether beyond my powers, even if I had been able to climb far enough up the chimney to secure it in a suitable place. The baby birds were too young to give advice, and, besides, I did not understand their language, though I knew enough about it to be sure that they were both crying at once, "Oh, mother, I'm so frightened! Oh, father, do come quickly!"

The nest really was so sooty and so dirty that I lifted it with the tongs and laid it in the dust-pan. The little thing was beautifully made, like half an oval basket in shape, and carefully woven of flexible twigs in real basket-work pattern, over and under one, over and under one, with not a single bit of a mistake in one of the rows. The twigs were glued together to make it more secure, and it had evidently been glued to the chimney, too, only the father and mother bird perhaps had not had much experience with babies before, and did not know how they kicked nor how strong their cradles had to be. The more I looked at it, the more I wondered how two small swallows could make such a cradle, with no hatchet to cut the wood, no knife to trim it into shape, no shuttle to weave the twigs, no foot-rule to measure them, no glue-pot and no brush to stick them together, and no needles and no thread to sew the soft linings. What care and tenderness and patience and industry had been lavished on that nest, and here it was in a dust-pan at last! But my admiration was not half finished when the young swallows grew so noisy and so uneasy that I felt that something must be done at once to help them; so I picked them up, too, put them in the dust-pan, and carried nest and all downstairs and laid it on the grass under the lilacs. Now, I thought, the father and mother bird will certainly find their babies, for no one could help hearing such cries, and, of course, they will think out some way of meeting the difficulty. I must go away, though, or the parents will be afraid to come, and I went upstairs to my work. But hours passed and the old birds did not appear, while, after an interval of silence, the screams of the two orphans grew so much more piercing that I really feared they would attract a neighbor's cat half a mile away.

It was late afternoon now, and the babies of course were hungry, as well as frightened and lonely. They must not be left on the ground all night, so I hunted up a small basket, and, lining it with flannel, tucked the sufferers within and hung it high in the branches. The basket was not half as well made as their own, but it would serve for a shelter. Now bed was provided, but where was supper? I moistened bread with warm milk, and tried to open their beaks and coax a few mouthfuls down their gaping throats. No, they would not eat; they gasped and choked and almost tumbled out of the basket in their fright and disgust. It was much as if an elephant should try to feed a mouse, and I retired to the library window, ready to weep over my failure. Where were the father and mother? Had they both been killed, and were the babies alone in the world? They were quiet now, and in the silence I heard the flutter of the catbird's wings as he came to his nest in the same clump of lilacs. I knew him and his dusky wife very well, and had taken a great interest in their three little ones, and I could hear now their flutterings and calls for food and see their heads thrust out of the nest for the expected mouthful. The baby swallows heard, too, and began to cry again, "Oh, dear, I am so hungry! oh, dear, I am so cold! oh, dear, I am so lonesome!" over and over again. The catbird seemed surprised to find the noise so near, and hopped on a twig to look at the basket and its contents. Of course he had heard the crying all the afternoon, but at a greater distance, and it could scarcely be called his business then, as I appeared to be nursing the foundlings. He shook his head now, and retired to think the matter over. Presently his wife returned, and again there was excitement and loud calls for food from the kitten birds, followed as before by renewed wails from the swallows. The mother listened, fluttered through the lilacs to the basket, made some remarks in a low voice to its inmates, and rustled away.

What was going to happen? Would this dear, kindly little couple take the sad case in hand? Yes, bless the warm hearts that beat under the gray feathers! here they came flying back, each with a beakful for the orphans. To and fro, to and fro they hurried, thrusting bit after bit into the wide-opened mouths until the hungry cries died away and soon only sleepy twitters of satisfaction could be heard.

I watched them in my window, and cried for very joy in their goodness and relief at the orphans' good fortune. But their tender charity was only half completed, for as the evening grew dusky and the night dews began to fall, one of the good Samaritans hopped into the basket and cuddled the shivering swallows under her thick feathers and close to her warm, loving little heart, while her mate hovered their own brood. Happy kitten birds to have such a mother and father, and happy swallows to have found such protectors!

The next morning I eagerly watched the lilacs, and saw that the orphans were being cared for as regularly and as carefully as the other brood, while at night they were tenderly hovered again. So the days went on, the parent birds working with scarcely a moment's rest to care for their five little ones. The swallows grew up as strong, bright-eyed, and well-feathered as if their very own father and mother had been tending them, and when the right time came they were taught to fly, and went out into the world.

Though I did not see them bid the home nest good-by, yet I know the parting must have been a very tender one, and I am sure, of all the carols of all the feathered songsters in the world, none can ever be so sweet to them as the mew of the catbird.

A New Kind of Kite

Kites used to be considered toys for boys Now they are used for weather observations, and for decorations during a parade or outdoor demonstrations, having held flags in the air at varying heights. Now the possibility of using them in times of war to study the enemies' fortifications is being talked about. In New York Harbor is an island called Governor's Island, used by the Government for purposes of defense. On this island is a fort equipped with mounted guns. Soldiers are stationed there. Opposite on the other shores are other forts equipped with mounted guns and soldiers. No enemies' ships could come to New York without passing these forts. The guns at the forts would sweep the decks of the ships, and sink the ships. This is what is meant by the defense of the harbor. One of the officers on this island has been experimenting in making a kite that will carry a man high in the air, where he may see the surrounding country. He made a frame thirty feet long and nine inches deep. This frame is strongly braced on the inside, and the kite-string is a quarter-rope. There are really two kites, one smaller than the other, fastened four hundred feet apart on the kite-string. The kites have no tails. The ends of the frame are covered at either end with canvas, and the wind has free play through the frame. The kite-string fastened to the main frame is wound round a windlass, and is played out by four men. Less than that number could not hold the kites. The smaller kite helps to raise the larger one. Last week the kites floated in the air with a dummy weighing forty pounds, dressed as a man, sitting in a hanging seat below the larger kite. The kites carried the dummy easily, and when it was drawn in, it settled gently to the ground. The problem is to find out how heavy a load the kites will carry, and then to devise some steering-gear by which the kites may be controlled in the air. Lanterns were tied on the kite-string the other night and made a very pretty sight.

Two Babies in a Bag

Out West, last spring, two young men were plowing when they found two young coyotes, a species of prairie-dog. They tried to take the coyotes home. After a good deal of trouble with the father and mother, who tried to recover their dear babies from these, to them, cruel monsters, the men succeeded in driving the father and mother away, and then tied the babies securely in a bag. They watched the bag for a while, but, as the father and mother did not attempt to come nearer than the edge of the wood, they thought they were thoroughly frightened and would not try to get their babies back. The men followed the plow from end to end of the field, passing the little creatures in the bag several times. Suddenly there was a strange sight when they turned down the field. It was the mother coyote dragging the bag with her babies in it across the field to the woods. She reached the woods with the bag, escaping the men, and there probably ripped the bag open and let her babies out. She seemed to know that to let them out of the bag in the field would mean recapture; she could run with them tied up faster than they could run if free.

A Queer Cat

The Chicago "Tribune" says there is a cat in Chicago that loves water, and dislikes warm sunshine or the heat from a fire. This cat was in a house that was burned down, and its feet were burned. Ever since he has shown a dislike of heat, and that he likes water.

Correspondence

Silver and Mexico

To the Editors of The Outlook:

Your successive articles on the "money" question have always met with my hearty approval. As it seems desirable that all possible light shall be cast upon this subject, especially at this critical period, I beg leave to add to your valuable contributions on this topic a very interesting letter received by me from a very distinguished and influential citizen of Mexico, and my reply thereto, not as directly bearing on this election, which involves issues of far greater importance to the welfare and existence of our Republic, but as aiding in the solution of the financial problem, which will remain and become an all-important question long after the election shall have settled the more momentous issues. The situation seems almost grotesque, that a citizen of Mexico should be commenting upon and deploring the threatened disorders of the United States!

The translation of the letter is as follows:

EXTRACT FROM LETTER

My Dear Friend: . . . I see with regret that the political agitation in your country continues to produce financial uneasiness of fatal consequences to the natural course of business. It may be that after the 3d of November next you may enjoy some tranquillity; but in the meantime the alarm, whether it has solid foundations or not, will continue increasing, in all probability. A panic is a sentiment very easily communicated, and takes hold of the multitude with lightning rapidity, causing among them terrible havoc. Will the United States reach such a stage? With all my heart I desire that they shall not. The fact that two great parties, which in turn have been directing the affairs of state, should be divided on the question of "Free Trade" or "Protection," of itself entails a serious impediment to the normal life of business. And, besides, an additional obstruction exists; a natural law, which seems to recognize a financial crisis of greater or less importance as likely to occur in periods not exceeding ten years, almost as great a disturber as the tariff reform, arises in each Presidential epoch, which, affecting as it does production in its source, affects perforce all the mechanism of the question of "wages," "exchanges," and of "credit," without obtaining, in a properly constituted social body, any compensation by the acquirement instead of other advantages. And if to this, already a serious question, we add the new problem, or, to better express it, the new conflict which is being waged, notwithstanding the technical character of the matter, between "gold" and "silver" supporters, it appears but natural that doubt and indecision should invade all classes, this phenomenon producing an alarm which all feel, but cannot clearly account for. I venture to send you a copy of an article I wrote and published here (in the City of Mexico) on the silver question, hoping it will interest you. The article is as follows:

"Editor of the Corres Español:

"Sir—The silver problem, concerning which you have asked my opinion in your esteemed daily, rather demands a book, scrupulously considered, than a few lines written in haste. A good many have, in fact, been published in late years, but, abstracting the very important collection of data necessary for the formation of a judgment concerning the approximate circulation of the white metal, all that these intellectual efforts have shown has been the uselessness of every tendency to withdraw this problem from its economic channel to place it in spheres of administrative action, seeking a thousand legal solutions, all of which are impossible. Within such a field it would be useless to pretend that this matter should acquire greater light than the very small one with which it is now illumined; and in truth it does not cause much wonder to see it obscured and entangled, in view of the inefficiency of the methods of examination applied thereto. In my opinion, the value of silver "bullion" has come to be confused with that of silver "coin," not considering the fact that a coin of a nation represents, to a certain degree at least, its credit; and, as such, made receivable for taxes and other uses as money, might as well be placed upon a piece of argentiferous metal (making an abstraction of the bullion value thereof) as on a piece of paper. When a State is sufficiently rich to convert into gold at a given moment all its coined silver presented, it can fix the relation between the two coined metals in any manner it may deem most reasonable, as France, Belgium, or the United States are now able to do. But whereas in Italy, Spain, or Portugal, the economic power is weak and badly organized, public authority lacks the means to force said relation, and the market then establishes it—the coin becomes bullion, changeable in value according to supply and demand. From this confusion between silver as a product and silver as coin arises the prejudgments which prevent the solving of the problem."

"The rise of silver at this moment (August 31, 1894) is an accident of commercial character and has no connection of any kind with the scientific view of the question. As to my personal opinion on the subject, it can be condensed in a few lines. I do not believe in the positive and permanent reinstatement of the value of the white metal, and I will not believe in it even if all the governments in accord fix upon it a definite ratio in its relation to gold. Let us suppose that said arrangement had been agreed upon at this moment. In what form could it be done? The relation, it is obvious, could only be established between gold and silver coins. Supposing that the contracting powers fix a common standard for their coinage. None of them, unless they had lost their reason, would obligate itself to coin a larger amount than it required for its own use. The moment that silver would, by this device, receive a higher value than properly belongs to it, the production thereof would necessarily be stimulated to an exorbitant degree. Let us imagine that the governments would obligate themselves to convert into coin all the silver now produced from the mines, distributing it equitably (i. e., according to each country's need and ability to maintain at par with gold on the fixed ratio). As soon as the hope of a greater profit increased the production, who would then consume the surplus? Would it be offered for sale, as any other product? Then, in such case, from that moment the legal standard and the fixed price would perforce be altered, and the silver subject, like any other commodity, to the law of supply and demand.

Would the production of silver in the world be limited to a fixed amount to prevent so difficult an obstacle? Could the amount of silver, in excess of the limit which the contracting powers had determined necessary for consumption, be declared contraband? And even if this were done, would such a measure be at all effectual? The limitations to the legitimate use of our activity are never decreed except to fall into disuse. I do not, therefore, think that silver will ever recover its former purchasing power (at least as refers to natural products, as the manufactured products will constantly cheapen), nor as a coin, nor as a product; and I do not think, either, that its present condition can be bettered in a permanent manner by monetary congresses or international agreements. In case mining should prove unprofitable, and the product be diminished thereby, we might hope, considering the necessity of silver as an intermediary coin, for an advance in price; but this advance could never go beyond the level of a reasonable compensation for the labor employed, because otherwise, as soon as the phenomenon of large profits presents itself, the increase of the production would come, and moderate it by competition.

"Such are the eternal and unavoidable laws which govern the economic life of humanity."

Your affectionate friend,
Telesfero Garcia.

My reply was as follows:

My Dear Friend: On my return I find your valued favor of 7th inst., with your letter on "silver." I am struck and impressed by both your views on the political outlook in the former, and on silver in the latter. I must absolutely agree with you in all you say on the former topic, and am glad to report that the continuous speeches of Bryan are illustrating and demonstrating, to all who read them, what a shallow, unprincipled fellow he is. His appeals to the passions and prejudices of the mob shock every good citizen, and produce a silent if not a public avowal of enmity and a determination to vote against him. This feeling is so widespread already as to very much relieve the situation, and many of us do not hesitate even now to predict an overwhelming defeat to him. As to silver, all your propositions are incontrovertible, although I cannot accede to your conclusion, which, alas! would be death to silver and thus a catastrophe for the time being. It seems to me that every argument you use in reference to "silver" applies equally to "gold." And it occurs to me that to constitute that metal the one sole measure of value is to make the standard a variable one—certainly depending on the supply—liable to bring about every financial evil if the supply be largely diminished, and almost as great disturbance in the opposite direction if the world should be flooded with a great excess. The two metals seem to have operated to establish an equilibrium in this particular; perhaps I am wrong, but such has been my idea. Certain statisticians declare that our annual supply of gold now exceeds 200 millions. Well, that is barely sufficient to meet the present demand—in fact, absolute requirement—of the world for its annual increase of money. Positive facts show that from 1860 to 1890 the annual average sum added to the existing bulk of money in the world has been 200 millions of dollars. Just think of it! in thirty years, 1860–90, the bulk of money was doubled! In 1860 the accumulation of all the preceding ages of civilization was a little less than 6,000 millions of dollars. In 1890 there was 12,000 millions. A study of this most astounding fact leads one to a singular conclusion, which is that the progress of the world may be measured by the amount of new money required to be added to the existing volume; and that, applying this test, there has been as much real progress and advancement in the world in the last thirty years as has taken place during all the preceding ages of civilization.

From these facts I infer that no less than 200 millions per annum are required now to keep pace with the world's needs. Can this sum be supplied with gold as sole basis, remembering that the lowest estimate of the amount of gold required each year to supply the present demand of the arts and sciences and dentistry—and which increases yearly—is at least 60 millions per annum, and up to possibly 90 millions; take out whatever sum this may be, and this must be supplied by paper. The evident insufficiency of supply opens the door to monopoly of gold supplies and corners in gold, by which the locking up in a critical time of even a moderate quantity of gold would produce a panic and financial crisis. If this be so now, what will be the condition fifty years from now, when the time will have added at least 700 millions to the world's inhabitants, and to maintain an equal per capita sum would have required by that time the creation of at least 7,000 millions more money than now exists, and to maintain our present rate of progress double this amount, or 14,000 millions will need to be added. I cannot think that there are deposits of gold on the surface of the globe to afford any such sum. One is lost in discussing the subject. I have a strong feeling that some other resource must be devised as a basis for currency than gold, and I will in another letter give you my ideas.

Most sincerely,
Your affectionate A. F. H.

Gresham's Law

To the Editors of The Outlook:

A few months ago I subscribed for your valuable paper in order that I might have abundance of light and truth during the campaign. Will you kindly allow me to call your attention to a general error which you have made, in common with most writers and speakers who oppose independent free coinage? It is a thing as simple as the Gresham Law, and yet I have not seen it correctly stated, while the conclusions drawn from it are often false.

Cleveland's
Baking Powder
does the work just right
every time.

The law as commonly stated is that the cheaper coin will drive the dearer one out of circulation. From this it is implied that, under free coinage, silver will drive gold out of circulation and also out of the country. Now, this law works only when there is a redundancy of coin. It does not work to cause violent contraction. The tendency of contraction is to lift the cheaper coin up to the value of the dearer, and cause both to float together. The law properly stated should be: When there is a redundancy of coin, the cheaper will drive the dearer out of circulation. Under free coinage gold will not leave us by the action of the Gresham Law until enough silver is coined to cause a redundancy of coin. Free coinage will not, therefore, necessarily cause violent contraction. So important is this point that I hope you will make a note of it before the campaign closes.

R. E. B.

Chicopee, Mass.

The Precious Metals

To the Editors of The Outlook:

In The Outlook for October 17 "F. S. K." says that the production of the precious metals is not largely governed by the market price, and "that any increase in the production of the precious metals is largely dependent upon chance finds."

Is either statement correct? Gold is used for coinage, also for jewelry and ornamentation. A large part of the gold mined must be sold in the open market, but the market value of gold is such that the average person cannot afford to spend a great amount for gold ornaments. Hence the limited demand for gold, and, therefore, limited production.

With free coinage of silver there might be an unlimited amount of silver coined.

Every mine-owner in the United States would work his mine for all there was in it if there were a market in this country for every ounce of silver it contained.

When the United States Government had taken the silver bullion and coined it into dollars, those dollars would go back into the mine-owner's own capacious pocket to spend how and where he pleased, in this country or abroad, as he pleased. Perhaps he would go to some South American silver country with which the silverites are anxious to increase our trade, and buy another silver mine—one of the inex-

Votes

Have been cast by thousands of sufferers from impure blood, and their verdict has settled the question of the great curative power of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Every mail car brings in these letters of praise for Hood's Sarsaparilla. They tell the same wonderful story of health restored, pain and suffering relieved, and happiness brought back. They prove

Hood's
Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

Hood's Pills cure all Liver Ills and Sick Headache. 25c.

haustible mines of the Andes, for instance. Then he would bring more silver bullion to the United States to coin. Those dollars would also belong to him. He might possibly spend a few in this country, so as to say he was increasing the amount of silver money in use in this country. By and by he would be rich enough to exchange his silver for half its weight in gold, or less by that time, and go to the gold countries of Europe and end his days in luxurious ease.

An extreme case? Possibly. Meanwhile our silver dollars would be worth the weight of the silver that was in them, fifty-three cents or less, according to the market value of silver for the world. We laboring people would have to work just as hard as we do now for our $1 or $2 a day, but the hard-earned dollars would be worth only the silver that was in them. Why will a United States silver dollar or silver certificate buy 100 cents' worth to-day? Because it has a gold dollar behind it. Take your United States silver dollar to Mexico. Buy a dollar's worth of goods. You will get your dollar's worth of goods—what the Mexican shopkeeper calls a dollar's worth, of course—and a Mexican silver dollar in change. Because a United States dollar is worth two of the Mexican, and the Mexican dollar you would get in change would have more silver in it than the United States dollar you took with you. So much for our gold standard at present.

And, after all, how does helping the mine-owner help the farmer? We hear a great deal about helping the farmer and the poor laboring man, but how is free coinage of silver going to do it? How is the money to reach the farmer? If the United States Government offered to buy all the wheat the farmers would raise, every farmer would plant every square inch of his land in wheat, and we should hear no more of abandoned farms. Then the farmers and laboring people and everybody else would be benefited, and we should all be sure of cheap bread, though perhaps not much else in the way of cheap food. Similar to the other case? Yes, but a farm is a small thing compared to a silver-mine, and the farmer would be likely to spend his money in this country. But is not one plan as sensible as the other?

Some people say "with free coinage there will be more money, and we'll all get some of it." That reminds me of a picture that I saw the other day. A farmer from a very rural district has ridden into town to interview the station agent. He says, "If Bryan gets elected we'll have free silver, won't we?" "Yes." "Well, when you get the free silver, will you send it out to us, or shall we come in after it?"

We should all have to work for our money, and the farmer and grocer and shoemaker would give us fifty cents' worth of their goods for fifty cents' worth of silver even if that fifty cents' worth of silver were marked one dollar. Wheat and manufactured goods have a value in the market of the world, as well as silver, and the farmer and manufacturer would want the market price. "A man is known by the company he keeps" applies to intelligence as well as to morals, and we, as the United States of America, want to be with the best company we can find in the world.

If the greatest countries of the world and the best financiers of our own country approve of a gold standard, why should we wish to rank ourselves with Mexico and China

Isn't China spoken of in the geographies as half-civilized? G. W. S.

Highlandville, Mass.

The Power of Free Coinage to Restore the Parity

To the Editors of The Outlook:

In your issue of the 17th inst., "F. S. K." states that after the adoption of free coinage we should have the six hundred millions of gold now supposed to be in this country "thrown upon the markets of the world, and a demand created for at least enough silver to coin an equal amount." (The italics are mine.) This seems to be a singular misconception; there is no evidence that there would be any such demand. The United States Government now holds over four hundred millions of silver idle in its vaults. This quantity would be at once available. Last year's production of silver was upwards of two hundred millions of dollars, and with free coinage of silver in this country the production would probably increase largely.

These facts, I think, completely upset "F. S. K.'s" theory of a short supply of silver to be caused by the advance of gold to a premium. On the other hand, as you point out in an article in the same number of your paper on the Transvaal gold fields, there is every prospect of a very large and very steady increase in the supply of gold, which will tend to equalize the value of the two metals.

In view of this immediate increase of the gold supply of the world, it seems the height of folly to debase our currency and incur all the dangers which must follow such a course. O. E. E.

Blowing Rock, N. C.

Respectfully referred to The Outlook of October 10

To the Editors of The Outlook:

In your paper dated May 4, 1895, page 721, in reply to Secretary Morton's statement as to the cause of falling price of silver, you show by table that it was not due to its increased production. In summing up the article you say, the relative depreciation of silver since 1873 (and especially since 1893) is entirely due to legislation, decreasing the demand for silver and increasing the demand for gold. The relative value which legislation clearly destroyed, legislation can as clearly restore. This is just what the silverites are claiming now, and you are at this time giving your aid to McKinley. Please give your answer, through the columns of The Outlook, why this change of front. J. W. F.

Fairlawn, O.

An Office-Holding Aristocracy

To the Editors of The Outlook:

Will you have the fairness to publish a protest against your recent editorial on "Civil Service Reform" as an issue in the present political campaign?

I have read and re-read the Democratic plank on this subject, and am utterly unable to find in it any justification of your statement that it is an attack upon our civil service system, and the still more astounding and sweeping assertion that "there is small reason to doubt that if Mr. Bryan is elected our whole system of civil service would be swept away." I am not writing as a silverite—I have no affiliations with the party—but as a governmental employee, appointed under civil service, and a long-time reader of The Outlook, anxious to keep his respect for and confidence in the fairness of that paper.

The Democratic plank declares for "appointments based on merit" and "equal opportunities for all citizens of ascertained fitness." You characterize these statements as "vague" and "shadowy." I have never seen anything from either party clearer or more reassuring. Will you justify your adjectives?

It also objects to life terms and declares for "fixed terms of office."

This is a new departure, and fit subject of criticism and discussion.

At sight it might seem to invite the evils of the spoils system; but, as a result of some two years' experience of the inevitable working of our present laws, I wish to say to you that I think no more useful amendment to our civil service could be made than a fixed term of office—in other words, periodical re-examinations to test continued fitness.

It is notorious that our Government pays higher salaries for less work than competing employers. The idea that the Government should lead in liberality toward labor, the pensioning sentiment, and, most of all, the personal touch of office-holders themselves with the Government, secures this, and their combined influence is massed against all reform that imperils their positions. A reform department chief finds as a result of all this a low standard of work as compared with the outside business he has been managing. Where there is a flagrant violation of rules or exceptional incompetence discharge is easily effected, but this very fact of a low average makes it well-nigh impossible to single out and dismiss enough to revitalize the service. You would regard such wholesale removal of men selected and serving without complaint for years under civil service as a violation of the spirit, if not the letter, of the law, and yet it is the easiest way of renovating the service, of removing the rust and sloth and decrepitude and rutism that mark the average old Government employee and debase the service.

Furthermore, so long as Government employees get more pay for work than the average, the many will be taxed for the benefit of the few, and the "outs," the many, will legitimately protest against such favoritism. This I understand the Bryan party to do more from the logic of the situation than from the phraseology of their declaration, but this is no part of true civil service, but its abuse.

Are you not governed by preconceptions and do you not confuse all suggestions of reform with the desire for "spoils"? OFFICE-HOLDER.

Free Silver Coinage Moral and Wise

To the Editors of The Outlook:

Will you permit a few questions from one who finds neither his judgment nor his conscience satisfied with the outcome of your discussion of the political issues in The Outlook of October 10? As is usual with The Outlook, you have made all those who are compelled to differ with you in your final conclusions your debtors for the fairness with which you state the underlying facts and principles in the opening of your article. Your spirit of candor and fairness has carried great weight, and has made us desirous of agreeing with your conclusions. Unable to do that, I am sure that your courtesy will welcome questions designed to show why I feel constrained to doubt the assurance you would have us feel in your conclusions.

1 First, as to the morals of the free coinage of silver. The moral objections to free coinage you say are more serious than the economic objections. The first question I ask is, Cannot your two principles for guidance in times of moral perplexity be turned against your own cause? You say it is rarely wise to do to another what he thinks unjust. I do not know what stronger argument you could put into the hands of the advocates of free coinage. Do you know how strong is the sense of injustice that has been rankling in the hearts of tens of thousands for years? It is this very sense of injustice which has given this movement its mighty impetus and is to-day making it almost resistless in its momentum. Nor is it satisfied in directing itself against a wrong inflicted by a former generation. I am convinced that the crime of '73, as the crime of '73, has never taken very strong hold of the general conviction of the people. They are rather content to let that go with Professor Francis A. Walker's characterization of it as one of the greatest political blunders to be found upon the pages of history. But it is the injustice of the maintenance of the gold standard in the light of the present facts that arouses this sense of outraged justice. It is a present wrong, persisted in in the face of long-continued and unheeded protests.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., New York.

Important Announcement

In order to relieve the crowded conditions which prevail during the Fall months at their principal establishment, Broadway and Nineteenth St., the Gorham Company have opened, and until January 1st will conduct, a temporary branch

Corner Fifth Ave. and Twenty-sixth St.

where a representative line of Gorham Sterling Silver Ware will be offered for inspection, thereby affording customers ample opportunity to examine goods at their leisure and convenience.

Gorham Mfg. Co.

Silversmiths

that has so stirred up the feelings of the West and South. So over against your first principle we may place this second: It is equally rarely morally wise to continue to do to another what he thinks unjust. This compels the weighing of wrong against wrong. Which course involves the greater injustice? Which injustice is perpetrated under the least excusable circumstances? Which victim of the wrong, admitting both courses to involve wrong, is best able to endure its hardships? If I read aright the messages of all God's prophets, it is that injustice takes on a special turpitude when it is inflicted upon the poor or the defenseless. Now, is not this battle of the gold standard the battle of the strong against the weak; if you please, of the wise against the unwise? Are not our ears almost constantly assaulted with the charge that this is the battle of the poor against the well-to-do? of the proletariat against the property-owner, according to Archbishop Ireland?

Alongside of your second principle may not this one also be placed: It is never morally right voluntarily to continue upon a course of action as to the justice of which the actor is himself in doubt? It would seem that in view of the widespread ills resulting from the gold standard—evils not problematical, not lying in the future, and uncertain ever to occur, but evils now for a long time present, with us to-day, and therefore not dependent on any man's infallibility as a prophet, evils which have already entailed untold suffering and loss—it would seem that in view of this fact there ought to be awakened some compunctions of conscience and some misgivings of wisdom on the part of those who are endeavoring to force the continuance of the gold standard. Is not the Nation equally uncertain as to the moral merits of the gold standard as to those of free coinage? And if that uncertainty is fatal to the one course, should it not be equally fatal to the other? If a nation may not enter upon an experiment which a large proportion of its people regard as immoral or even of doubtful morality, then how may it continue upon such a course after its results have clearly indicated its immoral character? Let it not be forgotten that there are two consciences here; and if one will be outraged by being made a party to free coinage, the other will be equally outraged by being still held a party to the gold standard. If on the one hand there is a question of honesty, on the other there is a question of righteousness. How far are we required, how far are we justified, to entail this suffering and loss upon the innocent, in order to continue to pay our creditors in gold? I fail to see that the question of repudiation has place in the discussion. Silver and gold have been the world's money for thousands of years. This Nation, with a few others, was foolish enough to abandon silver. Wisdom and sound economics dictate its restoration. Any sacrifice involved therein must be accepted as a part of the price of the common folly. If it be said that others ought not to be required to pay the price of our folly, the answer is that all knew alike that we were embarked upon this untried experiment, that no guarantee was given to any that it would be continued should it prove disastrous, and, therefore, all investors took the risk of its abandonment.

By what consideration are we compelled to continue this costly experiment? No political jugglery is able longer to hide its folly, nor will be able much longer to hide its iniquity.

Much is made of the fact that our return to silver is to be an experiment. To me it is an exact reversal of the facts. It is monometallism that is the experiment, as Professor Walker has so well said. It cannot even longer claim the shelter of a doubt. Twenty-three years have already weighed it in the balances and found it wanting.

Speaking now upon the economic side of the question, it does not seem to me that you have done justice to Mr. Bryan's argument. Unintentionally, I am sure, you have done injustice to the argument for free silver. Its proposition, varying your statement a little, would be: "The gold standard is proving a disastrous experiment; it is safe to abandon an experiment when its disastrous character has been clearly shown." Now, the argument by which this proposition is maintained was left out of sight in your discussion. For it you substituted Mr. Bryan's "firm conviction." Instead of the firm conviction, it would have been better to have given the argument upon which that firm conviction is based. It is available in the free-coinage literature, and especially in the writings of St. John, Harvey, President Andrews, and in these latter weeks in the testimony of the leading European bimetallists, of whose recent change of front nothing is said in your article—an omission which seemed to me very remarkable, considering its weighty bearing on the question under discussion. I know nothing in the recent literature of this subject quite so important. Their common note is that if the present deadlock is to be broken, it is to be by some strong and independent nation taking the lead. And in this crisis they turn their eyes hopefully toward the United States.

Sanguine must he be who hopes that the return to silver, however accomplished, is to produce "nothing but beneficial results." It is only by contrasting the possible dangers of that return, even by the United States alone, with not only the present evils of the gold standard but those also which loom portentously in the future, that we are encouraged to venture the hazard. If "monometallism only half born" has wrought such havoc, what must be expected from the full-born child! Instant strangulation would seem to be in order! I admit the danger of precipitancy. But is there no danger in delay? May we not be losing a glorious opportunity? You surely are not insensible to the deep purpose behind the St. Louis platform. to fasten the gold standard upon this country? If it rested with Mr. McKinley alone, it might be different. But will not those who have forced him upon that platform, rather the platform upon him, and who will elect him, if he is elected, control to a large degree, in spite of his efforts, the course of his administration? It is because we see this set purpose in those who are chiefly fighting Mr. McKinley's battles that we fear the results of his election. It is on this account, too, that we are willing to risk some perils which many good people are now so ready to threaten upon the election of Mr. Bryan. I am confident that it is easy to exaggerate those perils. Many selfish and unpatriotic influences are conspiring to do so. Corporate greed shrinks from seeing Mr. Bryan in the Presidential chair, and with good reason. For this reason it has not hesitated to magnify the dangers of free coinage. Looking at the industrial progress of Mexico for the last ten years as compared with our own, I cannot bring myself to feel that even the threatened silver basis for this country, temporarily at least, would be such an unmixed and dreadful calamity. I prefer to reason from facts I know, rather than from those I conjecture. Nor can I see how gold, as it begins to decline, as it must in regard to commodities, even though it go to a considerable premium over silver, is going to go into hiding. Men do not hoard depreciating money, but money that is appreciating. If property begins to appreciate, will not gold seek investment in order to profit by the rise, instead of hiding and suffering the loss of its own decline? If a general enforcement of debt-payment is undertaken, will not the creditor lose more thereby in the long run than the debtor? On the whole, it seems to me that we are not yet half-way across the river to the safe ground of monometallism on the other side, if indeed there be such safe ground. There is deeper water before us than we have yet passed through. It is easier to turn back than to keep on. It is also safer; for we know both the water and the ground behind us, while we know neither before. The real experiment is not in going back, but in keeping on. President Andrews agrees with Professor Walker that the waters are not half passed through, and are deeper ahead than behind. Under the circumstances I cannot feel that it is safe to put those in command whose real purpose, whatever their words may be, is to keep up the forward march.

With only the highest appreciation for both the ability as well as the candor and fairness of your article, I am yet impelled to send you this protest.

San Miguel, Cal. T. W. D L.

[For other Correspondence see following pages]

YOU CAN GET MONEY IF YOU WANT IT

$5, $10, $25, $100, $500 or even $1000. There is $11,500 which THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL has set aside soon to distribute among 440 people. Do you want some of it? You cannot exactly get it for the asking, but it is almost as easy. Write to

The Ladies' Home Journal
Philadelphia

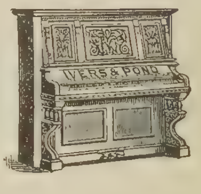
AN ESSENTIAL IN ALL HOMES.

13 Millions Made and Sold.

Always improving.
Never better than now.
See the Latest Model.

The SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

A PIANO BY MAIL.



You can buy an IVERS & POND Piano just as cheaply, as safely, and as satisfactorily of us by mail as in person at our warerooms. How? Write and we'll tell you.

We send our pianos on trial at our expense to any part of the United States where they are not sold by a local dealer. Send us a postal card and receive FREE our CATALOGUE and prices for cash and on EASY PAYMENTS.

If you want a Piano, a postal card may save you $75 to $100. Send it to-day.

Ivers & Pond Piano Co.,
114 Boylston Street, Boston.

SAVE ½ YOUR FUEL

By using our (stove pipe) RADIATOR. With its 120 Cross Tubes, ONE stove or furnace does the work of TWO. Drop postal for proofs from prominent men.

TO INTRODUCE OUR RADIATOR, the first order from each neighborhood filled at WHOLESALE price, and secures an agency. Write at once.

ROCHESTER RADIATOR COMPANY,
39 Furnace St., ROCHESTER, N. Y.

To the Goddess of Comfort

(Whoever she may be)

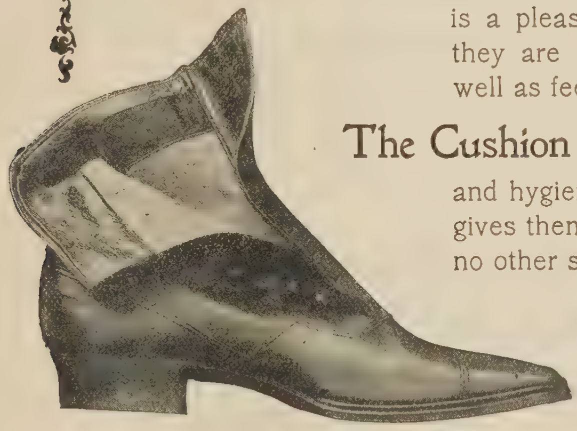
We Dedicate These Shoes

Comfort

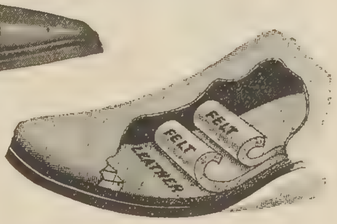
is a pleasant word, and it fits well the shoes, for they are pleasant to wear, in regard to looks as well as feelings.

The Cushion Sole

and hygienic wool lining contained in these shoes gives them such cold and wet defying properties as no other shoes have.



STYLE 1065.—Women's Button Shoe. Dull kangaroo top; foot of plump, bright dongola. Has cushion sole and hygienic wool lining. An unusually dressy, comfortable shoe.



The Cushion Sole is made by sewing to an inner sole of felt a second felt sole, and to both an outer sole of leather. Damp and cold proof.

STYLE 911.—Men's Storm Calf Lace Shoe. Made of specially tanned leather. Has cushion sole and hygienic wool lining. Absolutely storm, wet or cold proof. A perfect shoe. $6.

The . . . Alfred Dolge Felt Shoes and Slippers

Made in a great variety of styles (58), of which these are two. They embrace all that is good in winter foot wear.

"On a Felt Footing," an interesting booklet, tells the story of how, when and why they are made. We are glad to send it, free.

DANIEL GREEN & CO.
119 and 121 W. 23d St.
New York

A CHANCE FOR SOMEBODY. The makers of the Alfred Dolge Cushion Sole shoes want a dependable party in every town as a selling representative, on commission. It's easy to get enthusiastic praises from the people in the town who have worn these shoes, and consequently it becomes a simple matter to sell to those who have not. Write, with references, to the above.

Bits of Fun

"There is poetry in everything," mused the editor. "Now there is yonder waste-basket." And he laughed, as he sometimes did when he was all alone.—Detroit Tribune.

She—I think your young friend is entitled to great credit for the way he is doing. He—Yes, and the fellow gets it. He owes more than he can ever pay.—Detroit Free Press.

An old lady lauding up the Thames scenery said to Whistler: "The whole trip along the river was like a series of your superb etchings." "Yees," he replied, "nature is creeping up." —McClure's Magazine.

Mamma—How cruel, Eleanor, to hurt the poor little worm! Eleanor—But he looked so lonesome, mamma, an' I jus' cut him in two so's he'd have company, an' the two of him wiggled off together jus' ever so happy.—Life.

"John," she said, rather sternly, "the coal-bin is empty." "Yes," was the disconsolate reply, "it's that way the most of the time. It's never of use in an immediate emergency. I'm going to change its name, and call it the 'coal has been.'"—Christian Work.

Streeter—I don't understand how you can be so engrossed in religious work. Kirke—I suppose it depends in large measure upon association. There are people who are interested in golfing, for instance. Streeter—Oh, that's different.—Boston Transcript.

Like Beavers.—Tommy—Paw, what does it mean in the paper when it says that the leaders of a party are working like beavers? Mr. Figg—It might mean they are saying nothing and sawing wood, but it usually means they have begun throwing mud.—Indianapolis Journal.

"I presume," remarked the tourist, "the amazons have a war cry?" The King of Dahomey inclined his head affirmatively. "Yes," he answered; "that is to say, they use substantially the same cry in war that they use when they want a new dress. Yes. Effective? Say!"—Detroit Tribune.

A Scotch visitor to the Carlyles in Cheyne Row was much struck with the sound-proof room which the sage had contrived for himself in the attic, lighted from the top, and where no sight or sound from outside could penetrate. "My certes, this is fine," cried the old friend, with unconscious sarcasm. "Here ye may write and study all the rest of your life, and no human being be one bit the wiser."—Household Words.

A certain rector in a Suffolk village who was disliked in the parish had a curate who was very popular, and on his leaving was presented with a testimonial. This excited the envy and wrath of the rector, and, meeting with an old lady one day, he said: "I am surprised, Mrs. Bloom, that you should have subscribed to this testimonial." "Why, sir," said the old lady, "if you'd bin a-going I'd 'ave subscribed double."—Tit-Bits.

A rich man of this city gave a chestnut party. Chestnut parties are quite the rage just now. They are easily planned and carried out. About the only necessity is chestnuts. That's where the rich man stumbled. The chestnut supply at the point he had selected for the party was scarce. There was a splendid tree, but its crop was light. Wealth is the true father of expedients. The rich man bought a generous supply of chestnuts and sent them out to be carefully scattered beneath the tree. When the party arrived at the nutting ground, lo! the tree had been shaken, and there on the ground lay the remarkably generous supply of nuts. The business of gathering them went merrily forward, when, all of a sudden, one of the older members of the party picked up a fallen leaf and looked at it suspiciously. Then she glanced up at the tree above her. "Isn't it strange?" she said. "Isn't what strange?" asked the rich man. "That all these chestnuts should grow on an oak tree." And it was oak, sure enough. — Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Laughing Babies

are loved by everybody. Those raised on the Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk are comparatively free from sickness. Infant Health is a valuable pamphlet for mothers. Send your address for a copy to the New York Condensed Milk Company, New York.

HOME . . PORTRAITURE,

Views of the snowy landscape, with its leafless trees and fields of glistening ice, and flashlight pictures of congenial friends gathered about the warm fireside in the long winter evenings, all add to the charms of amateur photography.

It's easy, too, with our Film cartridge cameras. They load in daylight, have fine achromatic lenses, improved rotary shutters, set of three stops, and are beautifully finished. Booklet Free.

KEEP THEM IN MIND FOR CHRISTMAS.

Pocket Kodaks, Bullets, Bulls-Eyes. $5.00 to $15.00.

EASTMAN KODAK CO.
Rochester, N. Y.

What it saves: The teeth—from decay. The gums—from softening. The breath—from impurity. The pocket—money.

Sozodont FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH.

A sample of liquid Sozodont by mail, provided you mention this publication and send three cents for postage. Address the Proprietors of Sozodont, HALL & RUCKEL, Wholesale Druggists, New York City

Trigestia

Combines the remedies which, above all others, are invaluable in the treatment of the various forms of digestive disorders. The Pepsin used is concentrated and of the highest digestive power. The Bismuth is the purest the market affords. The Nux Vomica is the best English extract. The efficacy of this combination lies in its triple effect—that of the actual solvent action of the Pepsin on all articles of food—the prevention of fermentation and formation of gases by the Bismuth, and the stimulant effect of the Nux Vomica (undoubtedly the best known tonic for nervous dyspepsia) on the secretion of the digestive fluids.

A Remedy for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Headache, Heartburn, and Sour Stomach

WILL RESTORE ROSY CHEEKS, ELASTIC STEP, AND HAPPY SPIRITS

Price, 25 and 50 Cents per Bottle, postpaid

A. J. DITMAN, Chemist, - 2 Barclay Street, NEW YORK

All mothers know just how disagreeable rubber nipples are.

Just think how sweet and healthful a Silver Nipple might be. We make one — we believe it perfect.

Providence Lying-In Hospital, 96 State St.,
Providence, R. I. June 5, 1896.

Dear Sirs: The King Silver Nipple has been in constant use in the Providence Lying-In Hospital for more than two years. We consider it superior to any other nipple ever used by us. It is non-collapsible, non-absorbitive, is easily cleaned, and does not irritate the mouth. We have no hesitation in recommending the Silver Nipple for general use. Respectfully, MISS A. B PIKE, Matron.

We will send the King Nipple, made of sterling silver, to any mother for $1.00; after using it 30 days she may return it to us and get her dollar back if she wants to. Our references — any bank in Providence.

HALL & LYON,
237 Westminister Street, Providence, R. I.

Van Camp's Boston Baked Pork and Beans

Prepared with tomato sauce. Ever ready, palatable hot or cold.

Choicest beans, juicy meat. Three sizes.

Send 6c for sample can.

VAN CAMP PACKING CO.,
Indianapolis, Ind.

Send for booklet; postal card will do.

Liebig
Company's Extract of Beef

is the essence of all that is best in beef. Only the best parts of the best cattle, raised by the company on their own grazing fields in Uruguay, are used. That's why it is the best, and for over thirty years unapproached for purity and fine flavor.

For improved and economic Cookery
For refreshing, nourishing Beef Tea

Food for the Baby

If mother can't nourish it; if it is pale and thin, try

Somatose

Mother's Milk.

Somatose is a powder made from the most nourishing elements of meat, and used in proper proportion with sterilized milk forms the best substitute known for mother's milk. Send for formula, mailed free.

At druggists, in 2-oz', ¼, ½ and 1 lb. tins.

Also the following combinations, Somatose-Biscuit, Somatose-Cocoa, Somatose-Chocolate — each containing 10 per cent. Somatose. Very convenient and palatable preparations.

Pamphlets mailed by Schieffelin & Co., New York, agents for Farbenfabriken vorm. Friedr. Bayer & Co., Elberfeld.

Cash for Cameras Commands the Prize in Price

Money talks with us, and Photographic supplies of all sorts, grades and sizes have quick transit through our store, because we sell at lowest market prices for cash.

The Scovill & Adams Co., of New York
Nos. 60 and 62 East 11th St.
(Five doors from B'way)

Send 35 cents for a sample number of The Photographic Times, containing about 100 handsome photographic illustrations.

TRADE MARK REGISTERED.
DIABETES FLOUR

The result of years of endeavor to produce a palatable Bread Flour which can be safely offered to the Diabetic. The testimony to its value, both from this country and abroad is remarkable and convincing Unrivalled in America or Europe.

PAMPHLET AND SAMPLE FREE.
Write to Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N. Y., U S.A.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR 25 CTS.
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.
CONSUMPTION

About People

—Herr Krupp has dismissed all foreign workmen and officers, on the ground that they might betray his methods of gunmaking to foreign governments.

—The latest journals from Naples assert, upon what they say is the highest authority, that Verdi has given up his work on the opera "King Lear," and that for many reasons he will leave it a posthumous and unfinished achievement. The papers add that the master is putting the finishing touches to an oratorio to be sung by large choral masses; it is said to be in the style of the "Elijah" of Mendelssohn.

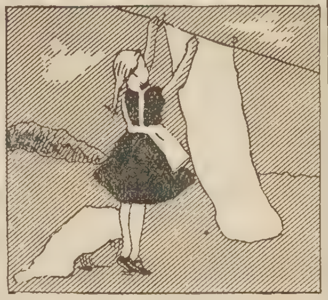
—The Lord Mayor-elect of London is Mr. Alderman George Faudel Phillips, a son of Sir Benjamin Phillips, who was chief magistrate of London in 1865. This is the only instance of father and son having been Lord Mayors. Mr. Phillips is a Hebrew and a millionaire merchant. His wife is the sister of Sir Edward Lawson, the owner of the London "Daily Telegraph."

—The Vermont Legislature has just reelected as United States Senator Justin S. Morrill, who thus attains a distinction reached by no other man in the history of this country. He has now been chosen to the Senate for six consecutive terms of six years each. Only one other man has ever been so continuously in public life in Washington—Senator Sherman. Both men entered the House together, and since 1867 have been colleagues in the Senate except during the four years when Mr. Sherman was Secretary of the Treasury.

—We recently published a note relating to the manner of signature of English bishops. Since then the following has come under our observation. Mr. C. J. London, the well-known horticulturist (whose handwriting was notoriously bad), once wrote to the old Duke of Wellington, asking permission to inspect his Walmer beeches—the beech avenue at Walmer Castle being famous. "Bless me!" said the Duke, "I wonder what the Bishop of London wants with my Waterloo breeches." However, with military promptitude, he rang for Constant, his valet, and ordered him to take those articles to the Bishop of London. Stupefaction of the Bishop!

—William Adams Richardson, Chief Justice of the Court of Claims at Washington, who has just died, was an Overseer of Harvard University, and also at one time lecturer and professor in the Georgetown Law School. Years ago, when practicing in Massachusetts, he was appointed to revise the statutes of that State, and soon after was chosen by the Legislature to edit the annual supplements to the general statutes, a duty which he continued to perform during twenty-two years. In 1869 he became Assistant Secretary of the United States Treasury, and in 1871 went to Europe as financial agent of our Government to negotiate the sale of the United States funded loan. In 1873 he became Secretary of the Treasury, but the next year resigned his position in order to accept a seat on the bench of the United States Court of Claims.

—The Chicago "Times-Herald" tells this story about Sir Walter Besant: "One day in midsummer, while the World's Fair Auxiliary Congress of Authors was in session, the Art Institute became as hot as an oven, and Walter Besant—the English novelist, now Sir Walter—nudged one of the managers of the Congress, while some one was reading a tiresome paper, and whispered: 'I say, my man, can't we slip out of here and get a breath of air and a little something cool to drink?' The great and good man thus addressed readily assented, and piloted the Englishman across Michigan Avenue into a drug-store and against a soda-fountain. 'What will you have, Mr. Besant?' he inquired, waving his hand toward the fountain. 'Gimme a pint of 'alf and 'alf.' promptly responded the novelist. The embarrassed pilot gasped, and explained that no 'strong' drinks could be bought there. Mr. Besant calmly adjusted his eyeglasses, looked the marble outfit over quizzically, and ejaculated: "It's one of those blarsted American fizzing machines! All right, sir; go ahead; do you choose for me. Pick out whatever you consider least dangerous.'"



Begin Work Early
if you want to, but you won't have to work late anyway, if you use

Sunlight
Soap

because it washes clothes quickly. Try Sunlight Soap next wash day and you will know what easy washing means.

Less Labor
Greater Comfort.

Lever Bros., Ltd.,
Hudson & Harrison
Sts., New York.

Christmas Music

THE DUTCH DOLL By H. Butterworth and J. R. Murray. A fascinating and easily prepared Christmas Merriment; also adapted for representation at any time during the Holidays. The idea is unique and has proven immensely successful. Price 30 cents per copy.

THY LIGHT IS COME By B. A. Stone. A new and exceptionally interesting Christmas Service of songs and responsive readings. Price 5 cents a single copy.

CHRISTMAS SELECTIONS of various years. Price 5c. per copy.

THE STAR OF LIGHT A Christmas Cantata for adults. The last work of this kind by the late Dr. Geo. F. Root. Price 40 cents.

SOME SUCCESSFUL CANTATAS FOR X-MAS.

The Palace of Santa Claus, Dorothy's Dream, Santa Claus' Mission, A Jolly Christmas, Santa Claus & Co., A Christmas Vision, Santa Claus' Mistake, The New Santa Claus, Etc. Price of each Cantata 30 cents per single copy.

EXAMINE THESE ALSO.

THE CALENDAR OF THE DAYS A very pleasing entertainment suitable for the Holiday season. Prepared by Kate W. Hamilton. Price 25 cents.

BETHLEHEM By Frederic Weatherly and Geo. F. Root. This is a superb Christmas Cantata for adults only. 50 cents a copy.

ANTHEMS Especially designed for Christmas use will be in the Supplement to the Musical Visitor for December. Price of "Musical Visitor" 15 cents.

A CATALOGUE of Christmas Music of every description for use in the Church, Sunday School or Home Circle, will be sent to any address on application.

THE JOHN CHURCH CO.
CINCINNATI. NEW YORK. CHICAGO

PROF. A. LOISETTE'S
World Famed
ASSIMILATIVE MEMORY SYSTEM,

Endorsed by Educators, Scientific, Professional and Business Men all over the world. Abridged from six books to one. Handsomely bound, with portrait and autograph. Price $2.50 American, 10s. 6d. English. Prospectus and testimonials sent FREE. Address, A. Loisette, 237 Fifth Ave., New York, or 200 Regent St., London, Eng.

YOU NEED
"MILLER" LAMPS to read by.

The Light is Better than gas or electric.
BEAUTIFUL–CHEAP

A Thousand styles for lighting House, Store, Church, etc. No other Lamp so Satisfactory in Use. Every lamp guaranteed. See them, if not at your dealers, come to our store or order by mail. We also make Fine Brass and Onyx Tables.

MILLER Bicycle Lanterns are THE BEST.

EDWARD MILLER & CO. { Manufacturers. Established 1844.
28 and 30 West Broadway, New York.
☞ For cool weather buy a "Miller" oil heater.

Cloud of Witnesses No. 2.

We expect you to believe these people. When the first "Cloud of Witnesses" was published, thousands upon thousands of replies demonstrated that sufferers from Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis and Colds were reasonable persons and open to conviction. Are you open to conviction? We know that Hyomei, the new and wonderful Australian "Dry-Air" treatment, comprised in

Booth's "Hyomei" Pocket Inhaler Outfit, by mail, $1.00, relieves 99 out of every 100 people who try it, and cures 99 out of every 100 who use it conscientiously and according to directions. Here are the indorsements of living men and women whom you must believe. The letters on their face have the stamp of sincerity as well as gratitude.

Bronchitis.

New York, Aug. 26, 1896.

My Dear Sir: I am very loath as a minister to give an endorsement to a patented article, but I feel it but just to you to say that I have used your Hyomei for Bronchitis with perfect success. I had a chronic cold last winter which stubbornly resisted every remedy for seven weeks. Your Hyomei gave me relief in one day, and enabled me to fill all my subsequent lecture dates with satisfaction.

(Rev.) Thomas Dixon, Jr.,
Pastor People's Church.

Clifton Forge, Va.,
May 14, 1896.

Dear Sir: The patient for whom I ordered Booth's Hyomei Pocket Inhaler, and who was suffering from Purulent Bronchitis, expectorating large quantities of purulent, offensive sputum, made a perfect recovery, and is now a healthy, robust young man.

R. S. Wiley, M.D.

Catarrh.

Newry, S. C., Aug. 12, 1896.

Dear Sir: I have used your Pocket Inhaler for Catarrh of the head and throat, and it has benefitted me wonderfully. I think there is nothing that equals it. I believe it is all that you claim it to be. I can highly recommend it to any one suffering from any kind of Catarrh.

W. W. Veal.

Colds.

Lyceum Theatre,
London, Sept. 6, 1896.

Dear Sir: It is quite true that I am using the Hyomei Pocket Inhaler and I have the greatest pleasure in strongly recommending it.

Faithfully yours, Henry Irving.

Asthma.

New Haven, Conn., May 5, 1896.

I have given Hyomei a thorough test during the past winter, consequently I have been able to go to bed and sleep without being disturbed by my old enemy, Asthma. Hyomei should be in every home in the land.

L. A. Kimberley,
P. O. Box 1102.

Catarrhal Deafness.

23 Marshall St.,
Hartford, Conn., May 1, 1896.

I am doing wonders in the way of relieving cases of Catarrhal Deafness with your Hyomei. I have also cured several cases of throat troubles caused by Catarrh, which their physicians failed to relieve. The Sealer of Weights and Measures had a sore throat most of the time, caused by chemicals which he used. I cured his throat and he has been the means of selling about 20 Outfits.

J. B. Stone.

La Grippe.

The author of the $1,000 prize story "Titus" says:

Staten Island, March 6, 1896.

I have used Booth's Hyomei Pocket Inhaler in my family and find it invaluable as a preventive of Grippe, to break up colds, etc. I have used it to alleviate the painful cough and soreness resulting from measles with perfect success.

Florence M. Kingsley.

Hyomei is a purely vegetable antiseptic, and destroys the germs which cause disease in the respiratory organs. The air, charged with Hyomei, is inhaled at the mouth, and, after premeating the minutest air-cells, is exhaled through the nose. It is aromatic, delightful to inhale, and gives immediate relief. It is highly recommended by physcians, clergymen, public speakers, and thousands who have been helped and cured.

Pocket Inhaler Outfit, Complete by Mail, $1.00, to any part of the United States; for foreign countries, add $1.00 postage; outfit consists of pocket inhaler, made of deodorized hard rubber, a bottle of Hyomei, a dropper, and full directions for using. If you are still skeptical, send your address; my pamphlet shall prove that Hyomei cures. Are you open to conviction? Extra bottles of Hyomei inhalant by mail, or at druggists, 50 cents. Hyomei Balm, for all skin diseases, by mail, 25 cents. Your druggist has Hyomei or can get it for you if you insist. Don't accept a substitute.

London Office:
11 Farringdon Ave., E. C.

R. T. BOOTH, 23 East 20th St., New York.

EDUCATIONAL

New York City

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established 1855. 3 East 14th St., N. Y.

The Misses Ely's School for Girls
RIVERSIDE DRIVE
85th and 86th Streets, New York

TWENTY-FIFTH YEAR OF
MISS GIBBONS' SCHOOL
New York City, 55 West 47th St. Mrs. SARAH H. EMERSON, Principal. Primary and Advanced Classes. Preparation for all Colleges. A few boarding scholars taken. Reopens Sept. 30, 1896.

Teachers College Department of Domestic Science and Art.—Prepares (a) teachers of cooking and sewing in elementary and secondary grades; (b) directors of domestic science and art in manual training and industrial schools. Candidates must have had a full high school course, and college training is desirable. Send for circular of information and Bulletin.
WALTER L. HERVEY, President.

Misses Whitfield and Bliss Boarding and Day School for Girls, 41 West 124th Street, Mount Morris Park, New York City. Reopens October 1st.

California

POMONA COLLEGE, Claremont, Cal.—Full College courses leading to degrees of B.A., B.L., B.S. Degrees recognized by University of California and other similar graduate schools. Thirty-five miles from Los Angeles. An Academic course. Preparatory school preparing for all institutions connected with the College. Address C. G. BALDWIN, President.

Connecticut

Brookfield Center, Fairfield Co., Conn.
The Curtis School for Young Boys
A strong life in school and out, full of normal activities and healthy conditions. A clean moral atmosphere, a loyalty, a high purpose—full of help for your boy's manhood. Home life; single rooms. $500. 22d year. A book full of suggestion. FREDERICK S CURTIS.

Connecticut

The Housatonic Valley Institute Cornwall, Conn.
Among the Berkshire Hills of Northwestern Connecticut. Home School for boys. Classical, Scientific, Business, Preparatory Courses. Thirteenth year.
H. B. MacFarland, S.B., L. W. Arnold, A.B., Principals.

WOODSIDE SEMINARY
HARTFORD, CONN.
City advantages for culture and study. Experienced teachers. Miss Sara J. Smith, Prin.

Massachusetts

The Cambridge School
A select, private school for girls. Comforts of home. Mr. ARTHUR GILMAN is the Director, Cambridge, Mass.

PROSPECT HILL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
GREENFIELD, MASS.
A thorough education with good home influence.
Established 1869.
Miss IDA F. FOSTER, Miss CAROLINE R. CLARK, } Principals.

Windsor Hall School
prepares girls for Radcliffe and other colleges. Studies elective in other courses. Comfortable home. Ten miles from Boston. Dr. CHARLES H. CLARK, Principal,
WABAN, MASSACHUSETTS

New Hampshire

COLBY ACADEMY, New London, N. H.
$200 to $250 a Year. Co-educational. 44th Year.
Send for Catalogue. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, PRESIDENT

New Jersey

FREEHOLD, NEW JERSEY
Young Ladies' Seminary
Preparation for College. Seminary Course. Post-Graduate Studies. Art, Music, Oratory. For catalogue apply to the Misses SEWALL, Principals.

New York

NAZARETH INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL
Bronxville, N. Y.
UNDER THE CHARGE OF THE SISTERS OF ST. JOSEPH OF NAZARETH (EPISCOPAL)
Industrial training for girls of good character to render them self-supporting.
Terms, $150 a year. No vacations.

To Keep up with the Times is the question that confronts busy people.
The Chautauqua Reading Circle
solves the problem. There are no examinations, but many helps for readers. Forty thousand graduates show that the plan is practicable. THE FRENCH-GREEK year begins Oct. 1. Send for circulars to JOHN H. VINCENT, Dept. 39, Buffalo, N. Y.

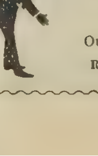
MT. PLEASANT MILITARY ACADEMY. 82d year. Refers to Hon. Joseph H. Choate, Hamilton W. Mabie, L.H.D.
THE PRINCIPALS, Sing-Sing-on-Hudson, N. Y.

Utica (N. Y.) Conservatory of Music
A SEMINARY FOR MUSIC TEACHERS
DUDLEY BUCK, Examiner and Lecturer.
FELIX HINK, Musical Director.
Each teacher an eminent specialist. Graduates filling good positions. Catalogue free.
CORA M. WHEELER, Director.



LEARN FRENCH GERMAN OR SPANISH IN TEN WEEKS!
Our illustrated book tells how.
Send 2c. stamp for it.
ROSENTHAL College of Foreign Languages,
451 Rookery Bldg., CHICAGO.

Correspondence

[For other Correspondence see page 796]

A Criticism

To the Editors of The Outlook:

Your letter of October 15, 1896, was duly received. I should be glad to take your paper, but I think $3 is too high these times under a gold standard. Two dollars will buy as much now as $4 would a few years ago. As you are in favor of the existing gold standard, you ought to be satisfied to reduce the price of your paper to $2. You are too intelligent to believe that bimetallism will ever be established by the co-operation of Great Britain and the principal commercial nations, unless it is first established by the United States. What the St. Louis platform says about it is a "tub thrown to amuse the whale."

I am in favor of a paper currency based on gold and silver in the Government vaults, dollar for dollar. I would cancel all greenbacks and Treasury notes as fast as they are redeemed; have no banks of issue and circulation; wind up all national banks as fast as their charters expire; would favor and regulate banks of deposit and discount; issue government certificates on all the gold and silver bullion offered at the present weight and ratio, and make them a legal tender for all debts, public and private; coin the bullion at the convenience of the Government; pay creditors gold or silver at the option of the debtor; place gold and silver on an equality as money.

The country will then have a stable currency, not based on confidence or fiat money, and not liable to create a panic for fear it cannot or will not be kept on a par with gold, as the gold and silver parties alternate in power; a currency that will expand as fast as the wealth and population of the country expand. It will require no expert skill in banking to provide a currency of that kind. Such a revolution in the currency should be wrought out gradually, with a desire to produce as little disturbance of business and injustice as possible.

Very likely gold would go to a premium at first, but the immense demand for silver would so enhance its value that the two metals would soon circulate at par as money. Its commercial value, fixed by the gamblers of the stock exchange in London, Berlin, Paris, and New York, would fluctuate, but the mint value would be practically stable. Our experience from 1792 to 1873 shows that such a currency in substance could be established, if gold financiers would consent to it. Then the currency question would not be political.

It appears to me that the "two principles by which we may well be guided in times of moral perplexity," found on page 643 of The Outlook for October 10th, are too shadowy to be applied to this currency question, when you agree that we are suffering from the fraud of 1873 demonetizing silver, when the Matthews resolution, January 25–28, 1878, passed the Senate by a vote of two to one, and the House by a vote of three to one, provided "that to return to its coinage such silver coins as legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not a violation of the public faith, nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditors," when the House passed a free-coinage bill in 1890, which McKinley voted for, and when the Senate now has a majority of nine for free silver. If the doctrine of your two moral principles had prevailed, slavery never would have been abolished. Where one creditor will be hurt by free coinage, fifty debtors will be benefited; and many creditors will be more benefited by the appreciation of other property than hurt by decline in money.

If these low prices continue until a majority of the farmers become tenants of their creditors, the country at large will suffer more than it will if a few thousand creditors lose a few millions of dollars by the decline in money. Let me state a case. The great majority of our creditors are the holders of greenbacks, and the bonds bought with greenbacks. They cost, on an average, fifty cents on the dollar, measured in gold. Under a gold standard they have doubled in value by the appreciation of gold, giving them a profit of four dollars to one. Do you call that just? Would there be any injustice now to redeem the greenbacks and bonds in silver worth fifty-three cents on the dollar, measured by the commercial value (which is not the mint value) and 100 cents by the mint or money value?

I have tried to condense. Hope I am understood.

D. L. PRATT, Ex-Cir. Judge.

Hillsdale, Mich.

A Clergyman's View

To the Editors of The Outlook:

Democracy and republican institutions are being greatly distrusted and discredited by those who have been unflinching supporters of popular government. Men and papers whose views naturally allied them with popular movements heretofore have become, strange to say, and in an hour when the Nation needed them most, either direct upholders of unrepublican policies, or apologizers for a business and economic system whose evils are widely felt and acknowledged.

Into certain aspects of this conduct The Outlook has entered, which, if the writer understand the position of an accredited independent catholic journal—a journal imbued with the scientific and social spirit—is a step its friends did not expect to see it take. To instance, The Outlook of June 27 said, in substance, that we are obliged to take the judgment of experts upon the money question, though experts are likely to be biased, or are not always disinterested parties; that the gold standard has worked great injury and injustice; that free coinage of silver would, without the consent of the leading nations to bimetallism, produce greater injustice and inequality; and that, therefore, we had better remain under a gold standard, though serious evils attend it, until bimetallism is secured by international agreement. The admissions in the above declaration are all that the gold-standard advocates asked in the opening of the campaign, as subsequent discussion has proven.

The first admission is that the money question must be referred to experts; the next is that silver monometallism would be worse than gold monometallism; the third is that bimetallism cannot exist without the joint agreement of nations.

These neutralize completely the accusations, which are, first, that experts may be selfish; and, second, that gold has wrought great injustice.

Now, the logic of all who have supported the St. Louis platform is that expert judgment assures the only safe financial policy; that the people are not capable of rendering a just decision upon so important a matter, and, therefore, they should vote for a financial system proposed by those who believe that gold is the only sound basis for money, or is the only money furnished by commercial experience and nature; that no legislation is needed upon the question. Hence The Outlook's first admission is made the reason for shifting the whole question of finance from the people, from legislation, from Congress, to the men who are called experts, and these are the few who have pronounced the gold standard sound and safe. This virtually distrusts the popular convictions, which are bimetallic, and which have arisen, not out of unmoral nor immoral people, but out of those basic virtues which declare what is just and right between men.

Concerning the second admission of The Outlook, that silver would be worse than gold as the only basic money, it turns out that the party The Outlook supports holds, in the arguments made, that the gold standard has no evils and has not wrought great injustice, and hence it is not to be set aside. And as to having bimetallism by international agreement, the arguments of this party are that the commercial nations do not want bimetallism. This was the only thing in The Outlook's deliverance that pointed to the settlement of the question by popular consent; and yet, after the Republican leaders, speakers, and interpreters have spent the time in this campaign in showing that bimetallism has proven a failure in the commercial nations, it seeks to swell the vote for Mr. McKinley in a series of editorials saying that he is more likely to secure bimetallism for us than Mr. Bryan. If this party had made an argument throughout the discussion harmonizing with its plank on the money issue, or had acknowledged the evils of the present system and that we must get around to bimetallism as soon as possible, The Outlook would not be in quite so bad an attitude, and it would not have given substantial aid to views that seriously distrust the popular mind of this country. The Outlook contends strongly for democracy and the acceptance of democracy's results, though these may involve some evils; but this writer has noticed that when a real issue arises in politics—not in religion or theology—it departs from its creed.

It is time for journals and teachers who feed the social virtues to show absolute or practical faith in their philosophy.

G. E. CUNNINGHAM,
Pastor M. E. Church.

Glenwood, Mo.

Had Never Picked a Flower

Thirty-five boys and girls in Chicago, who recently applied for admission to the Joseph Medill Summer School, were asked to answer the following six questions: 1. Were you ever in the woods? 2. Did you ever see the lake? 3. Did you ever pick a flower? 4. Were you ever in the park? 5. Did you ever ride in a wagon behind horses? 6. Did you ever ride in a car on the railroad?

On examining the answers it was found that thirty out of thirty-five had never been in the woods, nineteen had never seen Lake Michigan, eight had never picked a flower. During the writing of the answers one little girl was found to be crying bitterly. On inquiry it was discovered that she had been obliged to answer no to nearly all the questions, and "was afraid she wouldn't pass." The Secretary of the Bureau of Charities, in relating the incident, said: "She had never seen Lake Michigan, never picked a flower, never been in the woods, but she understood perfectly well an examination."

—M. Émile Zola, who is an expert bicyclist, is, according to a Parisian journal, so fond of the wheel that he has made up his mind to write a novel about it. The novel is to follow the book entitled "Paris." The development of the cycling movement, in M. Zola's opinion, is destined to produce a race of vigorous young men and women.

You might just as well try to blow around a weather vane as to help some people by pointing out the right way. They won't see it. Even if you prove to them that it's the easiest way, and the safest, and cheapest, they won't walk in it. But this isn't so with all. It's only a few, comparatively. We're not complaining. There are millions of women who have seized on Pearline's way of washing—glad to save their labor, time, clothes, and money with it. Most women don't need much urging when they fully understand all the help that comes with Pearline. 500

Millions NOW USE Pearline

KITCHEN FURNISHING

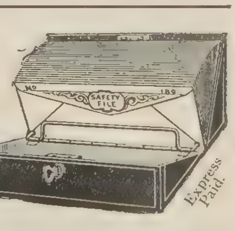
COOKING UTENSILS, MOULDS,
CUTLERY, CROCKERY, AND GLASS,
REFRIGERATORS,
HOUSECLEANING ARTICLES.

LEWIS & CONGER

130 and 132 West 42d St., N. Y.

Safety Document File

Metal Case, Strong Lock, 2 Keys, Removable Pockets.
No. 10 (3 x 5¼ x 11 in.), $1.50
No. 20 (4½x5¼x11 in.), $1.75
A.C.BARLER MFG. CO.
103 Lake St., Chicago



-THE- CINCINNATI BELL FOUNDRY Co
CINCINNATI, OHIO.
SOLE MAKERS OF THE "BLYMYER" BELLS
FOR CHURCH SCHOOL, FIRE ALARM &c
Catalogue with 2500 testimonials. Prices and terms FREE.

Recreation Department

If you will write, telling us as to what sort of a trip you are planning for, we shall be glad to give you all the information possible bearing on the points to be visited and the routes thereto. No charge is made for this service to Outlook readers. Address RECREATION DEPARTMENT, THE OUTLOOK, 13 Astor Place, N.Y.

"Sunset Limited" of the Southern Pacific Co.

The magnificent transcontinental flyer leaves New Orleans on Mondays and Thursdays, beginning November 9, making the longest continuous run in the world. Four days from New York to California. Through sleeping and dining cars from New York connecting with the above trains at New Orleans. Ladies' parlor and compartment car, café, barber, bath, New Orleans to San Francisco. Leave New York and Eastern cities Saturdays and Tuesdays.

Texas, New and Old Mexico, Arizona, California, Hawaiian Islands, Japan, China, India, Australia, New Zealand, and around the world.

Pacific Mail Steamship Company; Occidental and Oriental S. S. Company; Houston and Texas Central Railroad; Mexican International Railroad; San Antonio and Aransas Pass Railway.

S. F. B. Morse, G.P.A., New Orleans, La.; T. H. Goodman, G.P.A., San Francisco, Cal.

For further information, free illustrated pamphlets, maps, and time-tables, also lowest freight and passage rates, apply to Edwin Hawley, A.G.T., Mgr.; L. H. Nutting, E.P. Agt., L. J. Spence, E. F. Agt., 349 Broadway, or 1 Battery Place (Washington Building), New York.

The regular winter schedule of trains to Lakewood via the Central Railroad of New Jersey went into effect October 13. This is the only route to the great resort in the New Jersey pines, and the Company offers a service up to the highest standard of excellence. Trains leave New York, station foot of Liberty Street, as follows: 1:45 and 4:40 P.M., reaching Lakewood at 3:35 and 6:25 P.M., respectively. Each train carries a Pullman car through. Express trains to New York leave Lakewood at 7:45 and 10:50 A.M. Two of the large hotels are now open; likewise many of the cottages.

HICKS' NEWSPAPER

ADVERTISING AGENCY, W. HICKS, Proprietor, makes a specialty of preparing and placing Resort Hotel advertisements in the best newspapers at lowest rates.

TRAVELERS' R. R. GUIDE Formerly Appletons'.
R. R. Maps and Time-Tables. Conveniently Indexed. Monthly—25 cents. 24 Park Place, N. Y.

EUROPE

Europe and The Orient

TWELFTH SEASON

Select Party will leave New York January 5, 1897, by express steamer "Columbia," 106 days' tour through Italy, Greece, Syria (Damascus), Palestine, Egypt, the Nile (to first cataract), the Riviera (Nice), Switzerland, France, and England. Strictly first-class; exceptional advantages. For particulars of winter and summer tours address Mrs. M. A. CROSLEY, 502 Bedford Ave. Brooklyn, or Norwich, Conn.

European Winter Resort

INNSBRUCK, TYROL, AUSTRIA

1,900 feet above the sea, with dry, bracing climate: center for Sleighing Excursions; fine University, Hospital, etc.

HOTEL TIROL
(Open all the year.)

Large, airy, sunny rooms, well furnished; superior cuisine; modern conveniences. Best references. Reduced rates in winter. Illustrated pamphlets on application. CARL LANDSEE, Prop'r.

CROWN HOTEL
Scarborough, Eng.

Occupying the finest position in ths beautiful seaside resort. Electric lights and bells throughout. Continental entrance lounge newly added. Terms on application. DOUGLAS GORDON (late of the Gordon Hotels, Lim.).

Stratford-on-Avon, England Golden Lion Hotel

This favorite Inn was known in Shakespeare's time as "Ye Peacocke Inn," 1613. JOHN FRY, Prop.

MELROSE, SCOTLAND

The Abbey Hotel ABBEY GATE AND George and Abbotsford Hotel

HIGH STREET.—The only First-class Hotels in Melrose, both overlooking the ruins, and only two minutes' walk from Railway Station. Hotel 'Buses attend all Trains. G. HAMILTON, Proprietor.

CANNES

HOTEL BRISTOL

Most salubrious part of the town. Large garden. Patronized by several Royal families: H.R.H. THE PRINCESS CLEMENTINE D'ORLÉANS, THE PRINCE and PRINCESS FERDINAND DE BULGARIE, PRINCESS STÉPHANIE D'AUTRICHE, ARCHIDUC and ARCHIDUCHESS RÉINIER D'AUTRICHE, PRINCE and PRINCESS DE SAXE COBOURG GOTHA, etc., etc Sanitary arrangements perfect; made by English engineers. Modern comfort; electric light; lift; baths; billiard; tennis-ground. C. GUILLON, Proprietor.

Europe

MARSEILLES, FRANCE
GRAND HOTEL NOAILLES AND METROPOLE

Largest, finest, and best. Electric light throughout. American home C. RATHGEB, Prop. (Swiss).

Munich, Germany
"Bayerischer Hof" (BAVARIA) Most fashionable Hotel

250 ROOMS & SALOONS

Electric Light, Lift, etc. Moderate terms.
Prop're, TH. SEIF^we. Director, H. SCHLENK

GENOA, ITALY
GRAND HOTEL DE GÊNES

Electric light. Lift. Frequented by American visitors.
G. & R. BONERA, Prop'rs.

TRAVEL

JAPAN-AMERICA LINE

New Route to the Orient

Great Northern Railway

Duluth—St. Paul—Minneapolis
TO Seattle, Washington

Nippon Yusen Kaisha

TO HAWAII—JAPAN—CHINA
Australia and India

Native agents of the Company at foreign ports speak English and are in a position to render valuable service to tourists, students, temporary residents, and shippers.

Through rates and bills of lading to all Oriental ports. Special rates for Missionaries. For freight, express-parcel, and passage rates, sailing dates, and other information apply to railway or steamship agent, or address

F. I. WHITNEY, G.P. & T.A., St. Paul, Minn.

GAZE'S TOURS NILE Bermuda or West Indies

Faultless Climate. Malaria Impossible.

Nile Tours
Orient, Egypt and Palestine
South France and Italy
Personally Conducted
Independent Tickets Everywhere
Tourist Gazette Free.

Illustrated programme of our NILE TOURS, Season 1896-97, sent on application. Sole agents for the Thewfikieh Nile Nav. Co.

OUR ORIENTAL TOURS, visiting GIBRALTAR, ITALY, EGYPT, HOLY LAND, &c., leave New York JAN'Y 16, FEBRUARY 13 and MARCH 13.

OUR regular South France and Italy parties, visiting Southern EUROPE and ENGLAND (a delightful two months' tour), leave New York monthly. All above tours under personal escort, and every expense included. Illustrated programmes free. Mention Tour wanted.

As Passenger Agents for the best Transportation Lines, we furnish tickets at lowest rates everywhere—Europe, the Orient and round the World. BERMUDA, NASSAU, MEXICO, WEST INDIES, &c. Programs free. Apply to

H. GAZE & SONS, Ltd., 113 B'way, New York

MALLORY STEAMSHIP LINES —Delightful Ocean Trips to the Ports of Texas, Georgia, Florida.—Tourists' Tickets to all Winter Resorts in Texas, Colorado, California, Mexico, Georgia, Florida, &c. Our 64-page "Satchel Handbook" mailed free. C.H. Mallory & Co., Pier 20, E.R., N.Y

HOTELS AND RESORTS

Bermuda

HAMILTON, BERMUDA VICTORIA LODGE
Opposite Victoria Park and Cedar Ave. Private Board.
Mrs. J. F. SMITH, Proprietor.

California

HOTEL GREEN PASADENA, CAL. Accommodation for 400 guests. Occupies an entire block. Souvenir mailed.
G. G. GREEN, Owner. J. H. HOLMES, Mgr.

BAXTER TERRACE Santa Barbara, California
Superior accommodations for twenty guests. Cottages and rooms. Descriptive cards sent on request. Terms moderate.

CALIFORNIA

Be sure to include in your itinerary a sojourn at the beautiful

HOTEL VENDOME, San Jose

Charming winter resort. Climate beyond compare. Headquarters for all tourists to the great Lick Observatory; a matchless ride. Send for illustrated souvenir. GEO. P. SNELL, Mgr.

Colorado

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo.: The Antlers
Illustrated book, describing Colorado Springs, sent on request by E. BARNETT, Proprietor.

Connecticut

Crest View Sanitarium
Greenwich, Conn.
A quiet, restful establishment for the care and treatment of chronic invalids. Unexceptional location and surroundings for health, rest, or recreation. H. M. HITCHCOCK, M.D.

Georgia

SOUTHERN RESORT.—On the top of the Sand Hills, Augusta, Georgia, 400 feet above the city. Extensive grounds; excellent accommodations; reasonable terms. Address Mrs. STOVALL, Sand Hills, Augusta, Ga.

Thomasville, Georgia
Old Oaks
A select boarding-house. Table first-class; location choice; modern conveniences; artesian water.
Miss UHLER, Cor. Warren and Seward Sts.

New Jersey

FOREST LODGE
"Will make special rates until January"
For circulars address THOS. NOBLE, Lakewood, N. J.

SUNSET LODGE

Madison Ave., LAKEWOOD, NEW JERSEY
Oct. to June 1st. J. M. VANDERHOOF.

LAKEWOOD Two ladies having a pleasant cottage in Lakewood, N.J., wish to meet with a family of four or five adults to board with them for the winter. Highest references given and required. Address G. F. R., No. 2,027, The Outlook Co.

New York City

ST. DENIS

Broadway and 11th St., NEW YORK
Opposite Grace Church EUROPEAN PLAN
Rooms $1.00 per Day and Upward

In a modest and unobtrusive way there are few better conducted hotels in the metropolis than the St. Denis.

The great popularity it has acquired can readily be traced to its unique location, its homelike atmosphere, the peculiar excellence of its cuisine and service, and its very moderate prices.
WILLIAM TAYLOR & SON.

Proprietors of first-class city or winter resort hotels desiring a manager, or one to take charge of steward's department, are requested to address the advertiser, who has indorsements of the highest character for either position. Address G., No. 2,028, care The Outlook.

New York

GLEASON SANITARIUM

ELMIRA, N. Y.

1852 (Formerly Elmira Water Cure) 1896

REST AND RECREATION

GUESTS RECEIVED WITH OR WITHOUT MEDICAL ATTENTION

Pure Spring Water; Good Table; Fine Views; Pure Air. All forms of Baths, Electricity, and Massage. All modern improvements. Under the care of medical graduates of long experience. Send for illustrated Booklet.

Dr. Strong's Sanitarium

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

For health or pleasure. The appointments of a first-class Hotel. Elevator, electric bells, sun-parlor, and promenade on the roof. Suites of rooms with baths. Massage, Electricity, all baths and health appliances. New Turkish, Russian, and Natural Sulphur-Water baths. Dry tonic air, Saratoga water, croquet, lawn-tennis, etc. Open all the year. Send for illustrated circular.

THE GLEN SPRINGS Watkins Glen, N. Y.

A Sanatorium for those Seeking Health and Rest under the Medical management of experienced Physicians.

Neptune Brine Baths, for RHEUMATISM, GOUT, and NERVOUS DISEASES. Neptune Spring is a 67° Brine, containing the largest amount of Chloride of Calcium of any Spring in the world.

Carbonated Neptune Brine Baths (the Nauheim treatment), for chronic diseases of the Heart. All approved forms of Hydrotherapy and Electricity, Massage, Swedish Movements, Turkish and Russian Baths.

Valuable Mineral Springs, Muriated, Alkaline, Chalybeate, Iodo-Bromated, and Brine, especially efficacious in disorders of Digestion, Gouty conditions, Diabetes, Anæmia, Nervous diseases, and Chronic affections of the Kidney.

Climate mild, dry, and equable. No Malaria. No Hay-Fever. Location overlooks thirty miles of Seneca Lake. Sixty acres of private Park, Golf Links, Tennis Courts, Bowling-Alleys, &c. All the appointments of a first-class hotel. No Insane or other objectionable cases received. Correspondence with physicians solicited. Send for illustrated book.

WM. E. LEFFINGWELL, Manager, Watkins, N.Y.

Oak Crest Spring Valley, N.Y.

A private home for invalids and aged people. Situated in the beautiful Ramapo Hills. A very healthy neighborhood. Pleasant drives over well-kept roads. Modern improvements Write E. E. POTTS, Spring Valley, N. Y.

Pennsylvania

WALTER'S IN SOUTHERN PA. IS THE BEST. SANITARIUM

WALTER'S PARK, PENNA.

SEND FOR ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE.

North Carolina

OAKDENE TRYON, No. Car.—Located in the thermal belt; unsurpassed climate; comfortable house, fronting south; bright, sunny rooms, porches, and grounds. Address Box 55.

South Carolina

AIKEN, S. C. BUSCH HOUSE.—$2 per day. Special rates by week. Electric lights, etc. Hygienic baths and Kneipp's water cure. HENRY BUSCH, Prop.

A COMFORTABLE winter home in the South for Northern tourist can be secured in the house of a physician. Well heated, open fireplaces, and broad, sunny piazzas; convenient to churches, telegraph and post office. Terms moderate. Address P. O. Box 280, Camden, S. C

Wisconsin

PENNOYER SANITARIUM KENOSHA, WIS.

FALL the best time for treatment. For illustrated prospectus address N. J. PENNOYER, M.D., Manager. Chicago Office, 70 State St. Tuesdays, 1:30 to 4.

Notes and Queries

1. Does Christ teach that God is the Father of all men? If so, where? Was not the Sermon on the Mount, in which the Fatherhood of God is implicitly taught, addressed primarily to the disciples alone? Does not Christ, in John viii., 41 ff., explicitly deny that God is the Father of some? Do you think the preaching of the universal Fatherhood of God is harmful on the ground that men, if taught that they already are sons of God, will think nothing further is necessary? 2. In Matt. xix., 17, where Christ asks, "Why callest thou me good?" does he deny his own sinlessness? 3. How does Kains's "Introduction to Philosophy" rank, and by whom is it published? 4. I notice a recent correspondent asks for a text-book on systematic theology written from the standpoint of modern scholarship, and you reply, "There is none." I think "An Outline of Christian Theology," by Professor William N. Clarke, of Hamilton Theological Seminary, which can be obtained direct of Dr. Clarke, would be the thing your correspondent desires. R. A. A.

1. The parable of the Prodigal Son, referring as it does to "publicans and sinners," is conclusive proof that Jesus taught the universal Fatherhood of God. The text you refer to does not deny this, but shows only what men make themselves to be, as in Matt. xxiii., 15 (R. V. marg.). The preaching of this truth is no more harmful than preaching what Paul referred to as "the goodness of God [which] leadeth thee to repentance" (Rom. ii., 4). 2. No; see R. V. and margin. In reading the different version of this saying found in Mark x., 18, Luke xviii., 19, emphasize the "why." This will put you on the line of Jesus's suggestion to his inquirer, viz., that if the address "Good Master" conveyed more than a compliment, it practically acknowledged Jesus's authority to answer him by the Spirit of God, since he could be really good only as God was in him. 3. We do not know the book, and have endeavored to find it without success. 4. Another friend writes: "Dr. Clarke's 'Outline' is one of the best books I know on the subject. It is written from the standpoint of modern scholarship." The Baptist Publication Society, Fifth Avenue, New York, can supply it, at $2.50.

Please explain to me the essential difference, if any, between the Unitarians and the Liberal Orthodox. One sometimes hears it said by a Unitarian in speaking of a minister of the Liberal Orthodox variety, "He is a good enough Unitarian for me," and yet he always denies that he is a Unitarian.

A CONSTANT READER.

Those who make such remarks upon single sermons would qualify them after a three months' hearing. The essential, though not the only important, difference is in their estimate of Jesus. Unitarians believe Jesus to have been of human parentage on both sides, and to have been related to God precisely as we are. The Liberal Orthodox accept the Virgin Birth, and ascribe to Jesus an authority superior to human criticism.

I have been intensely interested in two editorials in your issue of October 17—"A Theological Etching" and "The Invalid." I like the theology that they breathe. Will you be kind enough to state the title or titles of one, two, or three volumes that give a system of such theology? C.

There is a legion of books which are pervaded by such theological ideas, but for systematic theology of that kind see President Hyde's "Outlines of Social Theology" (The Macmillan Company), and Professor W. N. Clarke's "Outline of Christian Theology," a larger work, to be had of the Baptist Publication Society, New York.

Please tell me why the inhabitants of the District of Columbia are not allowed to vote for Presidential electors. I have tried to find out, but no one of whom I have inquired is able to enlighten me. I cannot conceive of any reason for the prohibition.

F. A. J.

For the same reason that the inhabitants of the Territories have likewise no vote. The Constitution, framed before the District or Territories were organized, provides for the choice of electors in the States only, in such manner as each State may determine.

A. H.—Your letter has unfortunately been mislaid, so that its queries cannot be reproduced, though answered from memory. For the influence of the North African Church upon Christian theology, see J. B. Heard's "Alexandrian and Carthaginian Theology" (T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh). As to what can be said for the influence of Egypt, see J. F. Clarke's "Ten Great Religions." Oriental influences manifested themselves mainly in the Gnostic and Manichæan heresies, which the Church successfully withstood. The development of Mariolatry owes little to any specific outside source. The same may be said for Christian eschatology. As to Bishop Brooks's cure of his stammering, we can only repeat, from hearsay, that he overcame it by forcing himself into a habit of rapid speech.

For Over-Indulgence

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate

It preserves and renews the vitality, strengthens the nerves, and stimulates the stomach to healthy action.

See that the letters S. H. & M.

are stamped on the back of every yard you buy from the reel

NONE OTHER GENUINE

If your dealer will not supply you, we will.

"HOME DRESSMAKING," a new book by Miss Emma M. Hooper, of the Ladies' Home Journal, telling how to put on Bias Velveteen Skirt Binding and other valuable points, sent for 25 cents, postage paid.

S. H. & M. Co., P.O. Box 699, N.Y. City.

Arnold Constable & Co.

Suits, Cloaks

Dinner, Ball, and Street Costumes, Ladies' Paris Gowns, Tailor-made Dresses, English Top Coats, Wraps, Jackets, Golf Capes, Bicycle Suits.

Special attention is directed to our Custom Department.

RICH FURS

Russian Sable, Seal, Otter, Mink, Persian Lamb, Silver Fox, and Trimming Furs.

FUR CAPES, JACKETS, PELERINES, COLLARETTES, BOLEROS, MUFFS.

Broadway & 19th st.

NEW YORK

Quick as Thought

No time lost with WHITMAN'S INSTANTANEOUS CHOCOLATE.

Taste, flavor and quality the best. Put up in pound and half-pound tins.

Stephen F. Whitman & Son,

Sole Mfrs. Philadelphia.

Pleasant Way to Cure Catarrh.

We have a remedy that gives speedy relief and makes a permanent cure—used by a simple method of inhalation. We will mail a sample free for trial to any sufferer. We think you will like the sample, and if so we will send you by mail one month's treatment for $1.

DR. J. W. BLOSSER & SON, Atlanta, Ga.

Books Received

For the Week ending October 17

HENRY T. COATES & CO., PHILADELPHIA
Ellis, Edward S. Shod with Silence.

T. Y. CROWELL & CO., NEW YORK
Roberts, Charles G. D. Around the Camp-Fire. $1.50.
Ray, Anna Chapin. Half a Dozen Girls. $1.50.
Oxley, J. Macdonald. The Boy Tramps. $1.50.
Browning, Robert. Selected Poems. Edited by Charlotte E. Porter and Helen A. Clarke. 2 Vols. $3.
Theuriet, André. Rustic Life in France. Translated by Helen B. Dole. $2.50.
Gellibrand, Emma. J. Cole. $1.
Weeks, J. Hatton. The Tin Kitchen. 75 cts.

DODD, MEAD & CO., NEW YORK
Hopkins, Tighe. Nell Haffenden. $1.25.
Douglas, Amanda M. A Little Girl in Old New York. $1.50.
Farrow, G. E. The Wallypug of Why. Illustrated. $1.50.
Woods, Katherine P. The Crowning of Candace. 75 cts.
Cowden-Clarke, Mary. My Long Life. $2.
Ruskin, John. Letters to the Clergy on the Lord's Prayer and the Church. Edited by the Rev. F. A. Malleson. $1.75.
Brooke, Stopford A. The Old Testament and Modern Life. $1.50.
Kernahan, Coulson. Captain Shannon. $1.25.
Phelps, Elizabeth Stuart. Gypsy's Sowing and Reaping. $1.50.
Foggitt, W. Smith. Adeline, Countess Schimmelmann. $1.50.
Pollard, Eliza F. The Green Mountain Boys. $1.25.
Macquoid, Katharine S., and Gilbert S. In the Volcanic Eifel. $3.
Crockett, S. R., Gilbert Parker, W. Clark Russell, and Harold Frederic. Tales of Our Coast. $1.25.
Douglas, Amanda M. The Mistress of Sherburne. $1.50.
Champney, Elizabeth W. Witch Winnie in Holland. $1.50.
Sylva Carmen and Alma Strettell. Legends from River and Mountain. Illustrated by T. H. Robinson. $2.
Wells, James, D.D. Travel Pictures from Palestine. $3.
"Alien." The Majesty of Man. $1.25.
Chodsko, Alex. Fairy Tales of the Slav Peasants and Herdsmen. Translated by Emily J. Harding. $2.
Ochiltree, Henry. Redburn. $1.25.
Yechton, Barbara. We Ten; or, The Story of the Roses. Illustrated by Minna Brown. $1.50.
Thorold, Anthony W., D.D. On Money. 50 cts.
Thorold, Anthony W., D.D. On Marriage. 50 cts.
Haweis, Rev. H. R. Travel and Talk (1885–93–95). 2 Vols. $5.

E. P. DUTTON & CO., NEW YORK
Tomkins, Floyd W., Jr. The Christian Life. 75 cts.

GINN & CO., BOSTON
Greenough, J. B., and A. A. Howard. Shorter Latin Grammar.

HARPER & BROS., NEW YORK
Douglas, Theo. Iras: A Mystery. $1.
Stedman, Thomas L. Modern Greek Mastery. $1.50.
Matthews, Brander. Aspects of Fiction and Other Ventures in Criticism. $1.50.
Crockett, S. R. The Gray Man. $1.50.
Hervey, Maurice H. Amyas Egerton. $1.50.
Haswell, Charles H. Reminiscences of an Octogenarian of the City of New York (1816 to 1860). $3.
Lewis, W. H. A Primer of College Football. 75 cts.

HEADLEY BROS., LONDON
Horder, W. Garrett. Quaker Worthies.

D. C. HEATH & CO., BOSTON
Stüven, Hermine. Praktische Anfangsgründe.

HENRY HOLT & CO., NEW YORK
Wenckebach. Deutsche Sprachlehre. $1.12.
Gillet, J. A. Euclidean Geometry. $1.25.
Modern Political Orations. Edited by Leopold Wagner. $1.
Rowan, Andrew S., and M. M. Ramsey. The Island of Cuba. $1.25.
Pierce, E. Dana. Problems in Elementary Physics. 60 cts.
Gerstäcker, Friedrich. Irrfahrten. Edited by Marian P. Whitney. 30 cts.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., BOSTON
Abbott, Lyman. Christianity and Social Problems. $1.25.
Wiggin, Kate Douglas, and Nora A. Smith. Kindergarten Principles and Practice. $1.
Burroughs, John. A Year in the Fields. Illustrated by Clifton Johnson. $1.50.
White, Eliza Orne. A Little Girl of Long Ago. $1.
Harris, Joel Chandler. The Story of Aaron. Illustrated by Oliver Herford. $2.
Richardson, Charles F. A Primer of American Literature.
Aldrich, Thomas Bailey. Judith and Holofernes. $1.25.

LAMSON, WOLFFE & CO., BOSTON
Gray, Norman D. '96 Charades.

LEE & SHEPARD, BOSTON
Monachesi, Mrs. N. Di R. A Manual for China-Painters. $1.25.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT CO., PHILADELPHIA
De la Ramée, Louise (Ouida). Two Little Wooden Shoes. Illustrated by Edmund H. Garrett. $1.25.
Molesworth, Mrs. Philippa. $1.25.
Blanchard, Amy E. Betty of Wye. $1.25.
Kingsley, Henry. The Mystery of the Island. $1.25.
Webster, J. Provand. The Oracle of Baal. $1.50.

LITTLE, BROWN & CO., BOSTON
The End of the Beginning. $1.25.
Sienkiewicz, Henryk. "Quo Vadis." Translated by Jeremiah Curtin. $2.
De Salamon, Mgr. Memoirs during the Revolution (1790–1801). With Notes, Preface, etc., by the Abbé Bridier. $2.
Mérimée, Prosper. Carmen. Translated by Edmund H. Garrett.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO., NEW YORK
Marquand, Allan, and A. L. Frothingham, Jr. A Text-Book of the History of Sculpture. $1.50.

MACMILLAN & CO., NEW YORK
The Judges. Edited by R. G. Moulton. (The Modern Reader's Bible.) 50 cts.
Pater, Walter. Gaston de Latour. $1.50.
Selections from Chaucer's Canterbury Tales. Edited by Hiram Corson. 90 cts.
Kant, Immanuel. Critique of Pure Reason. Translated by F. Max Müller. $3.
James, Henry. The Other House. $1.50.
Sturgis, Russell. European Architecture.
Balzac, Honoré de. Beatrix. Translated by James Waring. $1.50.
Björnson, Björnstjerne. The Bridal March, and One Day. $1.25.
Wordsworth, William. Poetical Works. Edited by William Knight. Vol. III. $1.50.
A New English Dictionary on Historical Principles. Edited by Dr. J. A. H. Murray. Vols. III. and IV. 60 cts. each.
Shakespeare, William. Venus and Adonis. The Rape of Lucrece. (Temple Edition.) 45 cts. each.

A. C. M'CLURG & CO., CHICAGO
Liljencrantz, Ottilie A. The Scrape that Jack Built. $1.25.

MERRILL & BAKER, NEW YORK
Myers, Cortland. Midnight in a Great City. $1.

NEW AMSTERDAM BOOK CO., NEW YORK
Bourdillon, Francis W. Nephelé. $1.

MARY E. PERKINS, NORWICH, CONN.
Perkins, Mary E. Old Houses of the Ancient Town of Norwich (1660–1800).

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, NEW YORK
Maurice, C. Edmund. The Story of Bohemia. $1.50.
Thackeray, W. M. Henry Esmond, Esq. $1.
Carlyle, Thomas. Sartor Resartus. $1.
Kingsley, Charles. Hypatia. $1.
Paine, Thomas. Writings. Edited by Moncure D. Conway. Vol. IV. $2.50.

FLEMING H. REVELL CO., NEW YORK
Campbell, James M. The Indwelling Christ. 75 cts.
Pierson, Delavan L. For Each New Day (Northfield Year-Book). $1.25.
Dwell Deep. By the Author of "Probable Sons." 75 cts.
Probable Sons. By the Author of "Eric's Good News." 50 cts.
Paull, Mrs. G. A. The Making of a Hero. 50 cts.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, NEW YORK
Earle, Alice Morse. Colonial Days in Old New York. $1.25.
Russell, Robert H. The Edge of the Orient. $2.
Grant, Robert, A. F. Higgins, C. F. Holder, and Others. Angling. (Out-of-Door Library). $1.50.
Braine, Sheila E. To Tell the King the Sky is Falling. Illustrated by Alice B. Woodward. $1.75.
Seawell, Molly Elliot. The Sprightly Romance of Marsac. $1.25.
Page, Thomas Nelson. In Old Virginia. Illustrated. $2.50.

SILVER, BURDETT & CO., BOSTON
Songs of the Nation. Compiled by C. W. Johnson. 60 cts.

A. P. VARTOOGUIAN, NEW YORK CITY
Vartooguian, A. P. Armenia's Ordeal. $1.

THOMAS WHITTAKER, NEW YORK
Hodges, George. Faith and Social Service. $1.25.

W. A. WILDE & CO., BOSTON
Vaile, Charlotte M. The Orcutt Girls. $1.50.
Drysdale, William. The Fast Mail. $1.50.

"Brown's Bronchial Troches" relieve Throat Irritations caused by cold or use of the voice. The genuine sold only in boxes.

FINANCIAL

AMERICAN FIRE
INSURANCE COMPANY
Office, Company's Building,
308 & 310 Walnut St., Philadelphia
A.D. 1810.

Guaranty Trust Co.
of New York
Formerly New York Guaranty and Indemnity Co.
Mutual Life Building
65 CEDAR STREET, N. Y.
Capital, - - - $2,000,000
Surplus, - - - $2,000,000

ACTS AS TRUSTEE FOR CORPORATIONS, FIRMS, AND INDIVIDUALS, AS GUARDIAN, EXECUTOR, AND ADMINISTRATOR. TAKES ENTIRE CHARGE OF REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATES.

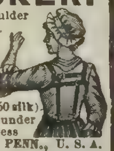
INTEREST ALLOWED ON DEPOSITS
subject to check or on certificate.

WALTER G. OAKMAN, President.
ADRIAN ISELIN, Jr., Vice-President.
GEORGE R. TURNBULL, 2d Vice-President.
HENRY A. MURRAY, Treas. and Sec.
J. NELSON BORLAND, Assist. Treas. and Sec.

DIRECTORS
Samuel D. Babcock,
George F. Baker,
George S. Bowdoin,
Frederic Cromwell,
Walter R. Gillette,
Robert Goelet,
G. G. Haven,
Oliver Harriman,
R. Somers Hayes,
Charles R. Henderson,
Adrian Iselin, Jr.,
Augustus D. Juilliard,
James N. Jarvie,
Richard A. McCurdy
Walter G. Oakman,
Alexander E. Orr,
Henry H. Rogers,
Henry W. Smith,
H. McK. Twombly,
Frederick W. Vanderbilt
William C. Whitney.

£ THE NORTH POLE
would have an agent to cash
Cheque Bank Cheques
if enough travelers visited it. There is an agent in Iceland already. Thousands of them all over the world. Circular.
Agency of
The U. S. Cheque Bank, Ltd.,
Frederick W. Perry, Manager
40 and 42 Wall St., N. Y.

KNICKERBOCKER.
No more round shoulders. Shoulder Brace and Suspender combined. Easily adjusted. Worn with comfort. Sizes for men, women, boys and girls. Sold by druggists, appliance stores, general stores, &c. By mail $1 per pair ($1.50 silk). Send chest measure around body under arms. Circulars free. Address
KNICKERBOCKER BRACE CO., EASTON, PENN., U. S. A.



DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED.
Our INVISIBLE TUBE Cushions help when all else fails, as glasses help eyes. NO PAIN. Whispers heard.
Send to F. Hiscox Co., 858 B'way, N. Y., for Book and Proofs FREE

Fine French Kid Gloves

are generally considered a luxury—owing to the hitherto high prices thereof. Our method of importing them—free from the middle-man's profits—brings the very finest French gloves to you at prices but slightly above those that prevail in the famous Paris stores.

Our "Empress" Kid Gloves, at $1.00;
Our "Marcell" Kid Gloves, at $1.25;
Our "Daubrey" Kid Gloves, at $1.50, are all made from the finest French Kid Skins, and their equal cannot be found in America, at the same low prices. They are in all colors and styles—Mousquetaire, or with four buttons, two and three clasps or Foster's new hooks. The Glove stamped "Daubrey," at $1.50, is the same quality that, with the French maker's name inside, is selling generally for $2.00.

Our stamp inside guarantees the Gloves, and assures you of a saving of at least 25 per cent on every pair.

Mail orders promptly and accurately filled. We pay postage. Money refunded if goods are not satisfactory.

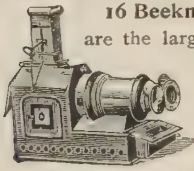
STRAWBRIDGE & CLOTHIER
Dry Goods Philadelphia

No other lamp-chimneys a quarter so good as Macbeth's; or cheap in the long run.

You want the right shape besides. We'll send you the Index; free.

Geo A Macbeth Co

Pittsburgh Pa



Riley Brothers, (Bradford, Eng.)
16 Beekman St., New York.

are the largest manufacturers of Stereopticons, Magic Lanterns and Views in the world. Agencies in Chicago, Boston, Chattanooga, Kansas City and Minneapolis.

Everything in the Lantern business furnished.

Special Lanterns and Slides for all purposes sold and loaned on easy terms. Send for free literature.

RILEY BROTHERS,
16 Beekman St., New York.

The largest Stereopticon outfitters in the world.

BRANCHES — BOSTON: 36 Bromfield St. CHICAGO. 196 La Salle St. KANSAS CITY (Mo.): 515 East 14th St. MINNEAPOLIS: 1564 Hennepin Ave. CHATTANOOGA: 708 Market St.

Don't Suffer

any longer from

Asthma

It is needless

Never mind if you have "tried everything" and failed. Never mind if you feel discouraged and hopeless. Never mind if your case has seemed incurable. Try once more and you will never regret it. We will tell you frankly if we can't help you.

> "This is one of the happiest summers I have seen in thirty years. No asthma, sleep good, good appetite and work hard—why not be happy after so many years' suffering with that terrible asthma. My family doctor says, 'What a miracle!'"
> THOS. J. BRADBURN,
> Rose, N. Y.

WRITE TO
Dr. Hayes, Buffalo, N. Y.
FOR PARTICULARS

THE NEW BOOK

SACRED SONGS No. 1

By IRA D. SANKEY, JAMES McGRANAHAN, and GEO. C. STEBBINS.

Will be ready for use by Mr. D. L. MOODY, at the Series of Meetings to be held at Cooper Union, New York, November 9th.

SACRED SONGS No. 1 is of same size and style as Gospel Hymns No. 6.

SACRED SONGS No. 1 has an unusually large number of new and attractive songs by the authors and others.

SACRED SONGS No. 1 is furnished cheaper than any of the previous issues. In boards, 30 cents by mail; $25 per 100 by express.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
76 East 9th St., New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

THOSE answering advertisements appearing in The Outlook will confer a favor upon the advertiser as well as the publisher by mentioning this publication.

Ex-President Harrison on Coercion

Last Sunday evening ex-President Harrison thus vigorously denounced the attempt to coerce workingmen and the counsel to workingmen to render a feigned submission to the attempt when made:

"My friends, Mr. Bryan assumes that Mr. Ingalls and I have justified coercion. It is an assumption absolutely without truth. [Great applause.] Mr. Ingalls has publicly proclaimed that every employee of every railroad in his charge should be free to vote as he pleased. [Applause.] He has publicly declared that if any subordinate of his dismissed any man because of his political opinions, or attempted in any way to coerce his action and vote, he would dismiss that man and reinstate the workingman that was dismissed. [Applause.]

"It is not a question at all of justifying coercion. I denounce it; I have always denounced it. I have always proclaimed as American doctrine that every man should vote according to the dictates of his own conscience [applause]; that no man should coerce him, and that his vote, when cast, should be honestly counted. This gentleman does me wrong when he imputes to me any acquiescence in the suggestion that the vote of any man shall be coerced.

"But what of his position? My view of the situation is that if any railroad president, if any employer of labor, attempts to control the political convictions of any employee, he should assert his manhood then and there [great applause], and declare to that president or employer that he would vote as he pleased [continued applause], and that declaration of his will be supported by everybody. [Great applause.]

"I will undertake to defend this principle everywhere, not only here, but if an instance of this kind is brought to my attention I will pledge myself as a citizen and a lawyer to rebuke it. [Great applause.] What shall be said, however, of the suggestion that Mr. Bryan makes? I would have the workingman assert his manhood; not only vote as he pleases, but wear the button that he pleases [applause], march in the parade that he pleases, and ask no man's consent. [Applause.]

"I cannot think of stultification that goes further than for a man to cover his face with a mask and march under a banner that he declares he has to use to conceal his face in order to keep his place. [Applause.] That is not the spirit of a free man, and Mr. Bryan greatly undervalues the manhood of the American workingman when he commends such a programme as that to him. [Applause.] He greatly undervalues the sense of fairness of the American people; for I undertake to say that if there were one well-authenticated instance in the city of Indianapolis where the poorest workingman had been coerced in his convictions, the entire press of the city, the entire public sentiment of the city, would be felt in condemnation of the base act. [Applause.]"

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS

Want advertisements of thirty words or less will be published under this heading at one dollar a week. Four cents a week is charged for each word in excess of thirty.

SHOPPING done at any New York store and lowest market prices obtained. Samples sent, goods matched, and styles given without charge to purchaser. Peculiar advantages for buying all kinds of merchandise. Highest references given. Address Mrs. M. W. WIGHTMAN, 139 West 41st St., New York.

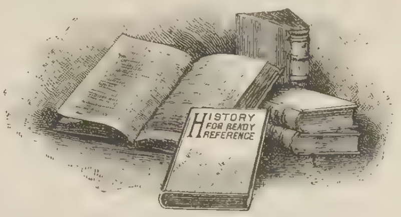
AN AMERICAN LADY, refined, amiable, and intelligent, wishes position in charitable organization, as lady's companion, private secretary, or wherever tact and energy are required. Has occupied responsible position. Highest references. Address E. C., Box DD, Danbury, Conn.

TO CARE FOR invalid or infant, by an American woman of middle age. Not a seamstress, but could be handy about a house. Terms 20 dollars. Testimonials furnished as to character and experience. Address (Miss) B. W. FERRIS, Sound Beach, Fairfield Co., Conn.

A FAMILY of three persons can be accommodated with rooms on the second floor and first-class board in a private family below 14th Street. No other boarders. Address M. L. C., No. 2,032, The Outlook.

TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTERS,
102 Fulton st., New York, sell all makes under half price. Don't buy before writing them for unprejudiced advice and prices. Exchanges. Immense stock for selection. Shipped for trial. Guaranteed first class. Largest house in the world. Dealers supplied. 52-page illus. cat. free.

Its Diamond Qualities have won Golden Opinions



History for Ready Reference and Topical Reading

IN FIVE IMPERIAL VOLUMES

By J. N. LARNED, Ex-Pres. Am. Library Ass'n.

☞ Giving History on All Topics in the Exact Words of the Historians Themselves.

This work contains the choicest selections, upon thousands of topics, from those historians whose writings have been accorded the highest place by the common consent of mankind.

It is in itself a Library of History, and it represents, as does no other work in the English language, the Literature of History.

Thus it has the fascination, the interest, and, so to speak, the flavor, as possessed by the writings of the best historians, biographers, and specialists. And, as President Angell, of Michigan University, says, "what we may call the historic sense is everywhere evinced in the analysis of subjects, in the choice and arrangement of topics, and in the relative fullness of the treatment of them."

This work is a New Departure in Book-Making, as it fills a place hitherto wholly unoccupied.

Its system of Ready Reference and Cross Reference is new and complete, and shows History in its relations as does no other work.

Quotations from over five thousand volumes make it equivalent, practically, to a library of very many volumes, or, as Bishop Vincent says, "puts the history of the world on a single shelf."

It gives the source (title, author, volume, page, or place of work) whence each excerpt is taken. Besides five thousand volumes specifically quoted from, references are made to seven thousand more, and Bacon said, "next to knowing a thing is to know where to find it."

It will answer more questions in History, more authoritatively, with greater excellence of literary expression, and with a greater economy of time, than any other work in the world. The unexcelled historical maps, showing, in connection with the text, the development of countries territorially; its system of non-repetition; the exact text of national Constitutions; the full text also of the world's great historical documents; the extensive chronologies; the classified bibliographies; the time and labor saving features of its system of Ready Reference; its magnificent specimens of literature;—all unite in making it one of the greatest and most valuable works ever published.

Myriads of testimonials from the very highest authorities. Write for circulars giving testimonials, specimen pages, and full information. Sent carriage free to responsible subscribers on easy payments.

SOLICITORS EMPLOYED

THE C. A. NICHOLS CO., Publishers
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

New Christmas Music

HAIL THE KING!—A new service of Scripture and Song by Rev. ROBERT LOWRY. Delightful music, embracing solos, quartets, and choruses. 5 cents.

Christmas Annual No. 27—Seven new, bright Carols by favorite composers. 4 cents.

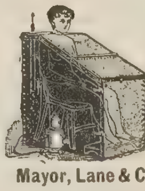
Recitations for Christmas Time, No. 7. Eight pages admirable selections for this celebration. 4 cents.

The Capture of Santa Claus—Dr. W. H. DOANE'S recent Christmas Cantata. A happy combination of pleasing dialogue and mirthful songs; one of the best offered. 30 cents.

Christmas Chimes for Little Voices. A very popular service by Mrs. W. F. CRAFTS and H. P. MAIN. Kindergarten features a special attraction. 6 cents.

Send 30c. for a copy of the new book Sacred Songs No. 1
By Sankey, McGranahan, and Stebbins

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
215 Wabash Ave., Chicago 76 East 9th St., New York



Health Baths

Right in your own home you can enjoy dry steam, vapor oxygen and perfumed baths by using the Improved Turko-Russian Folding Bath Cabinet.

A perfect speedy cure for colds, rheumatism, etc. Helpful in every way. Send for circular free.

Mayor, Lane & Co., 132 White St., New York.

XMAS. DIALOGUES, Pieces to Speak and how to get up Fascinating Sunday School Entertainment—all 10c. J. & P. B. MYERS, 85 John St., N. Y.

The Outlook

A Family Paper

New Series of The Christian Union

Copyright, 1896, by The Outlook Company.

Entered as second-class matter in the New York Post-Office.

The Outlook is a weekly Family Paper, containing this week sixty pages. The subscription price is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance.

Postage is Prepaid by the publishers for all subscriptions in the United States, Canada, and Mexico. For all other countries in the Postal Union add $1.56 for postage.

Changes of Address.—When a change of address is ordered, both the new and the old address must be given. The notice should be sent one week before the change is to take effect.

Discontinuances.—If a subscriber wishes his copy of the paper discontinued at the expiration of his subscription, notice to that effect should be sent. Otherwise it is assumed that a continuance of the subscription is desired.

How to Remit.—Remittances should be sent by Check, Draft, Express-Order, or Money-Order, payable to order of THE OUTLOOK COMPANY. Cash should be sent in Registered Letter.

Letters should be addressed:
THE OUTLOOK,
Clinton Hall, Astor Place,
New York.

Contents for 31 October, 1896

EDITORIAL:

The Campaign Nearing its End 757
Are Workingmen Cowards? 757
Princeton's Anniversary 758
Barnard's Dedication 759
Save the Forests! 759
The American Missionary Association 759
The New Archbishop of Canterbury 760
Armenia 760
A Royal Marriage 761
The Political Issues 761
The Work of a Great University 762
Why Not? 763

CONTRIBUTED ARTICLES:

The Spectator in the Northwest 764
Princeton, 1746-1896 766
By Henry van Dyke, D.D.
A Visit to William Morris's Factory 770
By Rho Fisk Zueblin
Sir George Williams, Founder of Young Men's Christian Associations 774
By Lord Kinnaird
The Right Hon. the Lord Kinnaird 776
The Junior Republic at Freeville 778
By Washington Gladden
The Rural Church—II. "A Gem Without a Setting" 783
By J. Cleveland Cady
Kate Carnegie—Chapters XXI., XXII 785
By Ian Maclaren
Poetry: William Morris 790
By Joel Benton

BOOKS AND AUTHORS:

New Books 791
Books Received 806

THE RELIGIOUS WORLD:

Jubilee Meeting of the American Missionary Association 793
The Industrial Church League 793
Baptist Union and Church Congress 794
The Brotherhood of St. Andrew 794

CORRESPONDENCE

FOR THE LITTLE PEOPLE

NOTES AND QUERIES

THE

HANDY BINDER

for The Outlook, made to hold compactly and conveniently twenty-six numbers, will be sent by mail on receipt of sixty cents.

THE OUTLOOK CO. - NEW YORK

BOOKS BY IAN MACLAREN

(REV. JOHN WATSON, D.D.)

JUST PUBLISHED

THE CURE OF SOULS

$1.50

Being the "Lyman Beecher" lectures on preaching, recently delivered at Yale University. CHIEF CONTENTS.—The Genesis of a Sermon—The Technique of a Sermon—Problems of Preaching—Theology the Theory of Religion—The New Dogma—The Machinery of a Congregation—The Work of a Pastor—The Public Worship of God—The Minister's Care of Himself.

These lectures were received with the greatest possible interest by those who heard them at Yale University, and it is believed that, aside from their value as literature, they will commend themselves to clergymen and laymen alike, because of their practical value in the religious life.

RECENTLY ISSUED

THE MIND OF THE MASTER

$1.50

"No history of Jesus, no series of sermons on the nature of religion and the destiny of the human race, ever gave to the world a more consistent revelation of the simplicity of the laws of God, of the sweetness of the character of Christ, or ever offered so alluring a path for men to follow. It is calculated to establish an epoch in the history of Christianity."—Commercial Advertiser.

THE UPPER ROOM

50c. net. In "Little Books on Religion" Series

The chapters of the book are all the more effective because they are strongly marked by the qualities of mind and skill which have gained their author his conspicuous successes in another department of literature.

By STOPFORD BROOKE

THE OLD TESTAMENT AND MODERN LIFE

By the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke, author of "Tennyson, His Life and Work," "A Primer of English Literature," etc. etc. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $1.50.

Mr. Brooke has taken the character and life of such men as Abraham, Moses, Samuel, and David, and admirably shown how their lives can be applied to the present day and to present people. He has given us not only a series of valuable dissertations upon the great Bible characters, but has also increased very materially our respect for the humanity and for the healthy vigor of their lives.

By COULSON KERNAHAN

THE CHILD, The Wise Man and the Devil

By Coulson Kernahan, author of God and the Ant 18mo, cloth, 50 cents.

The remarkable little book entitled God and the Ant has had a sale of more than 40,000 copies, and has won the enthusiastic approval of English critics and religious teachers, including Ian Maclaren, who says: "It is a striking idea worked out with great power and reverence."

This new work is a wonderfully imaginative picture of a Christless world.

READY SHORTLY

THE GOSPEL OF THE DIVINE SACRIFICE

A study of Evangelical Belief, with some Conclusions touching Life. By the author of Does God Send Trouble? etc. etc. 16mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

A new book by the author of Does God Send Trouble? is sure to be in demand.

The above books are for sale by all booksellers, or will be sent, mail prepaid, on receipt of the retail price, by the publishers.

DODD, MEAD & COMPANY, Publishers

Fifth Ave. and 21st St., New York City

Take a Combination Case of the

LARKIN SOAPS

and a "Chautauqua" Antique Oak

Reclining Easy Chair or Desk

ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL. From factory to family.

CASE CONTAINS . . .

100 Bars Sweet Home Soap. 10 Bars White Woolen Soap.
12 Packages Boraxine. 18 Cakes Finest Toilet Soaps.
Perfumes, Cold Cream, Tooth-Powder, Shaving Soap.

If changes in contents desired, write.

The Soaps at retail would cost $10.00
Either Premium is worth . $10.00
Both if at retail . . . $20.00
You get the Premium gratis. Both $10.

AND ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL. IF SATISFIED, YOU REMIT $10.00; IF DISAPPOINTED, HOLD GOODS SUBJECT TO OUR ORDER.

The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Our offer explained more fully in* The Outlook, Sept. 26th, Oct. 17th.

The ten-dollar box of Soap which the Larkin Mfg. Co. of Buffalo advertises so largely is well worth the money. The soap is good, and without a single premium would fetch its price. The premiums offered are the best of their kind, and are useful and ornamental articles which will please the most fastidious.—New York Observer.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

DIURETIC IN CALCULI

DR. HENRY M. WILSON, of Baltimore, ex-President Medical and Chirurgical Faculty of Maryland: "My experience in the use of BUFFALO LITHIA WATER has not been large, but it is of such a positive character that I do not hesitate to express my preference for it as a diuretic in Urinary Calculi over all other waters that I have ever used."

Sold by Druggists. Pamphlet free. Proprietor, Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.

What Brings Release
from Dirt and Grease?
Why, Don't You Know?

SAPOLIO

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.'S

NEW BOOKS

The American Revolution

By JOHN FISKE. Illustrated Edition. Containing 22 photogravures of portraits and paintings, 15 colored maps and plates, and 280 text cuts and maps. 2 vols., 8vo, $8.00.

Large-Paper Edition, limited to 250 copies, printed on English hand-made paper, 2 vols., large 8vo, $16.00, net.

These volumes, which are of a very high order of value and interest, are profusely illustrated with superb portraits, maps, plans of battles, pictures of historic buildings and scenes, medals, facsimiles, etc. They are very handsome books, suitable for Holiday gifts.

Chapters from a Life.

By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS, author of "A Singular Life," "The Gates Ajar," etc. With 24 portraits and other illustrations. 12mo, $1.50.

This is a remarkably attractive book of biographical and literary interest. It describes her girlhood, her entrance into the field of literature, her life at East Gloucester, and gives glimpses, sometimes full views, of Longfellow, Holmes, Whittier, Mr. Fields, Bishop Brooks, Mrs. Thaxter, Miss Larcom, Mrs. Lydia Maria Child, and others. The book is delightfully written, printed on excellent paper, and very tastefully bound.

Cape Cod

By HENRY D. THOREAU. Holiday Edition. Illustrated in water colors by Miss AMELIA M. WATSON. 2 vols., crown 8vo, very handsomely bound from designs by Mrs. WHITMAN, $5.00.

Thoreau's unequaled description of Cape Cod is supplemented by a hundred admirable illustrations, printed in colors on the margins. Their great variety, the happy choice of subjects, and their high artistic character, make this a notable Holiday book.

Marm Lisa

By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN, author of "The Birds' Christmas Carol," etc. 16mo, $1.00.

Little Marm Lisa is a fresh child-figure in fiction. The very interesting story describes the quickening of her clouded and burdened life till her pathetic faithfulness ripens, in the climax, into heroism. It is the longest story, and one of the best, Mrs. Wiggin has written.

The Country of the Pointed Firs

By SARAH ORNE JEWETT, author of "The Life of Nancy," "A White Heron," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

This summer story of a village on the coast of Maine and the adjacent islands forms one of the most delightful of Miss Jewett's books. It is marked by all those fine qualities which make her stories so charming a part of American literature.

Barker's Luck, and Other Stories

By BRET HARTE. 16mo, $1.25.

Another book of Mr. Harte's inimitable stories, of which the public never has quite enough.

A-Birding on a Bronco

A delightful book on birds aud their nests in Southern California, by FLORENCE A. MERRIAM, author of "Birds Through an Opera Glass," and "My Summer in a Mormon Village." With numerous illustrations. 16mo, $1.25.

Sold by Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston

11 EAST 17TH STREET, NEW YORK

The Pathfinder the national news review for BUSY PEOPLE. Condensed, classified, comprehensive, nonpartisan, clean. Gives facts, not opinions. Economizes time and money. $1 a year; trial 13 weeks, 15 cents. Address PATHFINDER, Washington, D. C.

FOR YOU AND YOURS

Whether for your own use in library or office, or to help the young folks in their studies, no single work in the world equals that splendid Library of Reference, the New

8 LARGE VOLUMES

Nearly 4,000 pages. Over 300 Colored Maps, Charts, and Diagrams

The Only Encyclopedia Strictly "Up-to-Date"

Every Volume Mechanically Perfect

Standard American Encyclopedia

Prepared under the editorial supervision of John Clark Ridpath, LL.D, author of "Ridpath's Histories," etc., assisted by a large corps of editors and over 100 eminent scholars and specialists.

Yours for 5 cents a day

A Superb Reference Work

covering the entire field of human knowledge, thought, and endeavor, including The Arts, Sciences, Philosophy, History, Biography, Geography, Astronomy, Geology, Meteorology, Navigation, Exploration, Discovery, Agriculture, Horticulture, Commerce, Finance, Ethnology, Zoology, Botany, Chemistry, Physiology, Mineralogy, Electricity, Theology, Law, Medicine, Political Economy, Statistics, Etc.

Fresh from the Press

THE NEW STANDARD AMERICAN ENCYCLOPEDIA is brought down to the present time, and contains hundreds of articles on subjects not treated in any other Encyclopedia. It also embraces over 500 pages of appendixes, including a Biographical Dictionary, a Dictionary of Technical terms, a Gazetteer of the United States, the Latest Census Reports, Late State and National Statistics, Results of State and Territorial Elections, Latest Statistics of the Population of the World, and a mine of miscellaneous information, political, social, civil, and military, all classified and arranged for ready reference.

Until Dec. 1st ONE DOLLAR

Secures IMMEDIATE POSSESSION of the entire set of 8 volumes. Balance payable $1.50 monthly for 1 year.

NOTE THESE LATE TOPICS

THE NEW STANDARD AMERICAN ENCYCLOPEDIA is the LATEST OF ALL general reference works. All others are from 5 to 10 years old, and are silent regarding RECENT topics of universal interest. THE "STANDARD AMERICAN" contains hundreds of NEW ARTICLES on subjects not treated in any of them, such, for instance, as "THE X-RAY," "ARGON," "HORSELESS CARRIAGES," "THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION," "COLOR PHOTOGRAPHY," etc. It also gives biographies of hundreds of people who have LATELY become famous, and whom the other encyclopedias do not mention, such, for instance, as PROF. ROENTGEN, discoverer of the "X-RAY," IAN MACLAREN, DR. NANSEN, the explorer, RUDYARD KIPLING. It embraces all that is useful in all the other encyclopedias with much they do not contain. It is the One Great, Practical Reference Library for the Professional and Business Man, the Teacher and the Student.

Magnificently Illustrated Throughout With over 3,500 engravings, including numerous engraved portraits of celebrities, and with over 300 colored maps and charts, delineating Continents, Empires, Countries, States, Cities, Towns, Citadels, Solar, Lunar, and Planetary Systems, and every portion of the known world, and forming a Complete and Indexed Atlas of the Globe.

OUR GREAT INTRODUCTORY OFFER

To secure widespread and favorable publicity for THE NEW STANDARD AMERICAN ENCYCLOPEDIA, we have decided to place a few introductory sets in each community throughout the country for comparison with all other reference works as to plan, scope, lateness of treatment, and general practical and educational value. We feel that every set thus placed will create a demand for others. While the distribution will be general in extent, it will last for a limited time only, after which our regular subscription sale will begin, at prices ranging from $48 to $72 a set, according to style of binding. Now, however, to quickly and thoroughly introduce the work, as above stated, we make the price merely nominal (about the cost of manufacture), the distribution being limited to the month of November, reserving the privilege of withdrawing the offer at any time when we consider a sufficient number of these introductory sets, at the special price, has been distributed.

How to Secure One of These Splendid Sets SEND $1 to THE ENCYCLOPEDIA PUBLISHING CO., 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City, and a full set of eight volumes of THE NEW STANDARD AMERICAN ENCYCLOPEDIA, in cloth binding, will be forwarded to you at once. The balance is payable at the rate of $1.50 monthly for one year, or about 5 cents a day. If you prefer the half-morocco binding, the monthly payment will be $2, and for full sheep, $2.50 per month for the year. We recommend the half-morocco style, which is particularly elegant and serviceable and will last a lifetime. If not as represented any set may be returned within ten days and money will be promptly refunded. Our confidence that the volumes will be cheerfully paid for is shown by sending a $48 set of books on payment of only $1. We also feel that you will thoroughly appreciate the superb new work and speak favorably of it to others. Sample pages and illustrations sent on application until the offer is withdrawn. Address

THE ENCYCLOPEDIA PUBLISHING CO. 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS' ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW BOOKS INCLUDES THE FOLLOWING:

SENTIMENTAL TOMMY

The Story of his Boyhood. By James M. Barrie. With 11 full-page Illustrations by William Hatherell. 12mo, $1.50.

"There is every reason to think that 'Sentimental Tommy,' J. M. Barrie's story, is going to have a wider interest than any he has written, with, perhaps, the one exception of 'The Little Minister.' Personally we prefer the new story. The subtle mixture of humor and pathos is unusual, even with this master of those qualities."—The Critic.

THE LAST QUARTER CENTURY IN THE UNITED STATES—1870-1895

By E. Benjamin Andrews, President of Brown University. With 350 Illustrations. 2 vols., 8vo, $6.00.

President Andrews' work is absolutely unique. Never before have the many history-making events of this period been gathered together in a historical narrative by a competent hand. The illustrations, prepared at a great expense, are remarkable for their combination of artistic charm with absolute historical accuracy. Since its publication in SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE the History has been thoroughly revised and increased in size almost one-half, with 100 additional illustrations.

MRS. CLIFF'S YACHT

By Frank R. Stockton. Illustrated by A. Forestier. 12mo, $1.50.

"Nowhere have Mr. Stockton's powers been exerted with better effect than in this book. In its quaint humor and its romantic adventure it makes a very noticeable book indeed, and one which cannot fail to widen its author's reputation."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

THE EDGE OF THE ORIENT. By Robert Howard Russell. With 130 Illustrations, chiefly from photographs. 12mo, $2.00.

THE SPRIGHTLY ROMANCE OF MARSAC. By Molly Elliot Seawell. Illustrated by Gustave Verbeek. 12mo, $1.25.

COLONIAL DAYS IN OLD NEW YORK. By Alice Morse Earle. 12mo, $1.25.

PROBLEMS OF MODERN DEMOCRACY. By E. L. Godkin. 8vo, $2.00.

MY VILLAGE. By E. Boyd Smith. With nearly 150 Illustrations from Original Drawings by the Author. An artist's sketches of French rural life. 12mo, $2.00.

IN OLE VIRGINIA. By Thomas Nelson Page. With 24 full-page Illustrations by A. B. Frost, Howard Pyle, W. T. Smedley, C. S. Reinhart, A. Castaigne, and B. W. Clinedinst. 12mo, $2.50.

LOVE IN OLD CLOATHES and Other Stories. By H. C. Bunner. With 12 full-page Illustrations by A. Castaigne, W. T. Smedley, and Orson Lowell. 12mo, $1.50.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 153-157 Fifth Avenue, New York

The Essential Monogram

Registered Trade-Mark

It is almost indispensable, since the star of decoration in household linens has risen so high above the artistic horizon, to have all articles, from table damasks to bed linen, embroidered in white with the owner's monogram or initials. Equally essential that these be correct in design, properly placed, and of perfect workmanship.

Our staff of artists and embroiderers is ready to carry out in exquisite fashion your every embroidery wish as to lettering.

Prices are very reasonable. Our catalogue shows a good variety of suitable styles of letters and monograms for all purposes.

It is mailed free on request

James McCutcheon & Co.

"THE LINEN STORE"

14 West Twenty-third Street, N. Y.

For the Church, the Social Meeting, and the Home

The Plymouth Hymnal

Edited by Lyman Abbott

With the co-operation of

Herbert Vaughan Abbott and Charles H. Morse

Rev. Geo. W. Belsey, First Congregational Church, Geneva, O., says: "I find it to be the most complete and satisfactory hymn-book of which I have any knowledge. No book is better fitted for congregational use, and none will find a larger place in the esteem of our churches."

Rev. Frank E. Kenyon, First Congregational Church, Denmark, Iowa, says: "The Plymouth Hymnal has been in use in our church services for five months. We have found it entirely satisfactory in every respect. Our pleasure in the book increases every time we use it."

For Sunday-Schools, Prayer-Meetings, and Missions

The Plymouth Sunday-School Hymnal

Edited by Thomas G. Shearman and Walton N. Ellis

This book has had the test of experience in Sunday-schools and prayer-meetings, and is enthusiastically approved wherever it has been used or seen.

Specimen pages of either of the above books will be gladly sent to any one on application. A returnable copy of either will be sent FREE to any pastor, teacher, or choirmaster, with a view to introduction.

THE OUTLOOK CO., 13 Astor Place, New York

The Macmillan Company's New Illustrated Books

A NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "BIRDCRAFT"

A Book for Young People

TOMMY-ANNE AND THE THREE HEARTS

By MABEL OSGOOD WRIGHT

Author of "Birdcraft," "Friendship of Nature," etc. With many Illustrations by Albert D. Blashfield. 12mo. Cloth. $1.50.

"The ways and habits of birds and beasts, trees and herbs, and wind and frost, are the principal theme of 'Tommy-Anne and the Three Hearts,' the heroine—'Tommy' for tomboy and 'Anne' short for Diana—is doubtless drawn from Mrs. Wright's memories of her own childhood. . . . The book is calculated to interest children in nature, and grown folks, too, will find themselves catching the author's enthusiasm. As for Tommy-Anne herself, she is bound to make friends wherever she is known. The more of such books as these, the better for the children. One 'Tommy-Anne' is worth a whole shelf of the average juvenile literature."—The Critic.

"The illustrations which Mr. Albert D. Blashfield has drawn for the book have a quaint simplicity of manner that is very much in place."—The Critic.

"The ways of all wild living creatures have a fascinating interest for most children, but, unfortunately, their parents and friends are usually too ignorant to answer their reasonable questions. To such inquiring minds 'Tommy-Anne and the Three Hearts,' by Mabel Osgood Wright, should be a boon. They will hear the unappreciated garden snake's plea for toleration, and the mole's accounts of his own good deeds. They will have a peep into Bob-o-link's wardrobe, amd a glimpse of Madame Duck's nursery, and they will learn many surprising things about our small familiar beasts and the common plants which we all think we know. A pleasant thread of story binds together the bits of information, making them easier to hold, and the child who reads will be charmed, while he is instructed and led on to make new discoveries for himself."—The Nation.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR

BIRDCRAFT

A field book of two hundred song, game, and water birds. By MABEL OSGOOD WRIGHT. With full-page plates, containing 128 birds in their natural colors, and other illustrations. Small quarto. Cloth, $3.00.

THE FRIENDSHIP OF NATURE

A New England chronicle of birds and flowers. By MABEL OSGOOD WRIGHT. 18mo. Cloth, gilt top, 75 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

THE CASTLES OF ENGLAND

Their Story and Structure

By SIR JAMES D. MACKENZIE, Bart.

With 40 full-page Plates and upwards of 150 Illustrations in the text, and many Plans. 2 volumes, imperial 8vo, cloth, [illegible]

 This is the first complete record of the Castles of England. While the previous works on the subject have only dealt with about eighty existing structures, Sir James Mackenzie here gives the history of no fewer than 660 castles. Many of these are still habitable, many are in ruins, while of others all that is left is their history and record of their sites. The present work, which is adorned with forty full-page plates, more than 150 illustrations in the text, and many plans, is an indispensable addition to every public and private library.

Illustrated Edition.

GRAY DAYS AND GOLD IN ENGLAND AND SCOTLAND

By WILLIAM WINTER

Author of "Shakespeare's England," "Life and Art of Edwin Booth," etc.

A New Edition revised throughout, with twelve full-page photogravure plates from negatives made for this edition, and eighty-nine other illustrations, many of which are from original drawings made especially for illustrating this work.

Crown octavo. Bound in Gray Buckram, with rich design in gold, and full gilt edges. Price, $2.50.

First Edition exhausted on Day of Publication.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY

A BOOK OF OLD ENGLISH BALLADS

With an Accompaniment of Decorative Drawings

By GEORGE WHARTON EDWARDS

And an Introduction

By HAMILTON W. MABIE

The illustrations consist of fifty decorative head and tail pieces, and twenty-nine full-page plates, which are printed in color. Beautifully printed on Deckel Edged paper. 12mo, cloth—gilt. Gilt top, $2.00.

☞ Also an Edition de Luxe, printed on hand-made paper, and limited to 100 copies. Bound in Crushed Buckram, paper label. Octavo. Price, $5.00, net.

IMPORTANT AND VALUABLE WORK ON MODERN ART

THE HISTORY OF MODERN PAINTING

By RICHARD MUTHER

Professor of Art History at the University of Breslau, late Keeper of the Royal Collection of Prints and Engravings at Munich.

Imperial 8vo, 2,304 pages. With over 1,300 Illustrations. 3 vols., cloth, $20.00.

"It is well that we should have a translation of Professor Muther's 'History of Modern Painting,' if only because it is the sole book in existence which professes to take anything like a historical survey of European art during the last hundred years."

"There need be no hesitation in pronouncing this work of Muther's the most authoritative that exists on the subject, the most complete, the best informed of all the general histories of modern art."—The Times, London.

By Rudyard Kipling

SOLDIER STORIES

By RUDYARD KIPLING

With decorative Head and Tail Pieces, and Twenty-one Full-page Illustrations by A. S. Hartrick. 12mo. Cloth. $1.50.

CONTAINING

With the Main Guard,
The Drums of the Fore and Aft,
The Man Who Was,
The Courting of Dinah Shadd,
The Incarnation of Krishna Mulvaney,
The Taking of Lungtungpen,
The Madness of Private Ortheris.

A Notable Art Book

EUROPEAN ARCHITECTURRE

A Historical Study

By RUSSELL STURGIS, A.M., Ph.D., F.A.I.A.

President of the Fine Art Federation of New York; Past President of the Architectural League of New York; Vice-President of the National Sculptural Society; Honorary Member of the Mural Painters, etc., etc.

Illustrated with 9 full-page Albert-type plates and 257 engravings, many of them the full size of the page, and others printed in the text. 8vo, Cloth, gilt top, $4.00.

A NEW EDITION OF BOSWELL

THE LIFE OF SAMUEL JOHNSON, LL.D.

By JAMES BOSWELL, ESQ.

With Malone's Notes and Illustrations. Edited with Notes and Introduction by Augustine Birrell, Q.C., M.P. With a portrait and a frontispiece to each volume. 6 vols. 16mo, Cloth, uncut, gilt top, $6.00.

 "To say outright that a book or an edition is good is to be bold. . . . There are, however, readers who like to have their opinions, like their clothes, ready made, and for such there can be no harm in saying that a good little edition of Boswell's 'Life of Johnson' has just been issued by the Macmillan Company in six small post-octavo volumes."—MR G. W. SMALLEY in the New York Herald.

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY, 66 Fifth Avenue, New York

JUST PUBLISHED

REV. DR. VAN DYKE'S YALE LECTURES

The Gospel for an Age of Doubt

BEING THE YALE LECTURES ON PREACHING FOR 1896

By HENRY VAN DYKE, D.D.

Author of "The Reality of Religion," "Story of the Psalms," "Little Rivers," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.75.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS AND OF EMINENT DIVINES

"The book is going to do a splendid work for the entire Christian ministry."—LYMAN ABBOTT, D.D.

"The book will also teach students of theology how best to present to doubting minds the ideas which to themselves are eternal verities."—Home Journal.

"The book is one of rare charm, both as to style and as to doctrine, and it ought to be read by every intelligent inquirer into the truths of religion."—The Providence Journal.

"The special characteristics of Dr. Van Dyke's treatment are three: Intense modernity—a recognition of the actual present as affecting questions which are as old as Christianity; intense personality—not the intrusion of his own, but the quick recognition of the fact that these are not abstract topics, but questions vitally personal to every reader."—The Evangelist.

"The book is truly wonderful for its width of reading, its radical clearness of thought, and its charm of style. It is a profoundly vital message to the ministry of our time."—GEORGE A. GORDON, D.D., The Old South Church, Boston.

(FROM A PERSONAL LETTER TO THE AUTHOR)

"Its literary clearness and singular cogency will make it a most helpful and valuable contribution to our theological literature."—RIGHT REV. HENRY C. POTTER, D.D., Bishop of New York.

"The grinning death's head of the old theology has been painted an inch thick with such subterfuges as this, and to this rosy complexion, it has come at last."—The New Unity (Unitarian) Chicago.

"The volume is one of the solidest and most quickening of all those which bear the title of 'Yale Lectures on Preaching.' It is a grand book."—GEORGE B. STEVENS, D.D., Professor of Theology, Yale.

"It is all so brilliant, painstaking, and scholarly that I have been swept along with an enjoyment not often felt. The last chapter on the Election to Service seems to me to announce, as almost no other utterance has done, the gospel of the present time."—FRANCIS G. PEABODY, D.D., Professor of Theology, Harvard.

"The author in his preface frankly confesses his wish to say something that might reach beyond his immediate audience, and be of help to the wider circle of men and women who care for the vital problems of faith. The task he has thus set himself he has admirably accomplished in these eight noble lectures, masterly in conception and treatment, and full of the truth as it is in Jesus, in all its profound spirituality and divine simplicity. . . . The book is one that will do untold good in stirring and quickening to new life souls paralyzed by the numbing chill of doubt. Its message rings true and clear; it moves and penetrates, and is instinct with the cheering and reviving spirit of divine life and hope and joy."—The Christian Advocate.

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

SOME HOLIDAY BOOKS

POEMS BY JOHANNA AMBROSIUS

Translated from the Twenty-sixth German Edition by Mary J. Safford. Portrait. 16mo. cloth, $1.50.

"How she acquired the exquisite literary style she possesses will not be explained this side of the hereafter. . . . Nothing so precious has come from the Fatherland since the hymns of Luther and the writings of Goethe."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

"Here is a woman who, by sheer force of genius, has risen in a few months from a common laborer of the fields to be known as one of Germany's most popular modern poets The striking thing in her poems is their lyrical quality. Whether the thought be sad or hopeful, the singing quality of the verse is ever apparent."—New York Tribune.

CONSTANTINOPLE

By Edwin A. Grosvenor, Professor of European History at Amherst College; formerly Professor of History at Robert College, Constantinople. With an Introduction by General Lew Wallace. With two hundred and fifty Illustrations of important places, rulers, and noted people of Ancient Constantinople 2 vols., royal 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $10.00: half morocco, $14.00.

THE WORLD BEAUTIFUL

FIRST AND SECOND SERIES. By Lilian Whiting, author of "From Dreamland Sent." 2 vols., each 16mo, cloth, $1.00. White and gold, $1.25.

PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON

An Autobiography (1834–1859) and a Memoir by his wife (1859–1894), with a portrait. Demy 8vo, cloth, $3.00.

MODERN FRENCH LITERATURE

By Benjamin W. Wells, Ph.D., author of "Modern German Literature." 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

OLD COLONY DAYS

By May Alden Ward, author of "Dante," "Petrarch," etc. 16mo. cloth, $1.25.

SIX MODERN WOMEN. Psychological Sketches.

By Laura Marholm Hansson. Translated from the German by Hermione Ramsden. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Contents: Sonia Kovalevsky.—George Egerton.—Eleonora Duse.—Amalie Skram.—Marie Bashkirtseff.—A. Ch. Edgren-Leffler.

LEAVES FROM JULIANA HORATIA EWING'S "CANADA HOME"

Gathered by Elizabeth S. Tucker. With illustrations by the author and facsimiles of Mrs. Ewing's color sketches made while at Fredericton. 4to, cloth, $3.00.

THE PURITAN IN ENGLAND AND NEW ENGLAND

By Ezra Hoyt Byington, D.D., Member of the American Society of Church History. With an Introduction by Alexander McKenzie, D.D. 8vo, cloth 3 illustrations, $2.00.

MOTHER, BABY, AND NURSERY

By Dr. Genevieve Tucker. Fully illustrated. Small 4to, cloth, $1.50.

LITTLE DAUGHTER OF THE SUN

By Julia P. Dabney. Illustrated by the author. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

NUGÆ LITTERARIÆ; OR, BRIEF ESSAYS ON LITERARY, SOCIAL, AND OTHER THEMES

By William Mathews, author of "Getting on in the World," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

AN ECLIPSE PARTY IN AFRICA

Chasing Summer across the Equator in the U. S. S. Pensacola

By Eben J. Loomis, of the U. S. Scientific Expedition to West Africa, 1889–90. With an Introduction by Prof. David P. Todd, M.A., Ph.D. 84 illustrations. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $4.50.

REV. J. H. INGRAHAM'S WORKS

New Illustrated Edition. With illustrations and cover designs by Victor A. Searles.

THE PRINCE OF THE HOUSE OF DAVID; or, Three Years in the Holy City. Twenty-five illustrations.

Being a series of the letters of Adina, a Jewess of Alexandria, supposed to be sojourning in Jerusalem in the days of Herod, addressed to her father, a wealthy Jew in Egypt and relating, as if by an eye-witness, all the scenes and wonderful incidents in the Life of Jesus from his baptism to his crucifixion.

THE PILLAR OF FIRE; or, Israel in Bondage. Twenty illustrations.

THE THRONE OF DAVID; from the Consecration of the Shepherd of Bethlehem to the Rebellion of Prince Absalom. Twenty illustrations.

Each volume, 12mo, cloth, gilt, $2.00.

THE BLACK DOG AND OTHER STORIES

By A. G. Plympton, author of "Dear Daughter Dorothy," "Betty, a Butterfly," etc. Illustrated by the author. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

THE WONDERFUL FAIRIES OF THE SUN

By Ernest Vincent Wright. With thirty illustrations by Cora M. Norman. 4to, cloth, $1.25.

NAN AT CAMP CHICOPEE

By Myra Sawyer Hamlin. Illustrated by Jessie McDermott. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

JERRY THE BLUNDERER

By Lily F. Wesselhoeft, author of "Sparrow the Tramp," etc. Illustrated from photographs taken from life. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

A CAPE MAY DIAMOND

By Evelyn Raymond, author of "The Little Lady of the Horse" and "The Mushroom Cave." Illustrated by Lilian Crawford True. Square 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

JOEL: A BOY OF GALILEE

By Annie Fellows Johnston. With ten illustrations by Searles. Square 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

A JOLLY GOOD SUMMER

By Mary P. Wells Smith, author of "Jolly Good Times," etc. Illustrated by Jessie McDermott. Square 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

IN THE OKEFENOKEE

A Story of War Time and the Great Georgia Swamp. By Louis Pendleton, author of "The Wedding Garment," etc. Illustrated by Searles. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

ANOTHER GIRL'S EXPERIENCE

A Story for Girls. By Leigh Webster. Illustrated by Jessie McDermott. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

THE CAPTAIN OF THE KITTIEWINK

A Cape Ann Story for Boys. By Herbert D. Ward. Illustrated. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

IN MY NURSERY

Rhymes, Chimes, and Jingles for Children. By Laura E. Richards, author of "The Toto Books." Profusely illustrated. Small 4to, cloth, $1.25.

COMIC TRAGEDIES

Written by "Jo" and "Meg," and acted by the "Little Women." With a "Foreword" by "Meg," and portraits of "Jo" and "Meg." 16mo, cloth, uniform with "Little Women," $1.50.

THE COOLIDGE BOOKS. 10 vols. $1.25 each.
THE "WHAT KATY DID" BOOKS. 5 vols. $1.25 each.
FLORA L. SHAW'S STORIES. 4 vols. $1.00 each.

EDWARD E. HALE'S STORIES. For Boys. 5 vols. $1.00 each.
JEAN INGELOW'S STORIES. 5 vols. $1.25 each.
MRS. MOULTON'S STORIES. 5 vols. $1.25 each.

AT ALL BOOKSTORES.
POSTPAID ON RECEIPT OF PRICE.

ROBERTS BROTHERS, BOSTON

CONSTANTINOPLE. THE GALATA BRIDGE
Where many Armenians were recently butchered. From Article on "AN EYE-WITNESS TO ARMENIAN MASSACRES."

A NEW DECADE OF Scribner's Magazine

The features of the coming twelvemonth, which have been two years in preparation, offer in every way a better programme than it has ever been the good fortune of this magazine to promise its readers.

LONDON AS SEEN BY C. D. GIBSON

The artist here will, for the first time, appear as a writer. He has written and illustrated six articles giving the results of his visit to London last summer for SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE. The illustrations are the best Mr. Gibson has yet done, and present portraits of the most striking figures in London life.

THE CONDUCT OF GREAT BUSINESSES

To the average American his business occupation is one of absorbing interest. He wants to know how other business men manage their affairs and push great enterprises to success. No separate establishments will be described, but the authors have made diligent study of the most successful firms in each branch, and have gone to the fountainhead of information. The illustrations have been secured with the utmost care, and represent the actual scenes. This year in SCRIBNER'S the American people will see itself at work.

LIFE IN AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES

These articles are not cut-and-dried accounts of the colleges as institutions, but tell how undergraduates have lived and how they live now. College men will pleasurably anticipate these articles from the names of their authors: Judge Henry E. Howland writing on "UNDERGRADUATE LIFE AT YALE;" Mr. James W. Alexander on "PRINCETON;" and Robert Grant and Edward S. Martin on "HARVARD." The artists of the Magazine who will illustrate the articles have lived for some time in close contact with the student life at each college, making sketches and studies of actual rooms and scenes.

JAPAN AND CHINA SINCE THE WAR

The interest in Li Hung Chang's visit, and the rumor that American capital is going into Oriental cotton mills, shows how general is the wish to know about them as they are to-day. Mr. Stephen Bonsal, an experienced traveler and writer, was commissioned by the Magazine to look into Japanese industrial conditions, to learn in what direction China has been affected by the war, to describe the changes going on.

SHORT STORIES BY GEORGE W. CABLE

Beyond the fiction before enumerated comes a series of four short stories by Mr. Cable, the only ones he has written for many years past, and prepared exclusively for the Magazine.

Thus, with a new font of type, improved mechanical facilities, and plans interesting a wider range of readers, begins the New Decade for Scribner's Magazine.

It is impossible in a small space to even mention the many attractive features for 1897. A beautiful illustrated booklet has been prepared, which will be sent, postage paid, on request.

BEGIN YOUR SUBSCRIPTION WITH THE CHRISTMAS NUMBER. PRICE, $3.00 A YEAR

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, NEW YORK

PICTURES OF OUT-OF-DOOR LIFE BY A. B. FROST

At appropriate seasons through the year Mr. Frost will furnish groups of characteristic drawings. The advent of Spring will be signalized by some Fishing Pictures in a new vein: in the Fall a set of Hunting Pictures will appear, also Golf and Christmas Pictures at appropriate seasons.

THE ART OF TRAVEL

A well-illustrated series will give suggestions and data on "OCEAN AND LAND TRAVEL," by Lewis Morris Iddings; Mr. Richard Harding Davis will also write on "TRAVELERS ONE MEETS: THEIR WAYS AND METHODS." The illustrations, by American and foreign artists, will be highly pertinent.

A NOVEL BY RICHARD HARDING DAVIS

The hero of "Soldiers of Fortune" is a young American engineer who is sent to a small South American Republic to superintend the mines of an American company. The rich American owner of the mines and his two daughters are brought into the action, and there is a love tale running through the whole romance. There is not a slow page, and the scenes will be illustrated throughout by C. D. Gibson, the author's friend.

THE UNQUIET SEX

Each sex is likely to think the other the unquiet one. The author in these bright articles, Mrs. Helen Watterson Moody, will write on "WOMAN AND REFORMS," "THE COLLEGE-BRED WOMAN," "WOMAN'S CLUBS," and "THE CASE OF MARIA," a paper on domestic service.

THE STORY OF A PLAY. BY W. D. HOWELLS

Mr. Howells is never so thoroughly charming as when he is in his delightful vein of light comedy. He gives us now his best novelette produced in this vein. It sparkles from first to last with amusing situations and dialogues that are full of sentiment.

AN EYE-WITNESS TO ARMENIAN MASSACRES

The Magazine has been fortunate in securing a truthful narrative, by a writer for whose authority it can vouch, of the recent Constantinople massacres. For the first time is published an eye-witness's account, absolutely trustworthy of one of the most horrible events in human history. The article will appear in the January issue.

THE YEAR'S FRONTISPIECES

Beginning in January the frontispieces will present leading scenes in the world's greatest novels, so that the result will be a series of the finest imaginative drawings. Each scene has been undertaken by an artist in sympathy with it. Among the artists will be: ABBEY, VIERGE, PYLE, RAVEN-HILL, FROST, HATHERELL, VAN SCHAICK, GIBSON, HOLE, CASTAIGNE, VOLK.

J. B. Lippincott Company's New Holiday Publications

MYTHS AND LEGENDS OF OUR OWN LAND

By Charles M. Skinner. Illustrated with photogravures. Two volumes in box. 12mo. Polished buckram, gilt top, deckle edges, $3.00; half calf or half morocco, $6.00.

The bibliography of American Legends is slight, and these tales have been gathered from sources the most diverse—records, histories, newspapers, magazines, oral narrative—in every case reconstructed. The pursuit of them has been so long that a claim may be set forth for some measure of completeness.

HALF-HOURS OF TRAVEL AT HOME AND ABROAD

America, Europe, Asia, and Africa. Selected and arranged by Charles Morris. Uniform with Morris' Half-Hour Series. Four volumes. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. Cloth, gilt top, $6.00; half calf, $10.00; three-quarters calf, $13.00.

The widely varying diversity is what interests us in the works of travelers, and in the present volumes has been gathered a series of descriptive passages covering all regions of the several continents.

BIRD-LAND ECHOES

By Charles Conrad Abbott, author of "The Birds About Us," etc. Profusely illustrated by William Everett Cram. Crown 8vo. Cloth, gilt top, $2.00.

"The triumph of his spontaneous art in writing is to impart to the reader a goodly proportion of the love he bears to all birds, 'whether they are commonplace or rare, stupid or entertaining, gentle or vicious, large or small.' The volume is further enriched by about a hundred portraits of birds from the skillful pencil of William Everett Cram.—Philadelphia Press.

THE TRUE GEORGE WASHINGTON

By Paul Leicester Ford, author of "The Hon. Peter Stirling," etc. With 24 full-page illustrations. Crown 8vo. Cloth, deckle edges, $2.00. Three-quarters levant, $5.00.

The present book has been prepared to show the human side of the great American—his family life and his love affairs; what he ate and wore, who were his friends and enemies, his amusements and his illnesses, and much else of a personal nature. In this it is a radical departure from all previous biographies, and will include much new material never yet printed, as well as many interesting illustrations.

HISTORICAL TALES

Two new volumes in this Series

GREECE. ROME

By Charles Morris. Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth, per volume, $1.25. Previously issued: America, England, France, Germany.

Each volume contains from twenty-five to thirty stories concerning well-authenticated incidents, passages of history, or personal adventure in the different countries named. The stories are told in excellent style, the truth of history is carefully preserved, and each volume is admirably illustrated. The volumes are issued in uniform style.

Edition de Luxe.

A LITERARY PILGRIMAGE

AMONG THE HAUNTS OF FAMOUS BRITISH AUTHORS

LITERARY SHRINES

THE HAUNTS OF SOME FAMOUS AMERICAN AUTHORS

By Dr. Theodore Wolfe, Ph.D. With many extra photogravure illustrations. Printed on Dutch hand-made paper. Two vols. 8vo. Buckram, $7.00 net.

Seventh Edition of the Regular Issue. Two volumes. Illustrated with four photogravures. 12mo. Crushed buckram, gilt top, deckle edges, per volume, $1.25; half calf or half morocco, $3.00 per volume.

A COMIC HISTORY OF ENGLAND

From the Druids to the Reign of Henry VIII. By Bill Nye. Profusely illustrated. Crown 8vo. Cloth, $1.25.

"This comic history of England was evidently written in the author's best vein of humor, as well as with the strong attempt of making a funny history an instructive one; for, throughout, he follows and adheres to dates and events with an historian's accuracy."—Boston Courier.

ROBERT BURNS'S POEMS AND SONGS COMPLETE

Chronologically arranged. Notes, glossaries, and index by W. Scott Douglas. The fourth volume containing a new Life of Burns by Professor Nichol. Four volumes, with 12 photogravures after drawings by Marshall Brown. Cloth, $5.00; half calf or half morocco, $10.00.

THE THOUSAND AND ONE NIGHTS, OR ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENT

Translated by Edward William Lane. With an introduction by Joseph Jacobs, and illustrations by Frank Brangwyn. In six volumes. 16mo. Cloth, $6.00; half calf or half morocco, $15.00.

THE OPERA

A sketch of the Development of the Opera from the Earlier Times. With Full Description of every work in the Modern Repertory. By R. A. Streatfeild, B.A. With an introduction by J. A. Fuller-Maitland. 8vo. Cloth, $2.00.

TWO HEALTH SEEKERS IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

By William A. Edwards, M.D., and Beatrice Harraden. 12mo. Cloth, ornamental, gilt top, uncut, $1.00.

MR. WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE'S

Comedies, Histories, Tragedies, Poems. Printed from new plates and published in connection with George Newnes, Ltd., London. Twelve volumes in a case. 16mo. Cloth, in cloth case, $9.00; full morocco limp, morocco case, $12.50; half morocco, $20.00; half levant, $25.00.

GIL BLAS OF SANTILLANE

A New Edition. Four volumes. Illustrated. 16mo. Cloth, $4.00; half calf or half morocco, $10.00.

DICTIONARY OF PHRASE AND FABLE

By E. Cobham Brewer. New edition, revised, corrected, and enlarged. Crown 8vo. Half morocco, $3.50.

UNDER TWO FLAGS

By "Ouida." A New Edition. With 8 full-page illustrations specially drawn by G. MONTBARD. Two volumes. Cloth, $3.00; half morocco, $6.00.

To meet the demand of many admirers of Ouida's novels, the publishers take pleasure in announcing an entirely new edition printed from newly set type on deckle-edge paper. The illustrations have been drawn specially for this edition by G. Montbard, one of the best-known modern illustrators.

THE MURDER OF DELICIA

By Marie Corelli, author of "Barabbas," "Sorrows of Satan," etc. 12mo. Buckram, $1.25.

"Her style is so clear-cut, keen, and incisive, so trenchant and yet so delicate, so easily wielded—so like a javelin, in short—that that one cannot but be fascinated throughout the book."—Philadelphia Recorder.

JANE

By Marie Corelli. In the Lotos Library. Illustrated. 16mo. Buckram. 75 cents.

THE MISTRESS OF BRAE FARM

By Rosa Nouchette Carey, author of "The Old, Old Story," "Sir Godfrey's Granddaughters," etc. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25.

A GOLDEN AUTUMN

By Mrs. Alexander. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25.

"This author's stories are always worth reading."—Boston Congregationalist.

A TRIUMPH OF DESTINY

By Julia Helen Twells, Jr. 12mo. Cloth, deckle edges, $1.25.

Miss Twells is a new star in the firmament of fiction which shines with the brilliancy due to first ideas and young enthusiasm.

JOHN LITTLEJOHN, OF J

Being in particular an account of his remarkable entanglement with the King's intrigues against General Washington. By George Morgan. 12mo. Cloth extra, deckle edges, $1.25.

JUVENILES

CAPTAIN CHAP; OR, THE ROLLING STONES

By Frank R. Stockton, author of "Rudder Grange," "A Jolly Fellowship," etc. With illustrations by CHARLES H. STEPHENS. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

THE ORACLE OF BAAL

A Narrative of Some Curious Events in the Life of Professor Horatio Carmichael, M.A. By J. Provand Webster. With numerous illustrations by WARWICK GOBLE. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

THROUGH THICK AND THIN

A Story of a School Campaign. By Andrew Home. Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25.

SWEPT OUT TO SEA

By David Ker, author of "The Wizard King," etc. With illustrations by J. AYTON SYMINGTON. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

PHILIPPA

By Mrs. Molesworth, author of "Olivia." Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25.

BETTY OF WYE

By Amy E. Blanchard, author of "Twenty Little Maidens," "Two Girls," "Girls Together," etc. With illustrations by FLORENCE P. ENGLAND. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25.

CATALINA, ART STUDENT

By Laura T. Mead. With full-page illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25.

THE BLACK TOR

By George Manville Fenn. With numerous illustrations. Crown 8vo. Cloth, $1.50.

PRINCE LITTLE BOY, AND OTHER TALES OUT OF FAIRYLAND

A New Edition. By S. Weir Mitchell, M.D. Illus. 4to. Cloth, extra, $1.50.

THE MYSTERY OF THE ISLAND

A Tale of Bush and Pampas, Wreck and Treasure-Trove. By Henry Kingsley, author of "Geoffrey Hamlyn," "Ravenshoe," etc. First American Edition. With illustrations by WARNE BROWNE. 12mo. Cloth, $1.25.

MOLESWORTH LIBRARY FOR GIRLS

"Olivia," "Philippa." Two volumes. Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth, $2.50.

BLANCHARD LIBRARY FOR GIRLS

"Two Girls," "Girls Together," "Betty of Wye." Three volumes in a box. Illustrated. Cloth, $3.75.

TWO LITTLE WOODEN SHOES

By "Ouida." Uniform with "Bimbi" and "Dog of Flanders." With illustrations by EDMUND H. GARRETT. Small 4to, $1.50.

Upon receipt of postal card mentioning The Outlook, we will take pleasure in sending you our Illustrated Christmas Catalogue

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, 715 and 717 Market Street, Philadelphia

History for Ready Reference and Topical Reading

IN FIVE IMPERIAL VOLUMES

By J. N. LARNED, Ex-Pres. Am. Library Association

☞ Giving History on All Topics in the Exact Words of the Historians Themselves

This work contains the choicest selections, upon thousands of topics, from those historians whose writings have been accorded the highest place by the common consent of mankind.

In this work, therefore, we have the Literature of History, with the fascination, interest, and charm of our great historical writers.

Its attractions, especially to the young, in forming a taste for the best of literature, cannot possibly be surpassed.

It gives the source (i. e., title, author, volume, page, or place) of every excerpt. The power and extent of literal quotation are shown in this work as in no other; five thousand volumes contributing their choicest selections, while references are made to over seven thousand more.

The unexcelled historical maps ; its system of Cross-Reference and Non-repetition, making it equivalent to a work, without these features, of very many volumes; the exact text of National Constitutions and great Historical Documents ; the extensive Chronologies; the Time and Labor-saving features of its unique system of Ready Reference ; the acknowledged " scholarly discrimination " shown throughout—all unite in making it one of the greatest and most valuable works ever published. It represents in its entire make-up the worth, the beauty, and the dignity of history.

Attested, as to its superiority, by thousands, representatives of every department of human activity.

In the Ministry Where the Dictionary goes, this History should go. The two books come nearer making a complete library than any other two books in the world. Bishop J. H. VINCENT, D.D., LL.D.

In Education No other work of the kind is comparable with it. Prest. CHARLES KENDALL ADAMS, LL.D., University of Wisconsin.

In Legislation I take pleasure in saying that I have examined Larned's "History for Ready Reference" and find it not only a valuable historical ready reference work, but a cyclopædia of great value in all related matters. NELSON DINGLEY, Chairman Ways & Means Com.

In Finance I consider "History for Ready Reference" a thoroughly valuable work because of the manner of the arrangement of the material contained in it and the thoroughness with which that material has been selected. JAMES F. ECKELS, Comptroller of the Currency.

For Economy It is of especial value to those who feel that they must economize in books, as it makes available for them the resources of the largest library. Prest. A. V. V. RAYMOND, D.D., LL.D., Union College.

In Journalism The almost incomparable usefulness of this book. ALBERT SHAW, Editor Review of Reviews.

Write for pamphlet. Sent, carriage free, to responsible subscribers on easy payments. Solicitors employed.

THE C. A. NICHOLS CO., Publishers, Springfield, Mass.

Houghton, Mifflin & Company

ILLUSTRATED BOOKS

The American Revolution

By John Fiske. Illustrated Edition. Noble volumes, containing 22 superb Photogravures of portraits and paintings, 15 Colored Maps and Plates, and 280 Text Cuts and Maps. 2 vols., 8vo, $8.00.

A work of remarkable historic, literary, and artistic value.

Friar Jerome's Beautiful Book

By Thomas Bailey Aldrich. Artistically printed in black and red, and bound in antique leather, handsomely stamped. 16mo, $1.50.

Harriet Beecher Stowe

Her writings, in a New Riverside Edition. From new plates. Thoroughly edited and rearranged, with a Biographical Sketch and Notes. With Portraits, Views of Mrs. Stowe's Homes, and other illustrations, on the engraved title-pages. In 16 vols., 12mo, handsomely bound, cloth, gilt top, $1.50 each.

Cape Cod

By Henry D. Thoreau. Holiday Edition. Two remarkably beautiful volumes, with 100 charming water colors by Miss Amelia M. Watson. 2 vols. Crown 8vo, $5.00.

A Year in the Fields

Eight of John Burroughs's delightful outdoor papers, with 20 charming pictures from photographs by Clifton Johnson. 12mo, gilt top, $1.50.

FICTION

Sister Jane, Her Friends and Acquaintances

A new character as good as "Uncle Remus," and a very interesting story, by Joel Chandler Harris, author of the "Uncle Remus" books, etc. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

Marm Lisa

One of the best of all the charming stories by Kate Douglas Wiggin, author of "The Birds' Christmas Carol," etc. 16mo, $1.00.

The Country of the Pointed Firs

The most delightful of all the books of New England life and character by Sarah Orne Jewett, author of "The Life of Nancy," "A White Heron," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

The Supply at St. Agatha's

By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps. With Illustrations. Square 12mo, gilt top, $1.00.

An exceedingly good story, in an attractive volume.

The Story of Aaron

A Sequel to "Little Mr. Thimblefinger" and "Mr. Rabbit at Home." By Joel Chandler Harris, author of the "Uncle Remus" books. With 25 Illustrations by Oliver Herford. Square 8vo, illuminated cover, $2.00.

BIOGRAPHY

Chapters from a Life

A remarkably attractive book of biographical and literary interest by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, author of "A Singular Life," "The Gates Ajar," etc. With 24 portraits and other Illustrations. 12mo, $1.50.

Life and Letters of Oliver Wendell Holmes

By John T. Morse, Jr., Editor of "The American Statesmen Series." With Portraits and other Illustrations. Two vols. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $4.00.

"Mr. Morse has accomplished his work in a skillful and judicious manner."—Boston Transcript.

Joan of Arc

By Francis C. Lowell. Crown 8vo, gilt top, with maps, $2.00.

"The story is one of the most thrilling, pathetic, and pitiful in all history, and this without the legends which have gathered themselves about it. Mr. Lowell tells it in a manner and style which leave nothing to be desired."—Boston Advertiser.

Authors and Friends

By Mrs. James T. Fields. 12mo, artistically printed, $1.50.

Very interesting papers on Longfellow, Emerson, Holmes, Mrs. Thaxter, Mrs. Stowe, Whittier, Tennyson, and Lady Tennyson.

Whitman: A Study

An entirely new, original, noteworthy book, by John Burroughs. 16mo, $1.25. Also uniform with the limited Riverside Edition of Burroughs's writings, with a fine Portrait of Whitman. 12mo, gilt top, $1.50 net.

Sold by Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston; 11 East 17th Street, New York

CHOICE CHRISTMAS GIFTS

SWEETHEART TRAVELERS.

"A child's book for children, for women, and for men."

By S. R. Crockett, author of "The Stickit Minister," "The Raiders," "The Lilac Sunbonnet," etc.

This book should be the most popular book for young people of the coming season.

Its sale in Great Britain during the holidays was second only to that of "Trilby." With numerous and beautiful illustrations by Gordon Browne and W. H. C. Groome.

"If Mr. Crockett had never written another line this book alone would be sufficient to stamp him as a man of supreme talent."—Weekly Sun, London, England.

"Had any one ever been disinclined to believe in Mr. Crockett's genius he must have recanted and repented in sackcloth after enjoying 'Sweetheart Travelers.'"—London Times.

4to, cloth, $1.50.

WORKS BY MRS. BRUNDAGE.

Three delightful books for children.

Children of To-day.

With twelve facsimiles of water-color sketches by Frances M. Brundage. The subjects she has chosen are the heads of children, a field in which she is unsurpassed. Charming studies of child-life. With appropriate stories or sketches by Miss Elizabeth S. Tucker, printed in inks of different colors and inclosed in beautiful decorative borders designed by Miss Tucker.

Large 4to, boards, with cover in colors, $2.00.

Little Belles and Beaux. Little Men and Maids.

These books are made up of selections from "Children of To-day," each containing just half the illustrations and text in the larger volume.

Large 4to, boards, with covers in colors, $1.25.

THE VILLAGE OF YOUTH, AND OTHER FAIRY TALES.

By Bessie Hatton.

Interesting stories written in a beautiful style, which appeal especially to young people. With numerous illustrations by W. H. Margetson.

4to, Holliston cloth, full gilt, $1.50.

FAIRY TALES FAR AND NEAR.

Retold by Q (Arthur T. Quiller-Couch).

Ten well-known fairy tales, including "Blue Beard," etc., have been rewritten by the distinguished author. With many excellent illustrations by H. R. Millar.

12mo, blue cloth, $1.50.

CHILDREN'S SINGING GAMES.

Illustrated and arranged by Eleanor Withey Willard.

A most unique and valuable little work, containing many pretty songs and games. Games little known in this country are given, as well as those familiar to all. The tunes are all simple, and to the old well-known songs are given the old well-known tunes.

4to, buckram, $1.25.

THE EGYPTIAN STRUWWELPETER.

A clever parody of the famous story of "Slovenly Peter." It purports to be the Struwwelpeter Papyrus, with full text and 100 original vignettes from the Vienna Papyri, and is dedicated to children of all ages. Both the text and pictures are very humorous and original. The illustrations are all printed in many colors by E. Nister & Co., of Nuremberg.

4to, boards, with cover in colors, $1.50.

THE WORLD AWHEEL.

A collection of verse and prose stories with bicycles and bicyclists as the topic, edited by Volney Streamer. Illustrated by 12 facsimiles of water-color designs by Eugene Grivaz. Each picture represents a different place, the scenes being Russia, Riverside Drive, New York, The Riviera, Holland, Scotland, Switzerland, The Rhine, Newport, The Champs Elysées, Central Park at Night, Pompeii, and Egypt.

1 vol., 4to, gilt top, half cloth, in a box, $2.50. Full buckram, boxed, $3.00. Silk, boxed, $3.50.

CLASSICAL AUTHORS.

Edited by Rosa Belle Holt.

This contains selections from writings of 52 ancient philosophers, poets, etc., all extant before Christ. Among the authors represented are Solomon, Homer, Hesiod, Solon, Sophocles, Herodotus, Euripides, Thucydides, and Socrates.

Many of these selections are especially interesting as indicating the origin of familiar sayings of the present day.

The translations have been passed upon by professors of various colleges, and have received the greatest praise from Edward Everett Hale and others.

A brief biography of each writer is given with dates. The most important feature of the book, however, is the collection of fifty-two illustrations, which are portraits of the different authors. These are half-tone cuts, from entirely new drawings of great merit, made by Izora C. Chandler, from paintings, sculptures, etc., collected at a very heavy expense.

12mo, buckram or orchid binding, $1.50.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

By Paul de Longpré.

A collection of six reproductions of water-color drawings of chrysanthemums.

Mr. de Longpré is one of the most distinguished painters of flowers in this country, and his pictures are all of great value as studies of this beautiful flower. Size of plate, 11 x 12½ inches.

1 vol., 4to, gilt top, buckram, with the outer half sides in an illuminated design, $2.00.

THE QUILTING BEE.

By John Langdon Heaton.

The first part of this volume is devoted to dialect poems, some of which have been compared with those of James Whitcomb Riley. Another section is headed, "The Patter of Park Row," and consists mostly of verses dealing with the phases of life in the vicinity of "Newspaper Row."

"There is a spontaneity and freshness about these jingling verses that set your feet to dancing in spite of yourself, and make you young again."—Ogdensburg Journal.

16mo, cloth or orchid, $1.00.

This also comes in a very attractive patchwork binding, with the front side in colors in imitation of an old-fashioned quilt, $1.25.

ARTISTIC CALENDARS.

Over one hundred varieties of all styles and shapes, and varying in price from 10 cents to $15.00.

The finest line of calendars ever offered. They are the only important line of calendars designed by American artists and manufactured in this country, and they include Calendars of etchings—artist's proofs or plain prints—of photogravures, and also of facsimiles of water-color paintings by well-known artists.

One distinctive feature of the facsimiles is that they are perfect reproductions of the original water-colors, and have none of the gloss that characterizes foreign lithographic work. Every picture is well worth framing.

Also, a fine line of French Calendars. Send for Descriptive Catalogue.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent (at the publisher's expense) to any address on receipt of price. Send for descriptive catalogue. On receipt of 10 cents a calendar or a sample copy of the Pocket Magazine will be sent to any address. Mention The Outlook.

FREDERICK A. STOKES COMPANY, 27 and 29 West 23d Street, New York City

E. P. DUTTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS, CALENDARS, Etc.

By Phillips Brooks

New Starts in Life
And Other Sermons. (Eight Series) By the Rt. Rev. PHILLIPS BROOKS, D.D. 12mo, cloth, $1.75. (Ready Dec. 8.)

Good Cheer for a Year
Selections from the Writings of the Rt. Rev. Phillips Brooks, D.D., arranged for every day in the year. By W. M. L. JAY. 16mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

The Christian Life
What It Is and How to Live It. By the Rev. FLOYD W. TOMKINS, JR. 16mo, 118 pages, gilt top, 75 cents.

Religion in Boyhood
Or Hints on the Religious Training of Boys. By ERNEST B. LAYARD. With an introduction by the Rev. ENDICOTT PEABODY, Head Master of Groton School. 16mo, 104 pages, gilt top, 75 cents.

Booklets for Christmas Presents

Favorite Hymns
Six color and six monotint illustrations. 4to, 16 pages, embossed cover, $1.00.

Golden Truths
A set of six devotional booklets, with a selection for every day of the month, illustrated in color, in box, 50 cents.

Heavenly Paths
A daily text-book for a month, with illustrations in color and monotint, with padded leatherette cover. Oblong 16mo, 32 pages, 50 cents.

Gray's Elegy
A new and beautiful edition of this popular poem, illustrated in color. Padded leatherette cover, 50 cents.

Jesus, Lover of My Soul
Illustrated in colors, 50 cents

CHARLES AND THE QUICK-RUNNING SQUASH. SEE

SHORT STORIES FOR SHORT PEOPLE

By Mrs. THOMAS ASPINWALL. Quarto, 264 pages, Illustrated. Cloth, $1.50.

"The lover of childhood and the lover of creative imagination may alike find pleasure in this book."—THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON.

"The stories are entirely out of the common; there is about them a genuineness and freshness rare in literature of any sort."—Boston Beacon.

"This is emphatically a book for the holidays."—The Outlook.

MOTHER GOOSE

A complete edition, containing all the rhymes and jingles, illustrated with over thirty full-page colored illustrations and a large number of black and white pictures. 4to, cloth, red edges, $2.50.

ROBINSON CRUSOE

The full story of his life and adventures. 4to, cloth bound, with 8 colored illustrations and a large number of black and white pictures, $2.50.

Ask for Dutton's Calendars, 1897

Our calendars are the leading line in the country Over 80 different kinds, in prices from 5 cents to $4.00. Among them are

Children of the Year Calendar
Twelve leaves (9x11), with illustrations of children in colors, $1.50.

Flowers of the Year
A Tennyson Calendar. Twelve leaves (9x11), with flowers, birds, etc., in colors, $1.50.

He Careth for You
A devotional calendar, twelve leaves (7½x9¼), $1.00.

The Phillips Brooks Calendar.
Twelve leaves (8¼x10), with illustrations in colors and selections from the last volume of sermons, $1.00.

The Circling Year
Twelve leaves (5x6¾), with selections from Shakespeare and illustrations in colors, 50 cents.

My Times are in Thy Hands
Twelve leaves (5x6¾), with Scripture texts and illustrations in colors, 50 cents.

The Beautiful Year Calendar
Twelve leaves of exquisite floral illustrations appropriate to the seasons (4x9), poetical selections, 50 cents.

With leaf for every day

The Phillips Brooks Calendar
Card (8x10¾), with quotations for every day in the year, from his works, 50 cents.

The Havergal Calendar
Card (8x10¾), with quotations for every day in the year, selected from Miss Havergal's writings, 50 cents.

The Household Calendar
A selection for every day containing many useful and practical hints for the household, 40 cents.

With many others. Send for List.

Our Catalogue of Books, Booklets, Calendars, Toy-Books, etc., sent free. The above are for sale at the bookstores, or will be sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of prices.

E. P. DUTTON & CO., Publishers, 31 West 23d Street, New York

THE MERRIAM COMPANY'S

HOLIDAY LIST

In Bamboo Lands
By KATHARINE S. BAXTER. Over one hundred half-tone illustrations and a map of Japan. Quarto, cloth, $2.50.

Mrs. Albert Grundy
Observations in Philistia. By HAROLD FREDERIC, author of "The Damnation of Theron Ware." Title-page by Patten Wilson. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

White Sand
The story of Dreamer and His Dream. By M. C. BALFOUR. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Among the Pueblo Indians
By CARL and LILLIAN EICKEMEYER. Over forty half-tone illustrations. Quarto, cloth, $1.75.

Napoleon, Lover and Husband
By FREDERIC MASSON. Translated by J. M. Howell. Illustrated. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $2.00.

Beautiful Thoughts on Life Eternal
Arranged by ELIZABETH CURETON. 16mo, cloth, 75 cts.

A Fiance on Trial
By FRANCIS TILLOU BUCK. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Recollections of the Private Life of Napoleon
By CONSTANT, PREMIER VALET DE CHAMBRE. Translated by Walter Clark. Illustrated. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 3 vols., in box, $7.50.

For Plain Women Only
By GEORGE FLEMING, author of "Kismet." Title-page by Patten Wilson. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

Miniatures and Moods
By G. S. STREET. 12mo, silk cloth, gilt top, $1.50.

A Daughter of Cuba
By HELEN M. BOWEN. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Mary Stuart, Queen of Scots
By ALEXANDRE DUMAS. Translated by J. M. Howell. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.50.

The Feasts of Autolycus
The Diary of a Greedy Woman. Edited by ELIZABETH ROBBINS PENNELL. Title-page by Aubrey Beardsley. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

Lingua Gemmæ
A Language of Gems. By ADA L. SUTTON. Profusely illustrated. Small quarto, cloth, gilt top, $1.5

A Game of Consequences
A Comedy Novel. By ALBERT KINROSS. 16mo, oblong, cloth, gilt top, 75 cents.

Josephine, Empress of the French
By FREDERICK A. OBER. Illustrated. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $2.00.

The Shield of the Fleur-de-Lis
A story of the days of Joan of Arc. By CONSTANCE GODDARD DU BOIS. Illustrated. Title-page, 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

Brooks's Addresses
By BISHOP PHILLIPS BROOKS. 16mo, cloth, 75 cents.

Select Conversations with an Uncle
By H. G. WELLS, author of "The Island of Dr. Moreau." 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

A Man of Two Minds
By FRANCIS TILLOU BUCK. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Quales Ego
By G. S. STREET. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

At the Sign of the Guillotine
By HAROLD SPENDER. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

JUVENILES

The Brave and Honest Series
Brave Tom
Honest Ned
Righting the Wrong
By EDWARD S. ELLIS. Illustrated. Large square 12mo, cloth, per vol., $1.25; per set, in box, $3.75.

Boys' History of Grant
By THOS. W. KNOX. Illustrated. Large square 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

The Captain's Boat
By WILLIAM O. STODDARD. Illustrated. Large square 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

Elfie and the Katydid
By F. V. and E. J. AUSTEN. Illustrated. Quarto, cloth, $1.25.

Oliver Bright's Search
By EDWARD STRATEMEYER. Illustrated. Large square 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

The River and Wilderness Series
The River Fugitives
The Wilderness Fugitives
Lena Wingo, the Mohawk
By EDWARD S. ELLIS. Illustrated. Large square 12mo, cloth, per vol., $1.25; per set, in box, $3.75.

Through on Time Series
Jack Midwood
Four Boys
The Young Conductor
By EDWARD S. ELLIS. Illustrated. Large square 12mo, cloth, per vol., $1.25; per set, in box, $3.75

The Last Cruise of the Spitfire
By EDWARD STRATEMEYER. Illustrated. Large square 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Captain John Crane
By THOS. W. KNOX. Illustrated. Large square 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

The War Whoop Series
Lost in the Wilderness
Through Apache Land
In the Pecos Country
The Cave in the Mountains
By LIEUT. R. H. JAYNE. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, per vol., $1.00; per set, in box, $4.00.

The Castle of the Carpathians
By JULES VERNE. Illustrated. Large square 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

The Lost Army
By THOS. W. KNOX. Illustrated. Large square 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

Reuben Stone's Discovery
By EDWARD STRATEMEYER. Illustrated. Large square 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Richard Dare's Venture
By EDWARD STRATEMEYER. Illustrated. Large square 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent, postpaid, upon receipt of price by the publishers

THE MERRIAM COMPANY, 67 Fifth Avenue, New York

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.'S LIST OF IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS

FRIDTIOF NANSEN, 1861-1893

By W. C. BRÖGGER and NORDAHL ROLFSEN. Translated by William Archer. With numerous Illustrations, Portraits, and Maps. 8vo, $4.00.

⁂ Though Fridtiof Nansen is still a young man, his life has from the first been full of activity and adventure. His countrymen, Nordahl Rolfsen and Professor W Brögger, have written and edited a popular account of his family (which is noted in Scandinavian history), his training, his domestic life, and his scientific and sporting enterprises. They have applied to specialists for chapters on his work as a biologist, on the scientific significance of his famous crossing of Greenland, and on the history and conditions of Arctic exploration. A full account is given of the "Fram," and of the preparations for the recent expedition.

A NEW WORK IN FICTION.

THE WIZARD

By H. RIDER HAGGARD, author of "She," "King Solomon's Mines," "Joan Haste," etc., etc. With 19 full-page Illustrations by Charles Kerr. Crown 8vo, cloth, ornamental, $1.25.

Mr. Rider Haggard's new story has a motive which is believed to be new to recent fiction. The tale is African, and deals with the conversion of a savage tribe by a missionary and martyr, who does not trust to the ordinary resources of proselytism, but takes his stand upon a literal interpretation of the New Testament promises. The story tells how his faith triumphed, and how it was strangely supported and justified by a superior Power working through the forces of nature and granting a direct aid which so many deny in these latter days to be vouchsafed to man. The keynote of the book is that Faith can, and still does, work miracles.

THE VIOLET: A Novel

By JULIA MAGRUDER, author of "Princess Sonia," etc. With 11 Illustrations by Charles Dana Gibson. Crown 8vo, cloth, ornamental, gilt top, $1.25.

"It is a pleasure to come upon a romance so pure in motive, so refined in sentiment, and so delicate in manner; . . . and the book has an added charm in the illustrations by Charles Dana Gibson."—Beacon, Boston.

"A charming story—one as sweet and simple and lovely as the modest flower itself. . . . It is a beautiful character study, breathing forth the fragrance of womanly sweetness in every phrase. The illustrations by Gibson are apt, and the binding and make-up of the book appropriately attractive."—Times, Boston.

A BOYAR OF THE TERRIBLE

A Romance of the Court of Ivan the Cruel, First Tsar of Russia

By FRED. WHISHAW. With 12 Illustrations by H. G. Massey, A.R.E. Crown 8vo, cloth, ornamental, $1.25.

DORCAS HOBDAY. A Novel

By CHARLES ROKEBY. Crown 8vo, 280 pages, $1.25.

MR. ANDREW LANG'S NEW CHRISTMAS BOOK, 1896.

THE ANIMAL STORY BOOK

Edited by ANDREW LANG. With 66 Plates and other Illustrations by H. J. FORD. Crown 8vo, gilt edges, $2.00.

A NEW WORK ON AFRICA.

TIMBUCTOO THE MYSTERIOUS

By FÉLIX DUBOIS. Translated from the French by DIANA WHITE. With 153 Illustrations and 11 Maps and Plans. Demy 8vo, cloth, ornamental, $3.50.

"Timbuctoo has always been mysterious, and is less known to English readers than the City of the Sun. This book, however, will enlighten them, for it traces the history of the city from the early ages of Egyptian civilization up to the present day, and shows, with the aid of many beautiful illustrations, the rise and fall of the capital of Darkest Africa."

LECTURES ON RELIGION

By the Rev. LEIGHTON PULLAN, A.M., Fellow of St. John Baptist College, Oxford; Lecturer in Theology at Oriel and Queen's College. Crown 8vo, 345 pages, $2.00.

THE PRINCIPLES OF ECCLESIASTICAL UNITY:

Four Lectures delivered in St. Asaph Cathedral on June 16, 17, 18, and 19

By ARTHUR JAMES MASON, D.D., Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity at Cambridge, and Canon of Canterbury. Crown 8vo, 162 pages, $1.00.

THE SANCTUARY OF SUFFERING

By ELEANOR TEE, author of "This Everyday Life," etc. With a Preface by the Rev. J. P. F. DAVIDSON, M.A., Vicar of S. Matthias, Earl's Court. Crown 8vo, 387 pages, $2.00.

". . . The most complete and one of the most helpful books on the subject of suffering we have ever read. The author writes with a freshness and ease of expression that make the book most delightful reading. . . . We know of no book more calculated to help one in trouble, more free from anything that is morbid, more full of divine love, better calculated to teach truth without arousing prejudice, or written in a more happy and sympathetic style."—Church Eclectic, Milwaukee.

A NEW COLOR BOOK FOR CHILDREN.

THE GOLLIWOGGS' BICYCLE CLUB

Pictures by FLORENCE K. UPTON. Words by BERTHA UPTON. With colored Plates and numerous Illustrations in the text. Oblong 4to, $2.00.

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO., Publishers, 91-93 Fifth Avenue, New York

ATTRACTIVE HOLIDAY BOOKS

BRACEBRIDGE HALL; OR, THE HUMOURISTS.

By WASHINGTON IRVING. "Surrey Edition," uniform with the very successful "Buckthorne Edition" of "Tales of a Traveler." This edition is printed from entirely new plates, and is by far the most sumptuous presentation of "Bracebridge" ever issued. Embellished with colored borders by Margaret Armstrong. The photogravure illustrations have been specially prepared for this edition by well-known artists. Two volumes, large 8vo. Cloth extra, gilt tops, $6.00; three-quarters levant, $12.00.

ROME OF TO-DAY AND YESTERDAY.

The Pagan City. By JOHN DENNIE. With 5 maps and plans and 58 full-page illustrations from Roman photographs. 8vo, gilt top, $4.00.

"This scholarly and valuable work first describes in a comprehensive chapter the Rome of to-day, and for the rest devotes itself entirely to its yesterday. . . . The book is a complete chronological guide, which one may peruse with pleasure and with profit."—Churchman.

HEROES OF THE NATIONS SERIES.

New numbers. Large 12mo, fully illustrated, each, cloth, $1.50; half leather, $1.75.

LIFE AND VOYAGES OF CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS. By Washington Irving. Abridged by the author. Printed from new type.—ROBERT THE BRUCE, AND THE STRUGGLE FOR SCOTTISH INDEPENDENCE. By Sir Herbert Maxwell.

STORY OF THE NATIONS SERIES.

New numbers. Large 12mo, fully illustrated, each, cloth, $1.50; half leather, $1.75.

THE STORY OF BOHEMIA. By C. Edmund Maurice.—THE STORY OF CANADA. By J. G. Bourinot.

CONSTANTINOPLE.

By EDMONDO DE AMICIS. "Stamboul Edition." With many beautiful illustrations. 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth extra, full gilt, $2.25.

IN MY LADY'S NAME.

Poems of Love and Beauty. Selected by CHARLES WELLS MOULTON. Frontispiece. 16mo, gilt top, about $1.50.

SIR KNIGHT OF THE GOLDEN PATHWAY.

By ANNA S. P. DURYEA. With illustrations and borders by Mabel Wilder Baldwin. 8vo, gilt top, $1.25.

THE FINAL WAR.

An Historical Romance of the Near Future. By LOUIS TRACY. With 16 full-page illustrations. Large 12mo, $1.75.

"A thoroughly wholesome, convincing, and well-written book, with capital illustrations."—N. Y. World.

THE ARIEL SHAKESPEARE.

Now Complete. Each play is a separate volume. Pocket size (3½ x 5 inches.) Large, clear type. Text complete and unabridged based upon latest scholarly editions, 500 dainty illustrations in outline. Per volume: cloth flexible, 40 cents; leather, in box, 75 cents. Complete set, 40 vols. in box, $16.00; full leather flexible, $30.00. Illustrated descriptive prospectus on application.

"The best handy-volume edition upon the market, in text, letterpress, illustration, and binding."—Boston Globe.

THE ELIA SERIES.

A selection of famous books, offered as specimens of the best literature and of artistic typography and bookmaking. Printed on deckle-edge paper, bound in full ooze calf with gilt tops, 16mo (6½x4½ inches), each volume in box, $2.25. There are three different colors in binding—dark green, garnet, and umber.

FIRST GROUP: The Essays of Elia. 2 vols.—The Discourses of Epictetus.—Sesame and Lilies.—Autobiography of Franklin.—Thoughts of Marcus Aurelius.

SECOND GROUP: Selections from De Quincey.—Selections from Sydney Smith.—The Wit and Wisdom of Lamb.—Rasselas.—Eothen.—The Spirit of the Age.

CAPTAIN MAYNE REID'S FASCINATING BOOKS OF ADVENTURE.

The Nimrod Edition. Fully illustrated. 12mo, each $1.25.

THE BOY HUNTERS; or, Adventures in Search of a White Buffalo.

THE BUSH BOYS; or, The History and Adventures of a Cape Farmer in the Wild Karoos of Southern Africa.

THE YOUNG VOYAGEURS; or, The Boy Hunters in the North.

THE LONG WALLS.

An American Boy's Adventures in Greece. A Story of Diggings and Discovery, Temples and Treasures. By E. S. BROOKS, author of "Great Men's Sons," etc., and JOHN ALDEN. Illustrated. 8vo, $1.50.

LITTLE JOURNEYS

to the Homes of American Authors. Illustrated with 13 portraits and 4 facsimile MSS. pages. Uniform in style with the series of "Little Journeys" for 1895. 16mo, printed on deckle-edge paper, gilt top, $1.75.

The 1895 series and the 1896 series, two vols. in a box, per set, $3.50.

STORIES and LEGENDS from WASHINGTON IRVING.

With 17 full-page Illustrations. 12mo, gilt top, $1.50.

This excellent collection has been made more particularly for the younger readers.

A VENETIAN JUNE and A LITERARY COURTSHIP.

By ANNA FULLER, author of "Pratt Portraits," "Peak and Prairie," etc. Holiday style, with additional illustrations, and printed on deckle-edge paper. Two volumes in a box. Per set, $2.50.

NEW YORK G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS LONDON

HERBERT S. STONE & CO.'S LIST

THE CHAP-BOOK, Chicago

NINTH THOUSAND.

ARTIE

A Story of the Streets and Town. By George Ade. With many pictures by J. T. McCutcheon. 16mo, $1.25.

"Of the kind there has been nothing better ever written. Artie is the most natural, the most original and the most entirely possible of all creations on this order from Dickens's delightfully impudent boys down. Other writers give us too much, their prodigies are too knowing, too heroic, or they are vulgar and offend by their coarseness; but Mr. Ade makes no such mistake."—Chicago Evening Post.

A CHILD OF THE JAGO

A Novel of the East End of London. By Arthur Morrison, author of "Tales of Mean Streets." 12mo, $1.50.

Mr. Morrison is recognized the world over as the most capable man at slum life stories. His "Tales of Mean Streets" was one of the best received books of 1894-'95, and the present volume has occupied his time ever since. It is of great force and continuous interest; a book that, once begun, must be finished, and one that will figure as a sensation for a long time to come.

SECOND EDITION.

WITHOUT SIN

A Novel. By Martin J. Pritchard. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

The New York Journal gave a half-page to a review of the book, and proclaimed it "the most startling novel yet."

"One is hardly likely to go far wrong in predicting that 'Without Sin' will attract abundant notice. Too much can scarcely be said in praise of Mr. Pritchard's treatment of his subject."—Academy (London).

"A really extraordinary novel . . . 'Without Sin' is a strong and strange story. It cannot be read without interest, and wherever it is read it will provoke [illegible]."

"It is undeniably well written, and the plot is as unique as it is daring."
—Denver News.

THE LAND OF THE CASTANET

Spanish Sketches by H. C. Chatfield-Taylor, author of "Two Women and a Fool," with 25 full-page illustrations. 16mo, $1.25.

A collection of rambling sketches of Spanish people and places. Mr. Chatfield-Taylor has written frankly and entertainingly of the most striking features of "The Land of the Castanet." The volume does not pretend to be exhaustive; in no sense is it a guide book—it is intended rather for the person who does not expect to visit Spain than for the traveler.

CHAP-BOOK STORIES

A volume of Reprints from the Chap-Book, by Octave Thanet, Grace Ellery Channing, Maria Louise Pool, and others. 16mo, $1.25.

The authors of this volume are all American. Besides the well-known names, there are some which were seen in the Chap-Book for the first time. The volume is bound in an entirely new and startling fashion.

THE CARISSIMA

A Novel. By Lucas Malet, author of "The Wages of Sin." 12mo, $1.50.

Few people will have difficulty in remembering the profound sensation which the publication of "The Wages of Sin" caused some six years ago. Since that time Lucas Malet has published no serious work, and the present volume therefore represents her best. It is a novel of intense and continued interest, and will claim a prominent place among the books of the season.

FIFTH THOUSAND.

CHECKERS

A Hard-Luck Story by Henry M. Blossom, Jr. 16mo, $1.25.

"Abounds in the most racy and picturesque slang."—N. Y. Recorder.

"'Checkers' is an interesting and entertaining chap, a distinct type, with a separate tongue and a way of saying things that is oddly humorous."—Chicago Record.

"If I had to ride from New York to Chicago on a slow train, I should like half-a-dozen books as gladsome as 'Checkers,' and I could laugh at the trip."
—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

SECOND EDITION.

IN BUNCOMBE COUNTY

By Maria Louise Pool. 16mo, $1.25.

A Series of Sketches of Country Life in the South. They are much in the style of Miss Pool's "A Dike Shanty," which has been so successful.

MISS AYR OF VIRGINIA, AND OTHER STORIES

By Julia Magruder. 16mo, $1.25.

Critics have always united in saying of Miss Magruder's work that it was interesting. In addition to this her new volume is noticeable for its grace and beauty, real sentiment where it is needed, and strength as well. It will be welcomed by the many who enjoyed "The Princess Sonia" and "The Violet."

THE FATAL GIFT OF BEAUTY, AND OTHER STORIES

By C. E. Raimond, author of "George Mandeville's Husband," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

A book of stories which will not quickly be surpassed for real humor, skillful characterization and splendid entertainment. "The Confessions of a Cruel Mistress" is a masterpiece, and the "Portman Memoirs" are exceptionally clever.

CURIOUS PUNISHMENTS OF BYGONE DAYS

By Alice Morse Earle, author of "Sabbath in Puritan New England," etc., with many quaint pictures by Frank Hazenplug. 12mo, $1.50.

Mrs. Earle dedicates her book, in the language of an old-time writer, to "All curious and ingenious gentlemen and gentlewomen who can gain from acts of the past a delight in the present days of virtue, wisdom and humanities."

CHAP-BOOK ESSAYS

By T. W. Higginson, Louise Chandler Moulton, H. H. Boyesen, H. W. Mabie, and others. 16mo, $1.25.

Essays by the most distinguished writers, which it has been judged worth preserving in more permanent form than the issues of the Chap-Book could give.

To be had of all booksellers, or will be sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by the publishers,

HERBERT S. STONE & CO., ... CHICAGO

THOMAS NELSON & SONS' NEW GIFT-BOOKS FOR THE HOLIDAYS, 1896-97

Three New Books by WM. M. THAYER, Author of "Log Cabin to White House," "Success and Its Achievers," etc.

AROUND THE HEARTH-STONE. A book for the home. 8vo, extra cloth, $1.50.

"This book is so bright and helpful and simple. Good sense is its characteristic. . . . It handles a multitude of subjects, and handles them well. . . . It discusses every topic . . . with candor and thoughtfulness."—Baltimore Methodist, Nov. 5, 1896.

"A book abounding in good sense, and based on good experience."—Independent, Nov. 12, 1896.

MEN WHO WIN; or, Making Things Happen. Uniform with "Women Who Win." 8vo, extra cloth, $1.25.

WOMEN WHO WIN; or, Making Things Happen. Uniform with "Men Who Win." 8vo, extra cloth, $1.25.

BOOKS FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

HOW JACK MACKENZIE WON HIS EPAULETTES. By Gordon Stables, M.D., R.N. A Story of the Crimean War. With four maps and six illustrations. 8vo, extra cloth, $1.25.

FIRESIDE SKETCHES OF SWEDISH LIFE. By Mrs. Woods Baker. Illustrated. 8vo, cloth, 50 cents.

THE SIGN OF THE RED CROSS. By E. Everett Green. A Tale of Old London. With six full-page illustrations by W. S. Stacey. 8vo, extra cloth, $1.25.

OLIVE ROSCOE; or, The New Sister. By E. Everett Green. With numerous illustrations. 8vo, extra cloth, $1.75.

KING MATTHIAS AND THE BEGGAR-BOY. By Selina Gaye. Adapted from the Hungarian of Baron Nicholas Josika. With illustrations. 8vo, extra cloth, 50 cents.

THE HERMIT PRINCES. By Eleanor Stredder. A Tale of Adventure in Japan. With illustrations. 8vo, extra cloth, $1.00.

CAPTAIN COOK'S VOYAGES AROUND THE WORLD. With a memoir by M. B. Synge, and numerous illustrations. A new edition. 8vo, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00.

FRANK'S FIRST TERM. By Harold Avery. Illustrated. 8vo, cloth, 60 cents.

JACK AND HIS BROTHERS. By Mrs. Austin Dobson. With original music and numerous illustrations. "Dedicated to Everybody under Four." 8vo, extra cloth, 60 cents.

A New Book of Family Prayers

PRAYERS FOR THIRTEEN WEEKS. By Rev. J. R. Miller, D.D., author of "Come Ye Apart," etc. 8vo, cloth, $1.00.

A LOST ARMY. A Tale of the Russians in Central Asia. By Fred Wishaw. With six illustrations by W. S. Stacey. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

IN FAR JAPAN. A Story of English Children. With illustrations. 12mo, extra cloth, 80 cents.

CLEVELY SAHIB. A Story of the Khyber Pass. By Herbert Hayens, author of "Under the Lone Star." Cloth extra, $1.75.

THE YOUNG PIONEERS; or, With La Salle on the Mississippi. By E. Everett Green. Cloth extra, $1.75.

SQUIB AND HIS FRIENDS. A Story for Children. Cloth extra, $1.00.

LEAVES FROM A MIDDY'S LOG. An Exciting Story of the Pursuit of the Cuban Rebels. By Arthur Lee Knight. With illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

MARGERY'S QUEST. A Story of Life in the Slums of London. 12mo, cloth, 50 cents.

UNDER THE LONE STAR. A Story of Revolution in Nicaragua. By Herbert Hayens. With six full-page illustrations by W. S. Stacey. 8vo, extra cloth, $2.00.

BAFFLING THE BLOCKADE. By J. MacDonald Oxley, author of "Wilds of the West Coast," etc., etc. 8vo, extra cloth, with six illustrations, $1.25.

DOMINIQUE'S VENGEANCE. A Story of France and Florida. By E. Everett Green. 8vo, extra cloth, illustrated, $1.25.

AN ACCOUNT OF PALMYRA AND ZENOBIA. With Travels and Adventures in Bashan and the Desert. By Dr. William Wright, author of "The Empire of the Hittites," "The Brontés in Ireland," etc. With thirty-two full-page engravings and eighty other illustrations. 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, $2.50.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent prepaid on receipt of price. Send for complete catalogue.

THOMAS NELSON & SONS, Publishers and Importers, - 33 East 17th Street (Union Square), New York

THE OUTLOOK for 1897

THE Fifty-fifth volume of The OUTLOOK begins with the first of January, 1897. The new departure which The OUTLOOK made a year ago in becoming a Weekly Newspaper and an Illustrated Monthly Magazine in one has met with the most cordial approval on the part of all readers, and has greatly added to the popularity and the circulation of the paper. Beginning with the fifty-fifth volume, the paper will assume the regular magazine size, which will add greatly to its convenience and attractiveness. The OUTLOOK is published every Saturday—fifty-two issues a year. The first issue in each month is an Illustrated Magazine Number, containing about twice as many pages as the ordinary issues, together with a large number of pictures. The following is a brief announcement of a few of the more important features for the coming year.

Justin McCarthy

The Story of Gladstone's Life

Mr. Justin McCarthy, the historian, novelist, and political leader, has written for The Outlook a popular life of the Right Honorable William E. Gladstone. Mr. McCarthy has maintained an intimate personal and political acquaintance with Mr. Gladstone for many years, and is peculiarly fitted for the work. His skill in graphic narration and in imparting to history the attractive qualities that many readers look for in fiction only is well illustrated in his book, "A History of Our Own Times." Few books of our generation have had a wider reading on both sides of the Atlantic. "The Story of Gladstone's Life" will be published in the Illustrated Magazine Numbers of The Outlook, beginning with January, and continuing through the year 1897. It will be profusely illustrated with portraits, reproductions of drawings, and other material gathered from many sources, including a series of photographs made for The Outlook at Hawarden, by special permission of Mr. Gladstone.

GREAT LIBRARIES

The New Library of Congress at Washington, which will, when completed, be the greatest library building and one of the greatest collections of books under a single roof in the world, has been described with the pen of the artist and book-lover for The Outlook by Mr. F. Hopkinson Smith, who devoted a week to the study of the superb building, and has painted four pictures, showing various aspects of it, for The Outlook. These paintings will be reproduced, each in a full page, and accompanied by reproductions in photograph of many features of decoration.

The Public Libraries of Chicago form the subject of an illustrated article from the pen of Rabbi Emil Hirsch, Ph.D., LL.D., of Sinai Temple, Chicago, Professor of Semitics in the Chicago University.

The Greater New York Library. The bringing together of the Astor Library, the Lenox Library, and the Tilden Library under one management in the city of New York, and the prospective erection of a great building which shall be the library center of the city, affords the topic for an important article by Dr. John Shaw Billings, who is to be the librarian of the consolidated library.

MUNICIPAL STUDIES

The cities of Detroit and Toronto, one in Western Canada and one in Michigan, of nearly the same size, are particularly interesting from many points of view. Articles concerning their municipal life have been secured from the Hon. Robert J. Fleming, Mayor of Toronto, and the Hon. H. S. Pingree, Mayor of Detroit.

SHORT STORIES OF AMERICAN LIFE

The Outlook will make a strong feature of short stories of American life during the coming year. Many of the leading story-writers of this country will contribute tales dealing with life and character in the different sections of the country. Among the writers who will contribute stories are Octave Thanet, Hamlin Garland, Richard Malcolm Johnston, Grace King, Ruth McEnery Stuart, Charles Egbert Craddock, Brander Matthews, Martha McCulloch Williams, Margaret S. Briscoe, Anna Fuller, Annie Eliot, Virginia W. Cloud, and Anna Eichberg King.

The New Library of Congress
From a Painting by F. Hopkinson Smith. Copyright, 1896, by The Outlook Company

AIDS TO THE DEVOUT LIFE

A series of articles descriptive of the great spiritual classics of literature. Bishop Huntington, of New York, will write concerning Thomas à Kempis's "Imitation of Christ." Dr. John Brown, of Bedford, England (the birthplace of John Bunyan), will write concerning "Pilgrim's Progress." Dr. A. H. Bradford, of Montclair, N. J., will write of Jeremy Taylor's "Holy Living and Dying." The Rev. Washington Gladden, D.D., of Columbus, O., will write of Chilcot's "Treatise on Evil Thoughts." The Rev. Henry van Dyke, of New York, will write on Keble's "Christian Year." Mr. Hamilton W. Mabie will write concerning Robert Browning's "Saul."

FAMOUS WAR HORSES

General James Grant Wilson will contribute a unique paper on the famous war horses of the Civil War, illustrated with portraits of "Winchester," the historic charger of General Sheridan, and of the favorite horses of General Grant, General Stonewall Jackson, and other leaders.

LITERARY WORTHIES

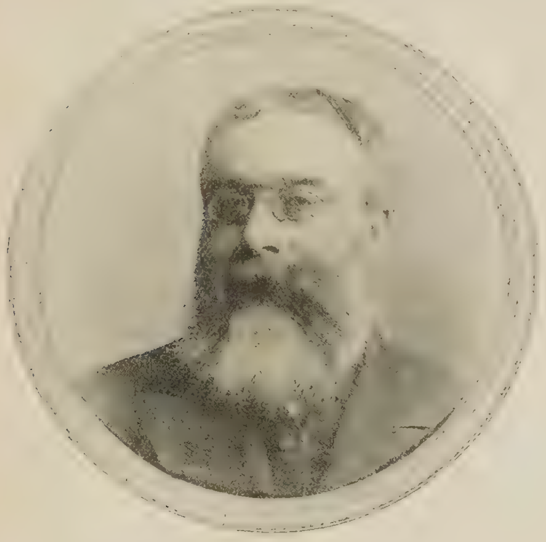
Familiar short sketches of writers of rare literary quality—writers who hold places of their own, but who are, as a rule, more often talked about than read—by Hamilton Wright Mabie. The series will cover the following: Lucian, Theocritus, Plutarch, Epictetus, Montaigne, Peacock, Richter, Borrow, Fitzgerald.

HISTORIC UTTERANCES OF GENERAL GRANT

The circumstances connected with the famous historical utterances of General Ulysses S. Grant, such as, "Let us have peace," "I propose to move immediately upon your works," "Unconditional surrender," "I propose to fight it out on this line," etc., have been told in an interesting article by General James Grant Wilson, who served with distinction under General Grant, and is the author of a Life of Grant; to be illustrated with facsimiles.

Subscription price, $3 per year. The Outlook Co., 13 Astor Place, New York

THE OUTLOOK for 1897



Sir Walter Besant

THE MESSAGE OF THE WORLD'S RELIGIONS

This is the general title of an important series of papers, setting forth the essential contribution which each of the great religions of the world has made to the spiritual life of mankind.

Brahmanism will be described and its essential message to the world reported by Professor T. W. Rhys Davids, of Oxford University.

Buddhism will be treated by Professor Charles R. Lanman, of Harvard University.

Judaism will be described by Rabbi Gustav Gottheil, of Temple Emanuel, New York.

Mohammedanism, or the religion of Islam, will be written about understandingly by the Rev. George Washburn, President of Robert College in Constantinople.

Confucianism will be interpreted by the Rev. Arthur H. Smith, D.D., the well-known student of Chinese literature, who has been engaged in missionary work in China for many years.

Christianity: The Editor of The Outlook, the Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D., will conclude the series with an article on Christianity.

WORK BY WOMEN

A series of illustrated articles on important altruistic enterprises founded by women. Each article is written from the personal point of view by the woman who has been most active in the inception and conduct of the enterprise described.

The First Working-Girls' Club, by the Hon. Maude Stanley, founder of the Soho Club in London, which is still in active operation, and was the first of the hundreds of clubs for working-girls which now exist on both sides of the water.

Art Education for Women, by Mrs. Candace Wheeler, of New York, the founder of the School of Associated Artists.

The Trained Nurse in England, by Mrs. Bedford Fenwick, Secretary of the British Nurses' Association. Mrs. Fenwick was one of the first trained nurses, and has been active for many years in securing a professional standing for the trained nurse in London.

Mrs. Ellen M. Henrotin

Temperance Work in England, by Lady Henry Somerset, President of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Great Britain, who is known the world around for her service in the temperance cause.

The Kindergarten in America, by Miss Susan E. Blow, of St. Louis, who has gained an international reputation as a kindergarten trainer and writer.

Women's Clubs, by Mrs. Ellen M. Henrotin, of Chicago, President of the General Federation of Women's Clubs of America.

Day Nurseries, by Mrs. Arthur Murray Dodge, of New York, who established the first day nurseries in New York.

LONDON, PARIS, BERLIN, ROME, GENEVA

The articles on "The Higher Life of American Cities," so interesting a feature of The Outlook in 1896, will be supplemented in 1897 by a series of papers, profusely illustrated, concerning important European cities.

Sir Walter Besant, whose "All Sorts and Conditions of Men" was the inspiration of the People's Palace, has written for The Outlook a paper on "The Higher Life of London."

Professor Rodolfo Lanciani, whose explorations in Rome, and books about them, have made his name so well known, will write an article on "The Higher Life of Rome."

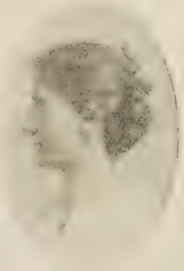
The Rev. Charles Wagner has written on "The Higher Life of Paris," and a singularly interesting series of illustrations has been secured for the article. M. Wagner is the author of "Youth," "Justice," and other important books.

Baron Hermann von Soden, the well-known preacher and theological writer, has written concerning "The Higher Life of Berlin," and his article will be, like the others, richly illustrated.

Professor Louis Wuarin, Professor of Sociology in the University of Geneva, will write the article on "The Higher Life of Geneva."

COLLEGE EDUCATION FOR WOMEN

One of the most interesting features to be presented is a series of articles on College Training for Women, by Miss Kate Halladay Claghorn, a graduate of Bryn Mawr and a post-graduate of Yale. Her college experience fits Miss Claghorn to write on the subject of College Training for Women from the point of experience and reflection. The subjects of the series will be: "What May be Expected from College Training for Women," "The Preparation," "Choosing a College," "Life at College," "The Transition to the World." These articles will have a strong interest for all women.



Kate H. Claghorn

AN EVOLUTIONIST'S THEOLOGY

Scientists, with very few exceptions, recognize evolution as the method of life—"God's way of doing things," Professor John Fiske calls it. Dr. Lyman Abbott, in a series of nine articles, aims to make a restatement of theology in accordance with this conception. Following is a list of topics: (1) What is Evolution? (2) Creation by Evolution; (3) The Problem of Sin; (4) Revelation by Evolution; (5) The Place of Christ in Evolution; (6) Redemption by Evolution; (7) Are Miracles Consistent with Evolution? (8) Evolution and Immortality; (9) An Evolutionist's Creed.

Hon. Maude Stanley

A CENTURY'S PROGRESS

The Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, President of the New York Central Railroad, will tell of the advances made during the nineteenth century to facilitate travel and make it comfortable. Dr. A. D. Rockwell, author of "The Medical and Surgical Uses of Electricity," will review the progress in medicine, surgery, and hygiene. Mrs. Candace Wheeler will show how comfort and art possibilities in the home have grown.

Subscription price, $3 per year. The Outlook Co., 13 Astor Place, New York

Harper & Brothers' Holiday Books

Naval Actions of the War of 1812. By JAMES BARNES. With 21 Full-page Illustrations by CARLTON T. CHAPMAN, printed in color. 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, Deckel Edges and Gilt Top, $4.50.

George Washington. By WOODROW WILSON, Ph.D., LL.D., Professor of Jurisprudence, Princeton University. Illustrated by HOWARD PYLE. Crown 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, Deckel Edges and Gilt Top, $3.00.

History of the German Struggle for Liberty. By POULTNEY BIGELOW, B.A. Copiously Illustrated with Drawings by R. CATON WOODVILLE, and with Portraits and Maps. Two Volumes. Crown 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $5.00. (In a Box.)

Reminiscences of an Octogenarian of the City of New York (1816-1860). By CHARLES H. HASWELL. With many Illustrations, a Photogravure Portrait of the Author, and a Map of New York in 1816. Crown 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $3.00.

Alone in China, and Other Stories. By JULIAN RALPH. Illustrated by C. D. WELDON. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $2.00.

Mark Twain's Joan of Arc. Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc. Illustrated by F. V. DU MOND. Crown 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $2.50.

Books by Mark Twain. New and Uniform Library Editions from New Electrotype Plates. Crown 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental.

- The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn. With Photogravure Portrait of the Author, and Other Illustrations. $1.75.
- Life on the Mississippi. Illustrated. $1.75.
- A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court. Illustrated. $1.75.
- The Prince and the Pauper. Illustrated. $1.75
- Tom Sawyer Abroad; Tom Sawyer, Detective, and Other Stories, etc., etc. Illustrated. $1.75.
- The American Claimant, and Other Stories. Illustrated. (In Press.)

The Ship's Company, and Other Sea People. By J. D. JERROLD KELLEY. Lieutenant-Commander, U. S. N. Copiously Illustrated. 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $2.50.

The Gray Man. A Novel. By S. R. CROCKETT. Illustrated by SEYMOUR LUCAS, R.A. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

A Rebellious Heroine. A Story. By JOHN KENDRICK BANGS. Illustrated by W. T. SMEDLEY. 16mo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

The Abbey Shakespeare. The Comedies of William Shakespeare. With 131 Drawings by EDWIN A. ABBEY, Reproduced by Photogravure. Four Volumes. Large 8vo, Half Cloth, Deckel Edges and Gilt Tops, $30.00. (In a Box.)

Clarissa Furiosa. A Novel. By W. E. NORRIS. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

From "The Dwarfs' Tailor." Copyright, 1896, by Harper & Brothers.

From "History of the German Struggle for Liberty."—Copyright, 1896, by Harper & Brothers.

Contemporary Essayists. Uniform in Size and Style. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top.

- Aspects of Fiction, and Other Ventures in Criticism. By BRANDER MATTHEWS. $1.50.
- Impressions and Experiences. By W. D. HOWELLS. $1.50.
- The Relation of Literature to Life. By CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER. $1.50.

In the First Person. A Novel. By MARIA LOUISE POOL. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Solomon Crow's Christmas Pockets, and Other Tales. By RUTH MCENERY STUART. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Novels by Thomas Hardy. Uniform edition. Crown 8vo, Cloth.

JUDE THE OBSCURE. Illustrated.—UNDER THE GREENWOOD TREE.—WESSEX TALES.—DESPERATE REMEDIES.—A LAODICEAN.—THE HAND OF ETHELBERTA.—THE WOODLANDERS.—THE TRUMPET-MAJOR.—FAR FROM THE MADDING CROWD.—THE MAYOR OF CASTERBRIDGE.—A PAIR OF BLUE EYES.—TWO ON A TOWER.—RETURN OF THE NATIVE.—TESS OF THE D'URBERVILLES. Illustrated. $1.50 per volume.

Bound in Shallows. A Novel. By EVA WILDER BRODHEAD. Illustrated by W. A. ROGERS. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

On Snow-Shoes to the Barren Grounds. Twenty-eight Hundred Miles after Musk-Oxen and Wood-Bison. By CASPAR WHITNEY. Profusely Illustrated. 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, Uncut Edges and Gilt Top, $3.50.

Love in the Backwoods. Two Stories: "Two Mormons from Muddlety," "Alfred's Wife." By LANGDON ELWYN MITCHELL. Illustrated by A. B. FROST. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

Gascoigne's "Ghost." A Novel. By G. B. BURGIN. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00.

Tomalyn's Quest. A Novel. By G. B. BURGIN. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

A Virginia Cavalier. By MOLLY ELLIOT SEAWELL. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50.

George Du Maurier. English Society Sketches. By George Du Maurier. Nearly 100 Illustrations. Oblong 4to. (Nearly Ready.)

- In Bohemia with Du Maurier. By FELIX MOSCHELES. Illustrated with 63 Original Drawings by G. DU MAURIER. (Nearly Ready.)
- A Souvenir of "Trilby." Seven Photogravures in a Portfolio, $1.00.
- Trilby. A Novel. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75; Three-quarter Calf, $3.50; Three-quarter Crushed Levant, $4.50.
- Peter Ibbetson. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.50; Three-quarter Calf, $3.50; Three-quarter Crushed Levant, $4.50.

An Elephant's Track, and Other Stories. By M. E. M. DAVIS. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.25.

The Mystery of Sleep. By JOHN BIGELOW. Post 8vo, Cloth, Deckel Edges and Gilt Top. $1.50. (In a Box.)

The Dwarfs' Tailor, and Other Fairy Tales. Collected by ZOE DANA UNDERHILL. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.75.

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS, NEW YORK

Terms

The Outlook is a weekly Family Paper, containing this week ninety-two pages. The subscription price is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance.

Postage is Prepaid by the publishers for all subscriptions in the United States, Canada, and Mexico. For all other countries in the Postal Union add $1.56 for postage.

New Subscriptions may commence at any time during the year.

Receipts.—The date on your label indicates the time to which your subscription is paid. An acknowledgment is sent on the receipt of each subscription, and the yellow label should bear the new date within two weeks of the receipt of the remittance.

Changes of Address.—When a change of address is ordered, both the new and the old address must be given, and notice sent one week before the change is desired.

Discontinuances.—Subscribers wishing The Outlook stopped at the expiration of their subscriptions should notify us to that effect; otherwise we shall consider it their wish to have it continued.

How to Remit.—Remittances should be sent by Check, Draft, Express Order, Money Order, payable to order of THE OUTLOOK COMPANY. Cash should be sent in Registered Letter.

A Special Representative is desired in each town in the country. Correspondence is invited.

Letters should be addressed:
THE OUTLOOK,
Clinton Hall, Astor Place,
New York.

The Outlook
A Family Paper
NEW SERIES OF THE CHRISTIAN UNION

> "We propose to take ground on the universal reality, the indestructible religious nature, which is as much a part of creation as the globe itself and its physical properties, and far more important."
>
> HENRY WARD BEECHER.

> "All the Lord gives us is opportunity; we are to do the rest."
>
> LAWSON VALENTINE.

Contents, 28 November, 1896

PAGE
EDITORIAL:
Party Lines and the Revenue .. 949
The Future of Bimetallism 949
Immigration 949
New York's Public Schools 950
Jewish Women in Council 950
A Trust Decision 951
Liquor and Crime 951
A Saloon District 951
Better Roads 952
Hampton Institute 952
The Manitoba School Question 952
In Germany 953
Thanksgiving 953
Government by Injunction 953
The Advent Season 953
The Church Congress 954
CONTRIBUTED ARTICLES:
Three Scots Worthies in America. By James MacArthur ... 956
Some Illustrated Books. By John C. Van Dyke 960
Poems by Paul Verlaine. Translated by Emerson G. Taylor .. 963
Old Books in New Dress. By Hamilton W. Mabie 964
Other Holiday Books 966
The Rural Church.—III. A Neglected Home. By J. Cleveland Cady 974
PAGE
Kate Carnegie.—XXIII., XXIV. By Ian Maclaren 976
Mrs. Smedley's Thanksgiving. By Mary T. Mott 981
SERMON:
The Kingdom, the Power, and the Glory. By Lyman Abbott 984
THE RELIGIOUS WORLD:
Mr. Moody's Meetings 986
Dr. Storrs's Jubilee 986
The Interseminary Missionary Alliance 986
Bishop Satterlee and the Czar. 986
Bishop Vincent's Orthodoxy ... 987
The New Bishop of London ... 987
The Catholic University's New Rector 987
Installation of Dr. M. J. Savage 987
A Mission to the Jews 987
Church Congress of the Protestant Episcopal Church 987
A Great Day at Hampton 999
NEW BOOKS 989
FOR THE LITTLE PEOPLE ... 992
THE HOME CLUB 993
CORRESPONDENCE 994
NOTES AND QUERIES 995
BOOKS RECEIVED 1014

Copyright, 1896, by The Outlook Company.
Entered as second-class matter in the New York Post-Office.

INDEX
TO
Publishers' and Booksellers' Advertisements

PAGE
American Baptist Pub. Soc'y ... 1005
American Tract Society 1005
Armstrong & Son, A. C 1002
Baker & Taylor Co 1002
Bangs & Co 1021
Barnes & Co., A. S 1006
Bible Study Pub. Co 1004
Biglow & Maine 1007
Century Co., The 998
Coates & Co., H. T 1008
Congl. S. S. & Pub. Society 1005
Cook Pub. Co., D. C 1002
Crowell & Co., T. Y 1001, 1002
Dodd, Mead & Co 1000
Dutton & Co., E. P 941
Earle, Jas. H 1005
Frowde, Henry 1015
Grant, F. E 947
Harper & Brothers 934, 946
Houghton, Mifflin & Co 940
John Church Co 1007
Ladies' Home Journal 995
Lamson, Wolffe & Co 1001
Lippincott Co., J. B 938
Littell & Co 1001
Little, Brown & Co 1003
Loisette, A 1008
Longmans, Green & Co 942
Lothrop Publishing Co 1001
Macmillan Co., The 935
McClurg & Co., A. C 1023
Merriam Co., The 941
Merriam, G. & C 1007
Modes Fashion Magazine 1004
Myers, J. & P. B 1004
Nelson & Sons, Thomas 943
Nichols Co., C. A 925
North American Review 1008
Novello, Ewer & Co 1003
Pathfinder, The 1005
Porter & Co., A. D 1005
Putnam's Sons, G. P 942
Richmond & Co., G. H 1004
Roberts Brothers 936
Rural New Yorker 1002
Russell & Son, R. H 1003
Scribner's Sons, Charles. 937, 996, 1003, 1016
Shepard Co., Henry O 999
Silver, Burdett & Co 1002
Stokes Co., F. A 940
Stone & Co., Herbert S 943
Stone & Kimball 1006
Treat, E. B 1007
Ward, Locke & Co 1005
Warne & Co., Frederick 1006
Whittaker, Thomas 1006
Wilde & Co., W. A .. 1004, 1007, 1013
Youth's Companion 997

LIBERAL DISCOUNTS

allowed on all books purchased from me. I can give you discounts probably on every book mentioned in this issue of The Outlook, and can save you many dollars in a year. It is for my business interest to please you, and satisfaction with every purchase is guaranteed or money refunded. When calling please ask for Mr. Grant.

SEND ME 10 CENTS FOR SET OF SPECIAL SLIPS

F. E. GRANT, Bookseller, 25 W. 42d St., New York City

SEVERAL EFFECTIVE DEVICES have just been added to the

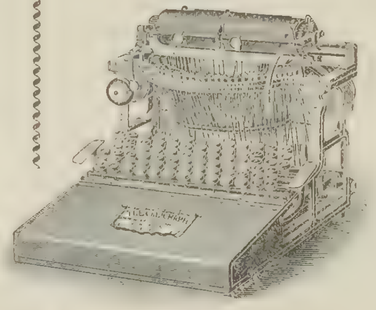
No. 4 Caligraph Typewriter



making it more desirable than ever

"IT OUTLASTS THEM ALL"

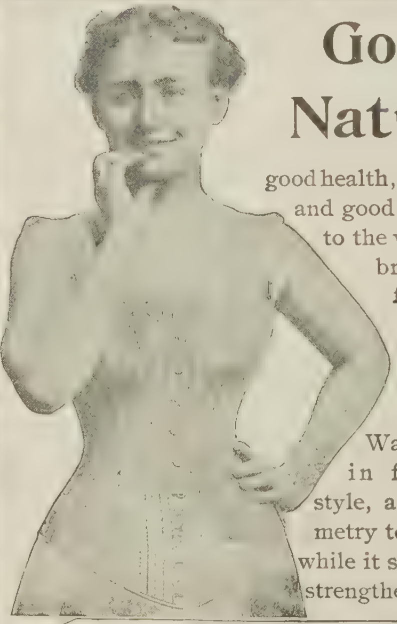
Descriptive pamphlet sent on request

AMERICAN WRITING MACHINE CO.
237 Broadway, New York

James McCreery & Co.

Evening Dress Fabrics,
Rich Laces,
Novelties in Hosiery and Underwear.
Novelty Assortment of Black Dress Goods.
Choice Table Linen,
Muslin Underwear.

Broadway & 11th St.
West 23d Street
New York



Good Nature

good health, good looks, and good style come to the woman who breaks away from corsets and revels in the comfort of a Ferris Waist. Perfect in form and style, adding symmetry to the figure while it supports and strengthens,—the should be in every woman's wardrobe. Made in short or extra long waist, high or low bust.

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE CORSET WAIST

Children's, 25c. to 50c. Misses', 50c. to $1. Ladies', $1 to $2.
For sale by all retailers.

DUNHAM'S COCOANUT

Copyrighted 1896

Makes Delicious Cocoanut Layer-Cakes, Pies, Puddings, Candies, Etc.

12,000,000 PACKAGES SOLD ANNUALLY

All Grocers. 10, 20, and 40 cent packages.

The Outlook

A·Family·Paper

Volume 54 Saturday, 28 November, 1896 Number 22

THE party lines of the future will, it is evident, be widely different from the party lines of the past; what they will be no one can at this writing clearly foretell. The immediate and pressing questions are all connected with the revenue; the remote but not unimportant ones are the relative authority of the Federal and the local governments: not their degree of authority, which was settled once for all by the Civil War, but the field in which their authority may be respectively exercised. This question is as yet remote, and cannot be permanently obscured in the public mind by charging all the descendants of the old Democracy of the Jefferson type with being disturbers of the public peace, and assuming that all virtue of loyalty to law and order is monopolized by the inheritors of Federal tendencies. The other and immediate question, of revenue, presents itself under two aspects—tariff and currency. On the tariff there is apparent an inclination of conservative or middle men, in both the National Democratic and the Republican parties, to get together, illustrated, for example, by such utterances as this of Bourke Cockran at the Chamber of Commerce dinner in New York City:

> " We are confronted with the necessity of raising revenue at the very threshold of this Administration. That question must be met, and for my part I am ready to concede the right of the majority to fix the means by which it shall be met. I would deplore as the greatest disaster that could overcome this country the spectacle of the President of the United States, elected on a platform of sound money, forced to bargain with the silver Senators for the passage of the legislation necessary to support the Government of the United States. Here is the theater where Democrats can show patriotism. Here is the opportunity which Democrats alone enjoy, and which is denied to our Republican brethren."

It is currently reported that President Cleveland is considering propositions for an increased tax on beer, and a moderate tax on tea and coffee. Both taxes raise large amounts for the revenue in England, and without friction or popular hostility. The "Evening Post" is quite right in saying that the question of economy in expenditures is quite as important as that of taxation for revenue. But whether Congress will take this view is, we fear, quite doubtful. It is, at all events, evident that protection is not just now a very vital issue, since it is impossible by any recognized method of taxation to raise the revenue which is absolutely indispensable without a tariff which will be practically protective.

* * *

It is at least too early to affirm that gold monometallism has won in this election. Says the New York "Journal" (Silver organ):

> " There is growing up an expectation that President McKinley, who knows a great deal more about the money question than the gold-standard men like to think he does, will be disposed to make use of his knowledge in his recommendations to the new Congress. It is not at all improbable that he will scandalize the monometallists by taking the Republican platform seriously and urging efforts looking toward international bimetallism. It is also not improbable that he will be averse to radical action in the matter of increasing the privileges and power of the national banks. Major McKinley is a cautious man, he has been a long time in public life, and is a shrewd student of popular sentiment. The problems he must face are difficult ones, and it is not likely that he will go at them rashly. The cause of silver has a strength behind it for which President McKinley will be pretty sure to show some respect, particularly as he is himself a veteran bimetallist."

We are inclined to believe that there is truth in these suggestions, and wisdom in them also. If Mr. McKinley is as wise a politician as we think him to be, he will recognize that the popular demand for bimetallism in this country is very strong. If the issue had been, not between gold and silver, but between gold and bimetallism, it is almost certain that the majority would have gone against gold. We shall be rather surprised if the President-elect does not, under the counsel of such advisers as Senator Hoar and President Walker, consider plans for bringing about international bimetallism, without the co-operation of England. Meanwhile a very wise plan has been started in the West for the organization of a commercial, non-partisan, non-political commission to frame some permanent currency scheme for the future. We quote from a dispatch in the New York "Tribune:"

> " Indianapolis, November 18 (Special).—The Board of Governors of the Board of Trade held a well-attended meeting to-night to consider the financial situation of the country. Justus C. Adams presided. By invitation Hugh H. Hanna, a prominent manufacturer, but himself not a member of the committee, read a paper outlining the plan of the movement. He said that since the Far West will not move in the direction desired, and such a movement instituted by the East would be met with the prejudices that pervade the West, it was left to the business men of the Central West to inaugurate a movement by which, he predicted, some desirable ends may be attained. He proposed that the Indianapolis Board of Trade invite the Boards of Trade of the fifteen or sixteen cities of the seven States lying east of the Missouri and west of the Alleghanies to meet here on December 1, and prepare a plan for a meeting of the Boards of Trade in the United States later in the month."

We earnestly hope that some such plan may be carried out, and an attempt, freed from the bitterness of political animosity, may be made for a scientific adjustment of our currency problem. And the place to make the attempt is in the West.

* * *

The report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration shows that 340,000 immigrants arrived last year, as against 280,000 the year preceding, when the prostration of business was greatest, and 503,000 in 1893, before the present depression began. As the number of immigrants registers in some measure the difficulty of finding employment, it would seem that this difficulty was at least materially less last year than two years ago. Most of those in Europe who contemplate emigrating to this country are in some way in communication with immigrants already here, and more immigrants would not have come to this country unless employment were easier to find here, or harder to find in Europe. Out of 270,000 who were over fourteen years of age, 78,000 could neither read nor write. Of these, 31,000 were from Italy and 36,000 from Austria and Russia. This is the kind of immigration which the Lodge Bill would exclude. As this measure has now not only the support of the labor organizations but also of the most definite pledge in the Republican platform, the Immigration Restriction League hopes to have it enacted into law by the present Congress. It has already passed the House.

❀

The friction which has retarded the development of the public-school system of New York under the new law is at an end. The Mayor has appointed four new members to the Board of Education, whose term of service is for three years from January 1—Messrs. E. Ellery Anderson, John E. Eustis, William Greenough, and Richard H. Adams. Two of the appointees are graduates of Harvard, one a graduate of Wesleyan University and the Columbia College law school, and the third, a native of New York City, was educated in Germany. The Mayor has also reappointed three of the old Commissioners. Two of these are identified with the former majority of the Board. The new appointments change the character of the Board and put the reform element in the majority. The friends of school reform throughout the whole country will rejoice for the marked advance made in the law, as well as in the character of the men governing the school system of the metropolis of the country. The committee on the establishment of high schools are actively at work. They hope to have at least one high school ready in February, but have been forced to change their plans, and it appears now that the high schools will not be ready for occupancy until September of 1897. The proposition has been made to change the school hours in the crowded districts where the greatest number of children are denied admission, arranging for one session from eight to twelve, and one from one to half-past four, with two sets of teachers. This plan has many advocates as being the only one that will meet the present emergency. There is money enough, its friends claim, to employ the double set of teachers, and they also declare that it will at least save one year of school life to thousands of children. Comparatively few of the buildings offered to the Board of Education are adapted to school-room purposes. The Building Department has condemned nearly all that have been offered, lack of ventilation and absence of light being the main causes for the condemnation.

❀

The National Council of Jewish Women has been in session during the past week in New York. The total membership of this Council is three thousand. The purpose of the Council was to bring about closer relations among Jewish women, to furnish a medium of communication and a means of prosecuting work of common interest, to educate the mass of the Jewish people by supplying means of study, and to further the efforts of social reform by the interchange of experience and suggestion and the application of the best thought to philanthropic effort. The officers of the Convention are all Chicago women, as the idea of the Convention grew out of the Congress of Women held in Chicago at the time of the World's Fair, when that city took up in a spirit of earnestness the idea of a National organization of Jewish women. The difficulties and limitations of the lives of the Hebrew immigrants to be found in such large numbers in all our large cities are fully realized by the intelligent Jewesses of the country. They recognize, as does every worker among the poor, that the best moral protection thrown about any family of immigrants is the preservation of their religion to them; they hold that proselyting means, in the vast majority of cases, a moral weakening that is almost fatal to the family. How to combat the skepticism that so soon assails the Hebrew family, how to combat indifference to their traditions, how to preserve the rites and ceremonials of their Church so that God may not be lost to these families, is a problem which these Jewish women recognize and are endeavoring to solve. One of them said: "This Convention is not to elevate Judaism, but to elevate our people through Judaism." The care, nurture, and culture of children was a paramount subject at the conference. First, the preservation of the home and the God of Judea in the home; secondly, how to preserve the home when pauperism stares it in the face; thirdly, how to educate the children of all classes in fidelity to their religious faith; and, finally, how to administer the charity and the philanthropic effort of the rich Hebrews so that larger returns will be made, were the questions that received full and intelligent attention from this audience. The Convention dropped the word National from its title, and will hereafter be known as "The Council of Jewish Women." The President of the Convention summed up the purpose of this Council in these words: "A true Jewish womanhood, a Jewish life, and a home true to our spiritual inheritance, true to the flag under which we live, faith in God's providence, these are the ties that bind us. This is the Jewish thought that shall belt the globe, bringing its message of higher life, of spiritual aims and purposes, practicing justice, loving mercy, and walking in modesty and humility before God and his light. For this we have come together."

❀

The Board of Health of New York City has within the last month begun investigations of the condition of bake-shops in the basements of tenement-houses on the East Side. These investigations have been carried on during working hours in the shops, from 12 to 4:30 A.M.; the result is that about one thousand arrests for violation of the law will be made. This law, which was passed in May of 1895, had the cordial support of the Bakers' Unions and the allied trades. It regulates the working hours, no man being allowed to work more than sixty hours a week or "more than ten hours in any one day," unless for the purpose of making a shorter work-day on the last day of the week; it provides that all buildings occupied by bakeries shall be drained and plumbed to the required standard; that any room used for the manufacture of flour or meal food-products shall have an impermeable floor; that the side walls shall be plastered or wainscoted, and whitewashed at least once in three months; that flour and meal food-products shall be kept in rooms so arranged that the floors and shelves can be perfectly cleaned; that proper wash-rooms and water-closets, apart from the bake-room or rooms where the food-product is manufactured, shall be furnished; that sleeping-places for the persons employed in the bakery shall be separate from the room or rooms where the food is manufactured or stored. The penalties for misdemeanors or violations of the law are $50 for the first offense, not less than $50 or more than $100 for the second offense, or an imprisonment of ten days, and for a third offense a fine of not less than $250, or imprisonment of not more than thirty days.

❀

On January 27, 1896, eight months after the passage of the law to regulate the manufacture of flour and meal food-products, the tenth annual report of the State Factory Inspectors was issued. The greater portion of that report was given to the bake-shops. The details of the report are so disgusting as to make it impossible for The Outlook to place them before its readers. The violations of the law regulating the hours of employment are almost incredible. In some of the bake-shops in the cellars under tenement-houses, where the sanitary conditions were sickening, men were found who were compelled to work from twelve to twenty-two hours a day. In one bake-shop in Mulberry Street the "second hand" was required to work nineteen hours a day seven days a week; or, in all, one hundred and thirty-three hours every week. For this he was paid $25 a month and boarded himself. He slept in the bakery on a mattress black with filth; he never took off his clothes to sleep. The inspector says that four others were employed in that shop, "and a more woe-stricken set of men it has never been our lot to see." In the Jewish bakeries men worked on an average about fifteen hours a day, but they work only six days in the week. In other shops it was found that the mattresses for the men are laid on top of the barrels of flour stored in the cellar. That it is time that public sentiment demanded the enforcement of this law is evident. Some defects in the law as printed make part of its enforcement difficult, especially the regulations as to the boiling of fat for crullers and doughnuts in buildings that are not fireproof. Among the many evils growing out of the tolerance of bake-shops in dwelling-houses is that of the escape of gas into the buildings. There is scarcely a tenement-house to be found in New York with a bake-shop in its basement in which the inmates will not be found to be suffering from throat and lung difficulties. Within a year a bake-shop in one of the large East Side tenements failed. It had been located there ten years. It was impossible to keep from coughing at any hour of the day on entering that building. The people in the house were all consumptive-looking, and the percentage of deaths of little children was enormous. The same families are occupying that house, and the decided improvement in their appearance began within three months after the shop was closed. To maintain hospitals, on the one hand, with lavish generosity, and, on the other hand, tolerate the conditions that make those hospitals necessary, is not a mark of intelligence.

⁂

The suit against the wire-nail trust begun some time ago by a Cincinnati manufacturer, on the ground that the trust had prevented a maker of machinery from fulfilling a contract to supply him with nail-making machines, has resulted in a temporary injunction against the trust. The attorneys for the nail combination sought to defeat the suit on the ground that the United States Court before which it was brought had no jurisdiction. The case was tried before Judge Baker, of the District Court at Indianapolis, who overruled the contention of the trust, making use of the following language:

> "The trust described is an unlawful combination, a conspiracy to raise the price of goods and to interfere with the manufacture of wire-nail machinery, and is in direct violation of an act of Congress, of good morals, and of the public weal."

The allegations made by the Cincinnati manufacturer, and not denied by the attorneys of the trust, amply justify the vigor of these terms. Not only was it alleged that the trust had purchased control of all the nail-making machinery in the country, so that competitors are forced to the wall, but also that the trust has, within eighteen months of falling prices, advanced the price of wire nails two hundred per cent., and by this extortion transferred $7,000,000 from the pockets of the nail-buying public to the pockets of its members. All of this plunder went to the stockholders in the trust. Labor received not the smallest driblet of it. On the contrary, the advance in the price of nails has been so great that hardware merchants in many parts of the country complain that the consumption of nails has been seriously reduced. In other words, the combination to raise prices has been incidentally a combination to lessen the demand for labor. The temporary injunction granted by Judge Baker has led to a wide-spread hope that in this case the Anti-Trust Law will be enforced against a trust. The loss of trade to hardware merchants has been so marked as to goad their National Association to action. At its recent meeting this Association resolved to make an aggressive fight. Some of the threats made seem to have proven to a certain degree effective. The price of wire nails has suddenly been reduced from $2.55 a keg to $1.70. Even this price, however, is double that at which such nails were sold before the trust was organized. The suit begun before Judge Baker should be prosecuted with vigor.

⁂

The Massachusetts Labor Bureau has again published a most valuable report. It deals exclusively with the relation of liquor to crime, pauperism, and insanity. So many loose assertions have been made on this subject that it is a great satisfaction to have a comprehensive and dispassionate examination of the facts. As to criminals the Massachusetts investigation is singularly comprehensive, and the results reached seem to justify most of the generalizations made by earnest temperance reformers. Examination was made of 26,672 convictions recorded last year. Of this number 18,232, or over sixty-eight per cent., were for drunkenness alone, or for drunkenness in connection with other crime. Of the 8,440 remaining convictions the further inquiry was made: "Was the criminal under the influence of liquor at the time the crime was committed?" In 3,640 cases the answer was "Yes." This left only 4,800 cases, or but eighteen per cent., in which the person convicted was entirely sober when his offense was committed. Further inquiries were made as to the condition of criminals when their crimes were planned, and as to the extent to which that condition was due to intemperate habits. The answers in these cases have less scientific value, as the accuracy of the criminal's statement is less reliable; but here also the answers simply made stronger the evidence of the closeness of the relationship between drunkenness and crime. Of less moral importance, but nevertheless of considerable interest, was the investigation of the parentage of criminals. In only thirteen per cent. of the cases were both parents native, in three per cent. one parent was native and the other foreign born, while in eighty-three per cent. of the cases both parents were foreign-born. In the State at large forty-four per cent. are of native stock, and fifty-six per cent. have foreign parentage.

⁂

In Boston the plan of confining the saloons to the business district has found support in an unusual quarter. The Chairman of the Police Board, General A. P. Martin, gives it his warm approval. The plan has been so successful in Minneapolis, Minn., where nine-tenths of the area of the city is saloon-free, that its application to Boston would certainly seem to be an immense stride forward. There are, however, certain practical difficulties in the way of the complete transplantation of the Minneapolis plan. The present law in Massachusetts allows one saloon in Boston for every 500 people, and there is not temperance sentiment enough in Boston to make the liquor interests fearful of extirpation. As a result, the 993 saloons now licensed will fight vigorously against any considerable reduction in their number, while a great many families residing in the so-called "business" district will fight as vigorously against any considerable increase in their saloon facilities. In fact, an emphatic protest against the proposed plan has already come from representatives of the temperance elements in the district marked out for the saloon quarantine. Apparently, therefore, the exclusion of the saloons from the distinctively residence districts in the city can be secured only through ward option, and public sentiment in Boston is turning strongly in that direction. Unfortunately, a few persons in general sympathy with the temperance movement are urging that saloons cannot logically be excluded from temperance neighborhoods in license cities unless admitted into drinking neighborhoods in no-license cities. This seems to us to be straining the logic of local option to the breaking point. The fundamental principle involved is the right of the people to protect themselves against the evils of the saloon. Local option is, on the whole, the best method of securing such protection, but its warmest advocates admit its inadequacy when the unit of local government is so small that the people of one district are "served" against their will by the saloons in the district adjoining. A license ward in a no-license town would supply saloons for the whole town against its will; a no-license ward in a license town, on the other hand, does not take away the saloons from the districts desiring them. To deny saloons in license towns the right to invade residence neighborhoods against their will is the natural development of the local option idea.

◆

Massachusetts has taken hold of the problem of better roads with greater vigor than any other commonwealth, and the progress it is making deserves National attention. The State Commission was established four years ago, with the duty of mapping out the work that needed to be done, and estimating the cost. Each year since, the work of the Commission has been enlarged, and more and more liberal appropriations have been made for carrying on its work. The Commission at the outset decided to reject the plan of building a few State roads, and to accept instead the plan of building a large number of good stretches of roadway in various parts of the State. The plan adopted proves to have been the wise one. According to Professor Shaler's recent book on "American Highways," the Commission learned a great deal of the relative value and cost of different kinds of road-beds from the large number of experiments tried, and the knowledge of road-making was immensely extended throughout the Commonwealth. Massachusetts towns are pure democracies, and the work done upon the roadways came directly under the popular judgment. The selectmen to whom the local supervision was intrusted became, many of them, experts in road-making. "When the Commonwealth began to build roads," says Professor Shaler, "there were no people outside of a few engineer officers who knew anything about the business. It is safe to reckon that there are at the present time not less than five hundred who have taken a sufficiently intelligent share in the labor to be tolerably well trained in the routine part of the business." In addition to these gains, there was a tremendous gain in the popularity of good roads. This was reflected in the appropriations made by the Legislature. In 1894, $300,000 was appropriated; in 1895 the sum was raised to $600,000. Next year, in spite of the hard times, a still further increase is possible. According to the Springfield "Republican" of last week, the Commission is receiving from various towns six times as many petitions for new roadways as can be granted. In part, of course, the number of these petitions is due to the fact that a relatively small part of the expense falls upon the town, and each wants its "share" of the State appropriation; but in part also the number of these petitions is due to the great popularity of the improved roads. The Commissioners hear from all quarters that the work of hauling has been greatly lessened by the State roads.

◆

In another column a correspondent gives a brief account of the formal dedication of the Armstrong and Slater Memorial Trade Schools at Hampton on Thursday of last week. Those who were present could not have been unmindful of the extraordinary beauty of the day and the extraordinary suggestiveness of the exercises. Never, surely, have an inspiring faith, a statesmanlike mind, and a resolute will illustrated more clearly the power of these invisible forces to effect momentous visible results. Eighteen years ago there was nothing at Hampton except the dream in General Armstrong's mind; to-day there is a large group of buildings, a large corps of teachers, an army of students, and behind these eighteen years of successful work along the most practical lines. Mr. Booker T. Washington, who was one of the speakers at the opening of the trade-schools, touched the very heart of the value of the education given in Hampton Institute at this stage in the declaration that the salvation of the negro race must be worked out, not only with pen and ink, but with square and compass, with saw and hammer, with spade and plow, and that a more practical connection must be made between the brains of the negro and his means of earning a livelihood. Thorough training in the practical arts of life is perhaps the most immediate and pressing need both of the negro and the Indian; and General Armstrong, who was swift to see that the solution of the race problem lay in education, was also swift to see that education in the workshop was the starting-point for the development of the full power of two races. Hampton, Tuskegee, Atlanta, and kindred institutions are making contributions to the solution of the race problem, the full importance of which will not be discerned for decades to come. In this work Hampton was the pioneer. No institution ever grew out of a greater need, and few have met such a need with so much wisdom, intelligence, and genuine power. The great throng of friends who crowded the chapel of the Institute last Friday showed how deep a hold it has taken not only upon the interest but upon the affection of the country.

◆

The curiosity that has existed both in Canada and this country as to the exact terms of the proposed settlement of the Manitoba school question is at last gratified by a semi-official statement from M. Laurier. The main features are as follows:

> Religious teaching is to be conducted in the public schools (1) if authorized by a resolution passed by a majority of school trustees, or (2) if a petition be presented to the Board of School Trustees asking for religious teaching and signed by the parents or guardians of at least ten children attending the school in a rural district, or by the parents or guardians of at least twenty-five children attending school in a city, town, or village. School work of a purely secular character will occupy the whole of the school day except the last half-hour, when the representative of any religious denomination will be allowed to come in and instruct the children belonging to his denomination, provided the parents are willing to have them remain. In cases where the people decide not to have this religious instruction, the regular school work will go on until the close of school hours.

These provisions are sufficiently liberal to the Roman Catholics to satisfy the more moderate parents and citizens, though the extremists and some of the newspapers profess to believe that their cause has been betrayed. Where there is an average attendance of twenty-five Roman Catholic children, they are to have a teacher of their own faith, and where the children are mostly French it is to be required that the teacher shall speak both French and English. The principle that has prevailed in this compromise is that of local option. Why does not this suggest a plan which might be profitably carried out in the United States? What are the objections to it?

* * *

The restiveness of Germany under the repressive policy of the present Emperor came out in a striking way in the debates in the Reichstag last week. The Government was successful in evading the attempt of various parties in opposition to secure information upon the question of the secret treaty with Russia, but it was not successful in attempting to define its policy with regard to the attitude of the military class toward civilians, and specifically with regard to the matter of dueling in the army. Every one who knows anything about Germany knows how arbitrary and insolent is the treatment which civilians are constantly receiving from the hands of army officers of all grades. In this country or in England such treatment would not be tolerated for an instant. In Germany, and especially in Prussia, it has been endured with a surprising docility. The story of outrages to which civilians have been subjected by army officers is a long one, and that which has aroused the recent discussion is by no means exceptional. A workingman who brushed against the chair in which an officer was sitting in Carlsruhe was promptly run through for an act which might have been pure accident, and which, in any event, was nothing more serious than a piece of impertinence. In the southern provinces, where the military spirit is not so dominant, there has long been an intense dislike of militarism in its offensive features, but now even Prussia, which has long been molded to the exigencies of a dominating military organization, is in revolt. The attitude of the Government seems to be that the army constitutes a class by itself, and that it can be kept in a high state of efficiency only by preserving an artificial sense of honor, which consists mainly in imposing every possible kind of annoyance and insolence upon civilians. Under the present system, if a German army officer thinks his honor touched in any way, or the honor of the army, he is justified in promptly putting the offender to death, he himself being the sole judge of the gravity of the offense. The debate showed that the Government takes the narrowest and most feudal view of the rights and privileges of the military class, and that very little is to be hoped from it in the way of reform; but the debate also showed that the German people have at last awakened to a sense of the enormity of the offenses which are constantly committed against them. Some very plain things were said with regard to the army, and even with regard to the Emperor, and if the latter has any sagacity he can hardly fail to read the handwriting on the wall, which declares unmistakably that the day of absolutism and of the rule of a military caste is fast drawing to an end.

Thanksgiving

We thank Him who has made and preserved us a Nation.

Who hid this continent from the eyes of the world until the time for its revelation had come.

Who summoned hither faithful men, believing in God and in men as the children of God.

Who preserved the brave colonists from famine, pestilence, and sword; from internal dissensions and from foreign foes.

Who united the hearts and minds of the various peoples in their demand for liberty and their declaration of independence.

Who made wise the counsels of their counselors and strong the arm of their defenders, and gave victory to the weak battalions.

Who pacified the strifes and vanquished the jealousies which separated the several States, and joined them in one indissoluble Union.

Who suffered not the corruptions of slavery to end in the Nation's death, but raised up prophets of liberty to awaken the consciences of the people.

Who gave to the Nation in the critical hour of its destiny leaders wise, brave, strong—men who saw the right clearly, and dared to do the right.

Who crowned not the National arms with victory until the Nation had proclaimed emancipation to the slave and to itself.

Who followed the wounds of a great war with the healings of a great peace, and the impoverishment of destructive war with the wealth of beneficent peace.

Who has brought to our shores the oppressed of other lands, and made it a refuge, a school, a home for the needy and the aspiring of all nations.

Who has given us wisdom in the past to provide a free school and free churches for a free people.

Who inspires in our own day clear-sighted, brave-hearted men to battle without truce or retreat against open violence and insidious corruption, against the perils of popular ignorance and the perils of concentrated wealth.

Who inspires other clear-sighted, brave-hearted men to toil in peaceful vocations without stint for public education and public virtue.

Who has given to us an open Bible, a risen Christ, a living Church, and a common faith in a righteous and a redeeming God.

Whose protecting, guiding, inspiring presence in the past is the ground of our hope for our Nation in the future.

O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness and his wonderful works to the children of men!

Government by Injunction

Our readers will find on another page an able defense of government by injunction from a lawyer of Toledo. We are obliged to him, and are glad to lay his views before our readers, for we think the subject one of the first importance to the Republic.

The main proposition of Mr. A. L. Smith's letter is entirely reasonable. There is no reason "why individuals or corporations should be deprived of the remedy by injunction against threatened interference with their property rights, simply because the public are interested in, or affected by, the controversy in question." The right of the Court to grant such injunctions in proper cases was not denied; nor was the obligation to punish violations of proper injunctions disputed. The question was whether, in such cases, it is safe to allow a single judge first to prescribe a rule of conduct, then to declare that it had been violated, and finally to punish the violation, in his absolute discretion, without a jury and without appeal.

Until within the last thirty years we believe that there never was an instance in which an English or American court granted an injunction to restrain the commission of an act which was a clear and positive crime, punishable as such by the criminal law. There were any number of strikes, riots, and criminal conspiracies tending to injure property rights, and yet it never occurred to anybody to so much as ask any court to grant an injunction against them. Injunctions were asked, both in England and America, against libels, and were refused. The first case in which any English court ever granted an injunction against the criminal proceedings of strikers occurred in 1868; and we have not been able to find that another injunction like it has ever since been granted. In the United States we have not been able to find that any such injunction has ever been granted by a State court. But the Federal courts have recently granted and enforced several injunctions of this kind. The Debs case is the most famous as well as the most recent, and that is of course the case which presents the question most clearly.

In the Debs case the United States claimed the right to intervene by injunction, under the provisions of the Anti-Trust Law, referred to by Mr. Smith. The use of that law for this purpose is one of the grievances most bitterly resented by the laboring classes. This statute was passed for the avowed purpose of putting a restraint upon great corporations and monopolies. Not a single corporation has been interfered with under it, nor a single monopoly restrained. The present Attorney-General has never made the slightest effort to put the law in operation against the persons and corporations whom it was intended to restrain. Very possibly his action in this respect has been expedient, as all efforts of the previous Attorney-General in that direction had failed. But to discover in this statute, which was intended solely for the purpose of restricting corporations, a new weapon in favor of corporations, however ingenious it may be and however justified in law, was eminently calculated to arouse bitter feelings. This law, at any rate, has emphatically been proved to be one which cannot be enforced against the rich, and which can be enforced against the poor.

Under this law an injunction was issued against Debs, commanding him to refrain from certain acts which, if he committed them, were crimes, upon a charge of which in the ordinary way he would have a right to trial by jury. A single judge, granting this injunction, caused Mr. Debs to be arrested on a charge, not of the act itself, but of a violation of the order prohibiting that act. The same judge sentenced Debs to six months' imprisonment for a violation of the injunction, being substantially the same punishment which would have been inflicted upon him had he been tried in a criminal court and convicted by a jury. Now, the Supreme Court says that this does not in the least deprive Debs of his right to trial by jury, because, if he wants to, he can have himself indicted in a criminal court, tried by a jury, and sentenced to imprisonment for six months more. He has not been imprisoned for his criminal act; he has only been imprisoned for his disobedience of the court's order.

All this brings to mind the famous statement of the philosopher in Scott's "Antiquary." He told his nephew that there was no imprisonment for debt in Scotland. What really happened was that the creditor informed the King of the debt, and thereupon the King wrote his gracious "letters in four forms," commanding the debtor within a given time to pay his debt. The debtor, obstinately refusing to do so, was then denounced as a rebel by three blasts of a horn in Edinburgh. After which he was arrested, not in the least as a debtor, but solely as a rebel against his Most Gracious Majesty the King.

Where is this thing to stop? Embezzlement and shoplifting are plainly injuries to property and nothing else. Shall they be restrained by injunction? Shall the great establishments of New York and Chicago obtain twice a year injunctions against all their clerks prohibiting embezzlement, and thereupon, when an embezzlement is committed, secure the punishment of the criminal for contempt of court? It is manifest that this would be a most easy and pleasant method for the managers of these establishments. Instead of having to dance attendance upon a District Attorney, a Grand Jury, and finally a trial jury, and subject themselves or their agents to the annoyance of cross-examination, they would have nothing to do but to file affidavits proving the embezzlement, upon which, after hearing counter affidavits from the accused clerk, a single judge would decide, without troubling any jury, that the embezzlement had been committed. Thereupon he would sentence the offender to six months' imprisonment, not at all on account of his theft, but solely on account of his contempt of court. On appeal from such an order the only question is whether the papers stated upon their face sufficient facts to give the judge jurisdiction. All the affidavits may be false—and it is well known that affidavits are very seldom entirely true—but that makes no difference. The accused person may in fact never have committed the offense, but that makes no difference so long as a single judge decides that he has done so.

This was very strikingly illustrated forty years ago in the case of Passmore Williamson, a Quaker, who was commanded by one of the United States judges of that day, a judge just as sincere, upright, and incorruptible as any Federal judge at the present day, to deliver a negro to his master. Failing to do so, he was convicted, by the sole decision of this judge, of the crime of concealing the negro. Everybody who looked into the papers was perfectly well satisfied that Mr. Williamson really did not commit this atrocious crime; but the Federal judge had lost his temper, and, upon the strength of affidavits plainly false, adjudged that Mr. Williamson was responsible for the "nigger." As the slave-driver could not catch the "nigger," the judge shut up the Quaker. It was then decided by the courts that there was no appeal and no redress, and Passmore Williamson actually remained in jail until the judge recovered his temper and became amenable to a sense of decency. It is unlikely that any other judge than the one who issued the order in that case would ever have made a decision so contrary to notorious facts as was then made.

What we claim is that the judge who issues the order and who feels his sense of dignity wounded by disobedience to that order should not be the sole judge of the question whether it has been disobeyed or not. And where such disobedience necessarily involves the commission of a crime, we think that the question should be left to the decision of a jury, precisely as the question whether a crime had been committed, without any injunction, would have to be left, under the Constitution of the United States and of every State in the Union.

The Advent Season

The Episcopal Church offers a most helpful suggestion to its sister churches by its setting apart four Sundays, besides Christmas Day, for commemoration of the Advent of Jesus Christ. The incoming into the world of that life which is to pervade the life of the world with its regenerating spirit is a fact of so many-sided significance that the observance only of its natal day gives scant opportunity to the mind and conscience that would apprehend the full import of that Divine Fact. Fitting as the effort is for all days, some days more than others incite to it. For the study and exhibition of those fundamental principles which distinguish the world with Christ from the world without Christ—the only principles from which we can look for better men and better institutions to proceed—the weeks of the Advent season seem specially opportune.

The Church Congress

The meeting of the Church Congress at Norfolk, Va., last week, a report of which appears in another column, was significant in several ways. It brings to mind afresh the vital movement in the Episcopal Church which has of late years brought it into closer touch with American life and given it an influence out of proportion to its numbers, for it is certainly true that in dealing with practical methods of religious work and with sociological and religious questions this great communion stands in the forefront, while in numbers it ranks seventh. The Church Congress is a body which discusses but never votes; this does not mean, however, that it never decides. On the contrary, many questions are practically settled by preliminary discussion before they reach the General Convention, which is the legislative body of the Episcopal Church. The Church Congress has consequently no small influence in shaping the policy of the Church and in giving it ultimate direction. It serves also as a place of escape for those ideas and schemes which in escaping melt into thin air and leave even their originators at peace. This does not mean that it offers a free platform for cranks; on the contrary, it has from the start been remarkably free from eccentricity. But it does make room for men to free their minds on a great variety of questions, and it is therefore one of the preservers of peace and order in the Church. The freedom of speech which it permits is a thousand-fold more effective in this direction than the most rigid ecclesiastical repression. The liberty is used generously, but it is not abused.

The Congress is of great importance also because it brings the clergy and the laity together on the same platform; and the Episcopal Church has always been strong in men of commanding ability and influence outside the pulpit. In fact, the opinion long prevailed among people in other Churches that the Episcopal laity were intellectually superior to the clergy. However that may have been during the decades when the life of the Church was less vital and its preaching less vigorous and searching, it is certainly true no longer. A Church which has given the country thinkers like Mulford, preachers like Brooks, scholars like Allen, men of combined intellectual and administrative force like Bishop Potter, priests of such consistent courage and devotion as Dr. Dix, has no need to apologize for the quality of its clergy. In this city, for instance, the prominent Episcopal pulpits are all places of notable personal and spiritual authority, and men like Drs. Huntington, Rainsford, Greer, Grant, Shipman, Dix, and Bishop Potter stand in the front rank of contemporary preachers.

The Church Congress, representing as it does the progressive element in the Church and the free movement of ideas, has been mainly in the hands of the liberal, progressive men in the Church. The men of extreme views, either with regard to the sacraments or the authority of the Church, have, as a rule, held aloof from it; but moderate men of all schools are heard on its platform, and the views of the two main wings of the Church are brought out with entire frankness but also with entire good spirit. There is thus afforded a prime opportunity for men of these two wings to meet each other and hear directly from each other instead of through intermediaries; and it need hardly be said that nothing is more provocative of division and bitterness than the failure of those who hold divergent views to come into personal contact and to get impressions of each other at first hand. It is one of the noblest characteristics of the Episcopal Church that it has been large enough to afford room for differences of opinion on ecclesiastical questions and on questions of philosophical interpretation of the facts of Christianity, while holding to the facts with unusual tenacity and giving them the first place in worship and teaching. There will always be these two parties in the Church; or, rather, to be more exact, there will always be an active and coherent party holding advancing views of doctrine and sacraments, and there will always be the spirit which makes for breadth, freedom, and true catholicity—the spirit which reacts against excess in ritual, against undue emphasis on symbols and sacraments, and which holds to the spiritual vitality and power of the Church as the true basis of its authority. This spirit is not the less influential in the long run because it does not foster close and aggressive party organization. At this moment, in this country as in England, there is a strong reactionary movement in the Church. This movement has not yet reached its height; it may go still further and become still more powerful, but it will not finally stamp itself on the Church. There are elements of weakness in it which will impair its influence and check its advance. These influences are already showing themselves plainly in England; they will presently show themselves here. Sacerdotalism and sectarianism, in their extreme forms, will not finally establish themselves in this country; that which is true and sound in this movement will remain; that which is artificial, mechanical, and purely ecclesiastical will pass away.

The Church Congress has had no small influence in developing true catholicity of spirit in the Episcopal Church—a clear recognition of the fact that a real church must find room for men who, agreeing sincerely on the great facts of Christian revelation and history and accepting them heartily, differ in their philosophical and ecclesiastical interpretation of these facts. The men of broader mind have come to see clearly that certain questions between the two wings must be, to quote the phrase of a leader of the Church, neutralized; that certain differences of opinion of these questions must be recognized and accepted. There is to be, therefore, no final triumph of either wing; and the Church is never to become, as some extremists would like to have it become, a small sect holding identical theological views and practicing a uniform ritual—a monotonous uniformity of thought and worship. This was what befell the Roman Church when the Ultramontanes captured it and destroyed the old national freedom and enthusiasm of the German, French, Spanish, and English Churches, and put in their places the dreary monotony of the Italian Church; this is what will befall the Roman Church in this country if American Catholics like Archbishop Ireland and Bishop Keane are finally crushed. That is precisely what would happen in the Episcopal Church if a small body of advanced sacramentarians and sacerdotalists could have their way. But they will not have their way, because the genius of the country, of the Church, and of spiritual Christianity is striving against them; and the Episcopal Church in this country, in spite of reactionary movements, will remain free, spacious, and fundamentally religious instead of becoming repressed, narrow, and rigidly ecclesiastical. To this result the Church Congress has contributed not a little; and in so doing has rendered a lasting service to the religious life of the country.

Three Scots Worthies in America

By James MacArthur

Co-Editor of "The Bookman"

If the shade of the venerable chronicler of the sufferings of the Scottish martyrs in his "Book of Scots Worthies" were to witness the use I have made of his noble title testifying to the undying religious worth of those who lived and died "for Christ and his Church," he would stand aghast at its sacrilegious application to those who follow so remote and alien an avocation as the writing of what one of our grandfathers called "lying tales." Life to the Scottish Puritan, the Puritanism of the Covenant, was an austere, self-denying ordinance. He stood with his back to the wall fighting, not for dear life, but for what was dearer still to him, his faith; and thus he conquered for Scotland her ecclesiastical freedom. But if the austere spirit we have evoked from the strenuous past were to ponder the literary product of these writers who have succeeded to his title, and were he to trace the stream back to its source, he would cease to be shocked, and a wondering smile of admiration would gather about his wan features as he saw in these men and their work the natural outcome of the period of stress and storm during the long struggle for religious freedom in Scotland. The echoes of that great religious and intellectual war resound in their writings. Their spirits have sprung from the soil sown with the blood of the martyrs. They are the lineal descendants of the old Scots Worthies.

In 1866 a young journalist who had descended from the bleak hills of northern Scotland to London saw the possibilities which existed in the fertile and fond imagination to capture the life of this people and crystallize it in undying forms of art, and with a foreseeing eye wrote this singularly prophetic passage in a letter to a friend: "In Scottish life, political, social, and religious, you have a rich and almost unworked mine, a mine from which I have no doubt you will dig valuable ore and beat it into shapes that will attract even the southerner's eye." This was the hope which beat in another young Scotchman's breast when, twenty years later, he also went to London from the historic pulpit of Dr. Horatius Bonar, in Kelso, to enter the ranks of journalism. It was then—in 1887—that Dr. Nicoll inaugurated the "British Weekly." It had been established about six months, when one day the editor was reflecting gloomily on whether it was possible to find a man who could write in a lively way on Scottish ecclesiastical affairs. He took up the Edinburgh "Evening Dispatch" and found in it a burlesque account of the Inverness Assembly of the Free Church then in session. He lost no time in putting himself in communication with the writer, and on July 1, 1887, an article appeared on the front page of the "British Weekly" on "The Rev. Dr. Whyte, By an Outsider." It was signed "Gavin Ogilvy," and in Scotland immediately drew attention to the writer. Before many months had passed his name and style were well known north and south. But there was an allusion in this article which the alert editor was not slow to observe. In it Mr. Barrie spoke of Thrums, and said that its inhabitants would discuss any topic with you, from the ontology of being to Robert Louis Stevenson's style, but for choice give them the Rev. Dr. Whyte. Here was perhaps the man for whom Dr. Nicoll was looking. Almost immediately, in the autumn of the same year, Mr. Barrie's story, "When a Man's Single," began to appear serially in the "British Weekly," and there followed subsequently nearly all the chapters that compose "A Window in Thrums." It was at this juncture that Dr. Nicoll's influence and insight swayed Mr. Barrie and caused that immense difference which divides the "Auld Licht Idylls" from "A Window in Thrums," and gave to the latter that quality which brings every reader of its pages to his knees. "I urged Mr. Barrie," Dr. Nicoll said once to me, "to represent the deeper and nobler elements in the life of the Scotch people—the profound sentiment and real heroism, as well as what is eccentric, grotesque, humorous."

From a copyrighted photograph by Frederick Hollyer, London

Believe me very truly yours
J. M. Barrie

Mr. Crockett, also, tells us how "a great London editor [Dr. Nicoll] wrote some years ago to a young and perfectly unknown writer [Mr. Crockett], and advised him to collect and print his tales, which had been appearing in a local paper and were being copied into various colonial papers. He prophesied a future for them such as even the fond heart of their parent could not believe in. No kinder or more chivalrous thing was ever done to an unknown author." The book when published was "The Stickit Minister and Some Common Men." The English edition of Mr. Crockett's last book, "The Gray Man," bears this dedication:

To
W. R. Nicoll are affectionately inscribed these Chronicles of a Stormy Time
in Memory of Unforgotten Days of Peace and Quietness
Spent with him and his.

Mr. Barrie's "When a Man's Single" was dedicated to Dr. Nicoll, and one of the latter's numerous literary treasures is the closely written manuscript of the "Little Minister" in two volumes, handsomely bound, with an inscription from the author to Dr. Nicoll. I may also say here that another of his treasures is a calf-bound copy of "Beside the Bonnie Brier-Bush" inscribed to

Dr. W. R. Nicoll, without whose suggestion this book had not been written,
October, 1894,
from the author.

In the introduction to the "Auld Licht Idylls" in the new Thistle Edition of his works (Scribner's), Mr. Barrie says that "they were written mainly to please one woman now dead." In the beautiful biography of his mother, "Margaret Ogilvy," just published, he speaks of "the mute blue eyes in which I have read all I know and would ever care to write; for when you looked into my mother's eyes you

John Watson.

From the latest photograph. Copyright, 1896, by The Rockwood Company, New York knew as if He had told you why God sent her into the world—it was to open the eyes of all who looked to beautiful thoughts, and that is the beginning and end of literature." How much, how very much, Mr. Barrie owes to his mother and to his home life may be gathered from this little volume. It is a book to lay beside "A Window in Thrums," not only because of the beauty of the work, but because it flashes a light upon those chapters which illumines them, and, if possible, makes them more noble and enduring in their revelation. He tells us how one day as a boy he conceived a glorious idea, "or it was put into my head by my mother, then desirous of making progress with her new clouty hearthrug." He was suffering from a moment of suspense in the interval between the last and forthcoming numbers of a magazine called "Sunshine," which contained a serial story. "The notion was nothing short of this—why should I not write the tales myself? I did write them—in the garret—but that by no means helped her to get on with her work, for when I finished a chapter I bounded downstairs to read it to her, and so short were the chapters, so ready was the pen, that I was back with a new manuscript before another clout had been added to the rug." At twelve or thereabout he put the literary calling to bed for a time, and took up cricket and football instead, but from the day on which he first tasted blood in the garret his mind was made up. "There could be no hum-dreadful-drum profession for me; literature was my game. I remember being asked by two maiden ladies about the time I left the University what I was to be, and when I replied, brazenly, 'An author,' they flung up their hands, and one exclaimed, reproachfully, 'And you an M.A.!'" His mother's views at first were not dissimilar, and her ambition for her boy was that he should be a minister, with a lurking hope at the bottom of her heart that he might rise to a professor's chair. Mr. Barrie relates an incident of those years which has a prophetic significance. "I had one person only on my side; he was an old tailor, one of the fullest men I have known, and quite the best talker. . . . This man had heard of my sets of photographs of the poets, and asked for a sight of them, which led to our first meeting. . . . I remember how he spread them out on his board, and, after looking long at them, turned his gaze on me and said solemnly,

'What can I do to be forever known,
And make the age to come my own?'

These lines of Cowley were new to me, but the sentiment was not new, and I marveled how the old tailor could see through me so well. I hurried home, but neighbors had dropped in, and this was for her ears only, so I drew her to the stair and said imperiously,

'What can I do to be forever known,
And make the age to come my own?'

It was an odd request for which to draw her from a tea-table, and she must have been surprised, but I think she did not laugh, and in after years she would repeat the lines fondly with a flush on her soft face. 'That is the kind you would like to be yourself!' we would say in jest to her, and she would reply, almost passionately, 'No, but I would be windy (proud) of being his mother.' . . . She who stood with me on the stair that day was a very simple woman, accustomed all her life to making the most of small things, and I weaved sufficiently well to please her, which has been my only steadfast ambition since I was a little boy."

I have said that this is a book to put side by side with "A Window in Thrums," and there is a deeper reason for this when we remember that on the recent deaths of Mr. Barrie's mother and her daughter, within a few hours of each other, it was then disclosed that they were the originals of Jess and Leeby. The lovely story of their lives had a beautiful and not wholly mournful end; it was mournful as mortal things are, but the beauty was more than the sorrow, and Mr. Barrie's book will make this clearer. In the almost intolerably pathetic chapter, "Dead This Twenty Years," Mr. Barrie, in writing about the tragedy in another woman's life, drew his inspiration from a similar tragedy in his mother's life. "It was the only thing," he says, "I have written that she never spoke about, not even to that daughter she loved the best. No one ever spoke of it to her or asked her if she had read it; one doesn't ask a mother if she knows that there is a little coffin in the house. She read many times the book in which it was printed, but when she came to that chapter she would put her hands to her heart or even over her ears."

I was struck by a remark which Dr. Henry van Dyke made at the dinner given to Mr. Barrie at the Aldine Club on November 5. He told us how, on the morning after the election, his little boy came running up to him, exclaiming, "Papa, McKinley's anointed!" The word has a peculiar fitness, it seems to me, in characterizing the distinctive quality in Mr. Barrie's work. The light of consecration lies upon every page. It is the light that never was on sea or land, but is all the more real because it shines from a beautiful soul. The anointing from on high which gave the divine right to kings — may not also the same spiritual unction obtain in the sovereignty of letters?

MRS. WATSON

Photograph by The Rockwood Company, New York

The literary impulse which sprang to light in the first instance in "Auld Licht Idylls" has shown evidence that it was no isolated wonder, but that it was a deeper movement borne on a strong undercurrent which was impelling the imagination of several writers uniformly to the same goal, each, however, coloring the stream of romance with his own peculiar genius. We have found that "The Raiders" was written previous to "The Stickit Minister," and that twenty years ago the material was seething in Ian Maclaren's brain which has since been "beat into such beautiful shapes." Indeed, an incident occurred to Dr. Watson many years ago in Liverpool which might be taken as the genesis of the "Bonnie Brier-Bush." One evening, after delivering a lecture on Scottish life, a friend said to him, "You ought to develop that lecture and turn it into a book." The lecture was never published, but we have the evolution of the idea in "Beside the Bonnie Brier-Bush."

Dr. Watson tells you, in that playful ironic manner peculiar to the Scot, how Dr. Nicoll kept at him—"talk, talk, talk, in that queer, quiet way of his"—to write some sketches of Scottish life, how in desperation he wrote a story, "a very poor story I believe it was, but I could only convince him of my penury by exhibiting my rags. But, oh! that man! he's just 'no canny.'" In short, the manuscript was returned, and he was told that he could do far better. "Write something else in your true vein," wrote Dr. Nicoll, "and send it to me soon."

W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A., LL.D.

"There was nothing for it but to give in," continues Dr. Watson, "so I thought of some types of character which I had known in my Scottish parishes when I was a young minister about twenty years ago, and I selected one or two of them, and wrote 'Domsie,' which, you remember, is the first sketch in the 'Brier-Bush.' And, by the way, there is just one point which I should like to mention now. Some people seem curious about the 'originals' of this and that character in the stories. If the book continues to interest people, I should like it to be known that there are no originals—that there is not a single portrait in the volume; the people are simply individualizations of types that are familiar to every minister—or, for the matter of that, to every layman—in any Highland or semi-Highland parish. But I was telling you about 'Domsie.' This time I didn't receive the manuscript back again. I simply got a letter from Dr. Nicoll, the purport of which was that 'Domsie' had affected him much in the same manner that you were kind enough to say it had affected you. It was just what he wanted, and should appear in an early number of the 'British Weekly.' Then he wanted more, and somehow the other stories came into shape, till finally the book was published. And there it is; but, as I have said, it is a surprise to me still."

It is more than suggestive to learn that Dr. Watson first thought of giving "Beside the Bonnie Brier-Bush" the general title "Annals of a Perthshire Parish." Indeed, to define the character of Dr. Watson's "Kate Carnegie" [which closes in this number] as a novel one must go back to John Galt. The permanent impression that the reading of this book leaves is that Ian Maclaren is the true successor in the present Scottish school of fiction of the author of the "Annals of the Parish." In some of the chapters of "Kate Carnegie" Dr. Watson's humor is seen at its best and purest—in other words, at its quietest and driest. But he is seen at his strongest in his portrait of the "Rabbi." Jeremiah Saunderson is undeniably Dr. Watson's masterpiece, and this portrait, which is the best he has yet given us, would in itself insure a wide popularity for the book which contains it. The "Rabbi" is the most powerful impersonation of Scottish spirituality whom much learning has made almost mad that has ever been presented in fiction.

Dr. Watson is perhaps the most popular man in America at the present hour. He arrived in this country fully two months ago, and after delivering the Yale Lectures on Preaching, which were received with unbounded satisfaction, and have been published under the title "The Cure of Souls," he started on his lecture tour, which has been a series of unprecedented triumphs on the platform. It is remarkable that the audiences which seem to be attracted to Dr. Watson are largely the theater-going, entertainment-loving people. That is to say, he represents the democracy. No one can read his books without feeling how thoroughly democratic he is, and the man on the platform is the same man we have learned to love in his books. The power of sympathy, together with his great fund of humor, which are so potent there, are characteristic qualities of the lecturer. I have heard him twice since he came to America, and the enthusiasm which his presence begot on each occasion was marvelous. He has a way of taking you into his confidence, of telling you about the characters in his books as if they were real personages, of presenting them to the audience so that you actually see them, which is intensely dramatic. He will speak of Drumsheugh, who, as he enters his study, "just fills the door." He tells you how he reasoned with Jamie Soutar about his stretch of imagination in straining the truth and in drawing on his powers of unveracity, and then, with a touch which reveals Jamie to you in a flash, he will say, "But as he went out of the door I declare if he didn't wink at me." Good people, he says, have objected to Posty in his book, because of his lapses into drunkenness; but when he describes how he saw Posty fling off his coat to jump into the mill-stream to save the child who had fallen into its raging waters, and how he struggled with him, and how Posty left the coat in his hands and jumped, knowing that he might save the child but could not save himself, the thrill that passes through the audience is one of conviction, and none would dare after that to say a word against poor Posty. In his lecture on Scottish characteristics he is equally happy. The Scottish characteristics, according to Ian Maclaren, are five: humor, which in the Scot takes the form of irony; caution, or, as he would say, "canniness;" love of argument; dourness, which is something more than obstinacy, and which Ian Maclaren illustrated in this way: "Were I a showman," he said, "and had a magic lantern here, I would flash this picture on a screen. I would show you a stocky, short-necked, long-horned cow, with her calf beside her, who had suddenly become aware of approaching tourists. The short neck grows shorter, the horns seem to lower, the nostrils twitch, and there is a dangerous gleam in the eyes. I should throw this picture on the screen, and I would say, 'Gentlemen—Dourness.'" The fifth Scottish characteristic Ian Maclaren named as sentiment. He spoke of it as the sap of tenderness protected by the rough bark of "dourness."

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Barrie and Dr. Robertson Nicoll sailed for England on November 7. Dr. Watson and Mrs. Watson will remain here until December 16. The five weeks which the former spent among us were distributed in visiting several country towns in New England, Boston, Niagara Falls, New Orleans, Washington, and Philadelphia. Their headquarters were at the Holland House in New York. Everywhere they acknowledge that they were received with kindness, and they say that they have gone back to England with larger, more enlightened, more generous thoughts of this great country and this great people. "Our first impressions of New York," they said, "were, first, its Continental look, then the noise made by the traffic on the rough pavement, and, lastly, the erect bearing of the women. It is a noble city, not so much of the business type as we had expected—in short, not a Manchester or Glasgow, but a grand foreign capital. Fifth Avenue in particular is a magnificent street, stretching out for miles, with its many imposing public and private buildings. The noise is at first deafening." While in New York they went to hear Dr. John Hall, of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church. "Dr. Hall," says Dr. Nicoll, "reminds me of the best type of the Disruption minister—dignified, authoritative, clear, with strong foundations of doctrine underlying his exhortations—a man of weight. No tincture of the modern spirit—its wonder, its yearning, its weakness—entered his discourse. Things were settled—they were so—let us not trifle, but act. Neither was there anything of the modern style—no light, or color, or touch of imagination. But the language was clear, terse, and impressive, and you felt such preaching must do good. After all, there are millions of people who have never read, or at least never been touched by, Browning or Carlyle." Dr. Nicoll and Mr. Barrie seemed amazed that the earlier books of Mrs. Beecher Stowe, such, for instance, as "Old Town Folks," were so sadly neglected. "I found," says Dr. Nicoll, "that Miss Wilkins had read and greatly admired 'The Minister's Wooing,' but did not know much beyond it. The fact is, so far as I have seen, Americans are very modest about their authors, and hardly realize the immense influence many of them have had in England." They spent a pleasant visit at the home of Mr. G. W. Cable, in whom they were very much interested, Mr. Barrie having as a young journalist in Nottingham written long and enthusiastic articles on Mr. Cable's early books. Of all men in America, Mr. Barrie said, he most wished to meet the author of "Old Creole Days" and "The Grandissimes," and the meeting took place under the happiest circumstances. Dr. Nicoll considers Mr. Cable the greatest of living American authors. In connection with his new monthly, called "The Symposium," Mr. Cable was interested to hear that Professor Drummond long ago thought of "The Symposium" as a title for a monthly magazine. We gather from Dr. Nicoll's visit to Northampton, which revived recollections of Dr. John Todd, the author of "Sermons to Children" and "The Students' Guide," that the "Sermons to Children" was the first book that Dr. Nicoll ever read with interest, the first book which ever gave to him the idea that there might be something pleasant in reading. On the occasion of the dinner at the Aldine Club given to him and Mr. Barrie, Dr. Nicoll gathered up his impressions of "the present state of literature in America" in a speech which is published in the December "Bookman."

THRUMS

DRUMTOCHTY—THE VILLAGE

These are the days when, contrary to the famous proverb, all things under the sun are New, and in speaking of the new school of Scottish fiction we are reminded that many people deplore the neglect which is shown to the older national writers, and decry the present enthusiasm for the new writers as a fad or fashion. It recalls a story which I once heard about an old Scotch minister and his beadle (sexton), who, after locking up the church for the day, were walking home grieving over the poor attendance as compared with the large audiences which a younger minister was drawing in the same street. The beadle, who was a tailor, also had reason to take the matter sorely to heart, and, in seeking to sympathize with the minister, said: "We are just twa auld men that the world has nae use for now. My best customers have all left me for the fashionable tailor doon the street. Minister, it's a' in the cut. It's the new cut that has put us baith out o' fashion!"

Some Illustrated Books

By John C. Van Dyke

NEARLY a hundred years ago Professor Edward Christian, of Cambridge, sighing over the deterioration in books, wrote: "The fury for prints proves the frivolity of the times; and our books, I fear, will shrink from comparison with those of the age of Queen Anne, which were not adorned with such superfluous and meretricious decorations." But what would the Professor write if he could only see the illustration of the present day! The "fury for prints" has increased tenfold. The pictorial is everywhere, in books, magazines, and newspapers, in commerce and trade, in the scientific laboratory, the archæological museum, and the college lecture-room. Some of it serves a purely illustrative purpose, some of it has no more definite aim than entertainment, some of it is designed to catch the applause of the groundlings and is mere claptrap. One can agree with Professor Christian that the claptrap is "meretricious" without being able to suggest a means of escape from it; but the decorative and the illustrative are far from being "superlative" features of modern life. Even that which merely pleases the sense of sight with form and color is not to be despised. It educates the eye if it does not inform the mind, and the education of the sense of sight has worked wonders in nineteenth-century progress.

Of course the progress of the present is always foolishness to those who hold by the excellences of the past. The world is always deteriorating, and each generation has its prophets who are harking us back to the "good old times." But for some reason the world never turns back. It moves serenely on, and there is usually a justification for its movement. Illustration, for instance, is a necessity of our times. We have many more things to learn, many more things to do, many more problems to wrestle with, than had the people of Queen Anne's day. Why use one hand when we can use both? Why employ only one sense for comprehension when we can use two? The sense of sound conveys best such ideas as those of time, thought, infinity; the sense of sight conveys best conceptions of form, space, dimension. Each without the other is limited in expression, but taken together there is scarcely anything that cannot be told by them. It is not matter of regret that the second sense has come into use. Illustration to the eye is often a most potent means of bringing a truth home to the mind. And the truths of to-day are so many and so complicated that we need all our senses to comprehend them.

From "A Year in the Fields." (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.)

But it is said that illustration is doing away with careful reading, that the author is skipped for the illustrator, that "short-cut" knowledge is in the ascendant. There are evils in every system, but they are generally appraised too highly. Those who look only at pictures never were careful readers at any time. And if certain ideas can be revealed better by illustration than description, why should they not be so revealed? Let the book change and adapt itself to modern needs. In the drama we have seen the long, chorus-like descriptions of pomp, passion, and parade curtailed by a stage setting that shows the things themselves. The dramatist is now a writer of dialogue; the place, time, and circumstance are given by that very clever illustrator the stage-carpenter. Why should not the book accept a similar change? Why write a ten-page description of the Pantheon when a "half-tone" of it beggars your description? Why talk to one's ear about countries, faces, costumes, and the like, when an illustration can tell them so much better to one's eye? I am aware that this idea may sound a little shocking, and yet it is not impossible that the book will evolve and develop in just this way. The new book—for, of course, there must be a New Book with capitals—is likely to be a collaboration of author and artist, a division of labor in which the author will give that portion which may be told by sound and the artist that portion which appeals to the sense of sight. But the new book has not yet arrived, and in the meantime much of present artistic effort is little more than repetition of literary effort. The artist and author are not working together except in a nominal way. The illustrator glances over his author's sheets searching for something that will lend to a new technique or a modern effect, and seldom tries to translate the spirit of the writer. The result is such illustration as Mr. F. C. Gordon supplies to a new edition of Bulwer's Richelieu (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York)—illustra tion conceived, not in the spirit of Bulwer or Richelieu, but in the spirit of Meissonier and the seventeenth century. Cavaliers singly and in pairs adorn the pages, and occasionally there is a duel or midnight escapade on horseback, but the subjects and incidents chosen for illustration are generally outside the action of the play. Richelieu as a young man cleaving the head of a Britisher at Rochelle is shown, but Richelieu the Cardinal launching the curse of Rome on the heads of the conspirators does not appear. The book is handsome, but the illustrations help the text but slightly. Not so with Mr. George Birkbeck Hill's Talks About Autographs (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston). One might ask, Why talk about autographs when they can be seen so much better? But Mr. Hill is really talking about autograph letters, and he gives reproductions of a number of them that are not only interesting but illustrative of the text. We are afforded a glimpse of the original papers in facsimile, and from them we comprehend how Sir Thomas Browne or Mr. Ruskin wrote, just as in a museum we learn from a plaster cast how Pheidias or Michael Angelo modeled. This is true sight-help to the written text. One aids the other. The inadequacy of language is helped out by an appeal to the eye. Just so with Mr. Walter F. Lonergan's Historic Churches of Paris (Thomas Whittaker, New York). It is properly a book of facts, and in picturing such things as churches, streets, marbles, and inanimate life generally the mechanical photograph is often more satisfactory than the work of a draughtsman. Of course if one can have the drawings of Vierge or Joseph Pennell there is an artistic value added to the fact, but in the book before us the drawings of Mr. Brinsley S. Le Fanu hardly better the half-tone reproductions from photographs. The bulk, the proportions, the details of carvings, can be given by the camera, and these are the chief requisites of such illustration. Mr. Le Fanu is not a bad draughtsman, and his pen-and-ink work is interesting, but if we are studying the flying buttresses of Notre Dame or the ceiling of Sainte Chapelle we want the facts rather than an artist's impression of the facts.

From "Legends of the Virgin." (Dodd, Mead & Co.)

PLOUGHING.

From "Rustic Life in France." (T. Y. Crowell & Co.)

Every one who knows Venice loves to see the Venetian pictures by Turner and the thousand other painters who have set up easels along her waterways. They suggest the Venice we look back at in our dreams—a glamour of colored glory, a city of pearl on an opalescent sea. But, again, if we are studying facts in M. Charles Yriarte's Venice: Its History, Art, Industries, and Modern Life (Henry T. Coates & Co., Philadelphia), we need the photographs of the chief squares, churches, canals, and palaces. These we have in fifty excellent photogravures well chosen and clearly printed. It is certainly a great help to those who have never been in Venice to see her living landmarks of history; and those for whom Venice is an old story will not the less be pleased to see again in miniature the Piazza and the Piazzetta, the Riva and the Rialto, the Colleoni, the Bronze Gates of the Campanile, and the Marcello monument in the Frari. A wonderful city was that young Venice rising in beauty from the mud islands of the lagoon; and to-day, when her palaces are crumbling to decay and her beauty sinking back into the mud of the lagoon, she is still a wonderful city. Any book, any tale, any picture of her has interest, and M. Charles Yriarte's book and pictures are exceptionally interesting because they are exceptionally good.

Rome is quite a different story. It is a record of deeds rather than a record of art, and a glance at the maps and photographic reproductions of Mr. John Dennie's Rome of To-day and Yesterday (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York) will show how well designed are all those columns, bridges, and temples to typify the Roman conception of strength, endurance, and power. Mr. Dennie tells the tale of the pagan city, the Rome of the kings, the republic, and the emperors; he does not deal with Christian Rome. The tale has been more than twice told, but Mr. Dennie thinks he can tell it over again in a popular way and thus reach the unarchæological masses. The fifty-eight half-tones that accompany the book show the remains of palace, forum, and triumphal arch, and are calculated to lift the mind of the reader to an imperial height. They will certainly prove a great aid to comprehension. This is equally true of the five hundred half-tones and twenty-two copper-plates that illuminate the pages of Émile Bourgeois's France Under Louis XIV., translated by Mrs. Cashel-Hoey (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York). All the paintings, prints, almanacs, and fashion plates of the period have been drawn upon to complete this picture of the pompous Louis surrounded by his satellite court and supported by his too patient French people. And what an idea of those times, independent of M. Bourgeois's careful text, we gain from this profuse illustration! The seventeenth century seems to pass before us like a panorama. We see the people, the costumes, the life of France; and when we turn to the text, how much better we grasp the meaning of its descriptions and its recorded facts! The volume is an imperial octavo, handsomely printed and bound, and is as good an example of the properly illustrated book as can be instanced. The illustrator and author were not working at cross purposes, for M. Bourgeois selected these "human documents" and shaped his text to conform to them. In fact, the documents are the history and the text is their illustration.

The ancient Vasari—he who narrated the happenings (and many things that did not happen) in the lives of the great Italian painters, sculptors, and architects—has been explained, contradicted, and set to rights by a number of editors in the past, and this year he has been taken in hand by E. H. and E. W. Blashfield and A. A. Hopkins, who bring the editing down to the present time, with all the information that modern research has disclosed. The new edition—in four superbly printed volumes (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York)—was badly needed, since there has been no English edition since 1850. Moreover, the editorial work has fallen into the hands of those who know about art in general, and Italian art in particular. Seventy of the Lives have been selected from the original work, the editors deeming it wise to annotate the important ones thoroughly rather than the whole series scantily. These seventy Lives they have studied very closely, and the footnotes that mark the pages not only give historical changes and corrections, but contain critical characterizations of the painters that are of no small value. Vasari, in spite of his occasional hearsay evidence and his apparent antipathy to certain painters, is the fountain-head from which the histories of Italian art derive, and this new edition of his Lives is both timely and welcome. Some forty-eight photogravures of the masterpieces of Italian painting and sculpture help out the narratives by showing us the original works commented upon by Vasari. The edition is limited to five hundred copies—more's the pity, for the work should be popular and accessible to all.

So much for the books with illustrations that illustrate. Aside from the help the pictures afford the text, there is, naturally enough, a publisher's method in illustration. It brightens a volume, gives it an interesting look, and, when accompanied by good paper, wide margins, and "open-faced" type, results in artistic book-making. The present rivalry among publishers in the matter of handsomely made books is very strong, and we have no end of types and papers, ornamented covers with gold stampings, and variegated cloths. Sometimes it happens that pictures are thrust between the book-covers more to stimulate the curiosity and smarten the appearance than for anything like illustration. Yet it does not follow of necessity that every picture in a book should have something to do with the text. There are pictures that have value for their illustrative meaning, and there are pictures that should have value for their decorative meaning. The distinction marks a fundamental difference. It is a hard one for us to grasp. We are so matter-of-fact, and so insistent upon it that everything should mean something, that we often pass by that which is graceful and good simply because it tells no story. Just at present people are having much merriment over the work of a young Englishman, Mr. Aubrey Beardsley. He is all sorts of an impressionist, symbolist, egoist, or decadent, as people choose to name him. Why? Simply because he decorates rather than illustrates—fills a page with pretty patterns instead of pretty stories. There is always enough of the Saxon in us to ask, What does it mean? and not enough of the Latin to ask, How does it look? If we could regard his work as ornament put in to make a book beautiful, we should applaud it to the echo. Perhaps we shall do so yet. Time changes many contemporary opinions, and a few years hence we may be found guilty of acclaiming Beardsley as a genius. Whether we do or not, he is no less an artist of pronounced ability and originality.

From "Poems of Johanna Ambrosius." (Roberts Brothers.)

But the decorated book did not originate with Mr. Beardsley. It is of very ancient lineage. The papyrus books of the Egyptians were illustrated and decorated, and the illumination of manuscripts was practiced in the earliest times. When printing was invented, the page-patterns followed the manuscripts, and in Japan the book-maker followed the kakemono. To-day we are still following precedent to some extent. Some follow the Japanese, some the Italians, some the Germans. For instance, Mr. Hadaway's decorations for Mr. T. B. Aldrich's Friar Jerome's Beautiful Book (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston) are of German inspiration, and remind us of the old Nuremberg calendars. The pages are long and thin, with ornamental borders, the type is black, underscored with red lines, and the initials are rubricated. The title-pages are figures of ecclesiastics in pattern, and the frontispiece is an illustration in red ink of Friar Jerome in his cell. The whole book makes up prettily, and has something of antique quaintness about it. Quaint and reminiscent, too, are Mr. H. G. Fell's ornamental designs for The Book of Job (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York). It would seem almost impossible for any one to make designs for this book without thinking of William Blake's "Job," and Mr. Fell has at least taken a peep at it. The flying figures of the borders, the long cowled people, the swirling circles, point to Blake; but Mr. Fell has been himself on more than one page, and has produced some effective work both as illustration and decoration. A companion volume, The Book of Ruth (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York), pictured and designed by Mr. W. B. McDougall, is more modern in spirit and has less of the old woodcut effect than Mr. Fell's volume. In fact, Mr. McDougall rather suggests the modern poster in his designs, but with much delicacy of line and originality in patterns. Some of the backgrounds and borders are charming in their adaptation of flowers, leaves, and other natural forms, and the illustrations themselves are effective Both of these volumes are good specimens of modern printing and book-making. There is no reason why the statement should not be extended to A Book of Christmas Verse, selected by H. C. Beeching (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York), with ten designs by Walter Crane. It is just as handsomely printed, and the "fat-faced" type, the full margin, the strong paper, are most attractive. But Mr. Crane's designs are not soul-stirring either as illustration or decoration.

The new two-volumed edition of Irving's Bracebridge Hall (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York), in its white and gold binding, is not only ornamented by Miss Armstrong with pale-green page-patterns, but is furnished with some twenty-eight illustrations by American artists. The book is filled with good picturesque material, but some of the illustrators have thought their own conceptions more fetching than those of Washington Irving, and have treated us to "effects" that might as appropriately be inserted in the Koran as in "Bracebridge Hall." They are well enough done artistically, and the printing of them upon heavy plate-paper is excellent, but—they do not illustrate. The dainty little border-pieces in color by Amelia M. Watson that adorn the pages of Thoreau's Cape Cod (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston) serve their purpose much better. They really enlighten the text, for the sketches were made along Cape Cod; and with their color they give us quite an idea of the country about which Thoreau wrote. The printing of the colors is exceedingly good, and the use of the page margins for small sketches is quite a novelty. The result is decorative illustration, and that is what all picture-making for books should be.

One of the most important of the season's illustrated books is M. Gréard's Meissonier: His Life and His Art (A. C. Armstrong & Son, New York). The life is not an exhaustive study of Meissonier. It is rather a series of sketches taken from the artist's own talk and letters, but what there is of it is authentic—something that cannot be said for some other published accounts of the painter. It was not necessary to say much about the man, for the public is interested only in the artist. Meissonier, like every other artist, wrote his autobiography in his art, and here it is, reproduced in two hundred illustrations, with forty full-page plates, partly in photogravure, partly in color. His best pictures are thus shown, and, of course, they help the text, because they are the very man himself. Meissonier had all the gifts of the illustrator, and had he devoted himself entirely to black-and-white work he would perhaps have achieved quite as much fame as he did in painting. His genre pictures—cavaliers, smokers, riders—admirably done though they be, are little more than colored illustrations. The Napoleonic cycle rises to pictorial creation, but is not the less illustrative. His whole work was a record of observation, and Meissonier himself was more of an eye than a poetic mind. He left nothing to the imagination, and was ever intent upon giving facts. There is an édition de luxe of the book, the type on Japanese vellum, the plates on India paper, that should give one a still better conception of this man's great skill. He was a master in craftsmanship beyond any doubt.

From "A Window in Thrums." (Dodd, Mead & Co.)

Daniel Vierge is a master, too, but his work lies entirely within the realm of black-and-white Here he certainly has no superior among living men. The story of his losing the use of his right hand, and the facility with which he trained his left hand to take its place, has been recounted more than once. The difference between the two hands is scarcely apparent in his work. Certainly the illustrations which he has recently made for Mr. A. F. Jaccaci's On the Trail of Don Quixote (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York) show the old spirit and energy with no perceptible diminution in accuracy. Each one of these 130 illustrations is worthy of study simply for the art it displays. No one has ever shown life, motion, character, force, better than Vierge. And how decorative he is in the massing of lights and shades, in the swing of lines, in the filling of page-space! Here at last is the true decorative illustration—the kind that gives light to the book as well as to the text, and makes both beautiful to look upon. Vierge is a Spaniard born, and has known the land of Don Quixote from boyhood. Mr. Jaccaci knows that country too, and is besides an artist who knows what to omit as well as what to put in his narrative.

From "Constantinople." (H. T. Coates & Co.)

Poems by Paul Verlaine

Translated by Emerson G. Taylor

I.

O River in the street,
How quaint is thy retreat
  Between high walls immured!
Thy waters dark and clear
Through byways thou dost steer
  With ripple faintly heard.

O River pale like death,
Hopeless thou flow'st beneath
  A pall spun from decay;
E'en though above thy shores
On tower and cottage pours
  The splendor of the day.

II.

Borne on the Autumn's wings
I hear, as from vibrant strings,
  Harmonies.
Telling of Summer fled,
They wake in my heart—long dead
  Memories.

Breathless and pale of soul,
I hear the deep bell toll,
  Full of fears;
As the dark hours flit by,
Old days I dim descry
  Through my tears.

And then I'm whirled away,
The bitter wind's poor prey,
  Here and there
I and the withered sheaves
Of helpless blasted leaves
  Tossed in air.

Old Books in New Dress

By Hamilton W. Mabie

WHEN one looks through the list of new editions of standard works of literature, he begins to doubt the accuracy of observation of those critics of contemporary conditions who tell us, from time to time, that serious books are no longer read, and that the reading public has ceased to care for sound literary workmanship. That there is a great laxity in the matter of discriminating between the good and the bad in literary form and substance is beyond question; that too many of those who read show no evidence of intelligence of taste or aim is also beyond question; but there are also many evidences of the existence of a body of readers who care only for the best, and who discriminate between literature and the great mass of writing which is issued in book form, but which bears no more relation to literature than a block of unhewn stone bears to the Parthenon. There are, fortunately, a very considerable number of publishers who deal with book-making in a generous and honorable spirit, who care for books as literature as well as merchandise, and who are glad of an opportunity of forwarding the interests of an unknown man of promise. But the publishing of books is, of course, a business, and must be conducted on business principles; and while intelligent publishers are ready to make ventures for the sake of introducing a new writer of force and talent, they do not republish old books as a matter of entertainment. If old books are reprinted from time to time, it is because there are readers who want them and who buy them. The constant reappearance, therefore, of the standard writers in new and handsome issues furnishes good evidence of the survival of the habit of serious reading and of the renewal and extension of the circle of those who know and care for good books.

One can imagine the satisfaction with which Wordsworth would have studied the long row of sixteen attractive volumes in which the Macmillan Company (New York) are now issuing his complete poetical works; for this dignified and attractive Eversley edition, with its suggestion of library rather than of railroad use, is in itself a declaration that the verse it contains has classic quality and standing. Better still, this noble body of poetry receives its proper homage of thoroughly intelligent editing. Mr. William Knight has long been a student of Wordsworth; he edited a library edition of the poems ten years ago; published a life of the poet three years later; wrote a very pleasant book on "The English Lake District as Interpreted in the Poems of Wordsworth," and prepared the "Memorials of Coleorton," which every lover of the Lake poet has read. In this edition the poems are arranged in the order in which they were written; the changes of text made by the poet in successive editions are given in foot-notes; several pieces of verse are printed for the first time in a complete edition; a new bibliography is added; eight volumes are devoted to the poems and two volumes to the prose works; the journals of Dorothy Wordsworth and the letters of Dorothy and of the poet are given; with a new life of Wordsworth in one volume. Each volume contains an etching of a locality associated with the poet, and a new portrait of Wordsworth or of his wife or daughter or sister. The edition leaves nothing to be desired.

William Wordsworth

It is no very violent change of atmosphere and feeling to pass from Grasmere to Thrums; to exchange the old-time English dalesman for the sturdy Scotch weaver. Mr. Barrie, like Wordsworth, is a lover of nature and of man in his primitive estate. He cares supremely for those simple experiences in which the life of men finds a common consciousness and out of which the human drama is compounded. It is too early to assign Mr. Barrie his final or even his relative place, but there are many indications that he has come to stay. His popularity has waxed so much of late that one trembles when he remembers that the writer of "Sentimental Tommy" is so young. There is that in his work, however, which allays such an anxiety. Mr. Barrie has a real insight into life, and such an insight is an immense safeguard against the corrupting tendency of popularity. He is, moreover, a true artist, and a true artist never wholly succumbs to the lower temptations of success. Those who care, therefore, for the sensitive genius of a writer who puts his heart into his books, without any sacrifice of that reticence which is the guard of every fine nature, may take unalloyed satisfaction in the fact that the reading public has found Mr. Barrie out and has profited by the knowledge. The man who wrote "Sentimental Tommy" has the stuff of literature in him, and Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons have made no mistake in giving his work that dignity of form which was once reserved for writers who had passed all the barriers and taken their places among the classics. When the ten volumes of the Thistle Edition stand together, there will be few to withstand the charm of the fair page, the noble type, the judicious illustration, and the tasteful binding. Such books, by their happy combination of old-fashioned dignity and modern decoration, are a credit to American book-making.

Harriet Beecher Stowe

The Riverside Press has so thoroughly defined its aims and so long illustrated its workmanship that its imprint has become a synonym for sound and beautiful work. One by one the older American classics have come in final forms from this press, and no one who cares for our literature can look through the long list from Hawthorne to Mrs. Stowe without recognizing the service which this press has rendered to American writers and readers. For it is no small matter that our classics are now in our hands in forms so harmonious and appropriate that the very shape and dress of the books are significant of the quality and value of the text. To this company of beautiful editions the works of Harriet Beecher Stowe, in sixteen volumes, are now being added. One reads the pages without being conscious of the type, and the volumes are so well dressed in color and stamping that one fails to note any single feature of binding or lettering; and this is saying that the edition is in perfect taste. The title-pages are worthy of special attention, and each volume is to contain an etched portrait or other illustration. This edition is the truest memorial of a writer who was not only the foremost woman who has yet appeared in this country, but who was also the most widely read of American authors. The great vogue of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" has passed, but that striking story will long find readers to be stirred by its dramatic power and moved by its passionate intensity of spirit. Mrs. Stowe's best work as a novelist is to be found, however, in her sketches of New England life and character.

Ivan Turgenev

A new generation of novelists has come upon the stage since the brave days when Thackeray, Dickens, and George Eliot were writing those great novels which have become a part of our literature. Time has dealt gently with Thackeray, whose soundness of substance and whose beauty of workmanship become more clear as the years go by; it has searched Dickens with dispassionate scrutiny, and has rejected half a dozen stories which our elders once laughed or cried over; and it has not left George Eliot's work intact. It has discarded "Daniel Deronda," "Theophrastus Such," the great majority of the poems, and it has had misgivings about "Romola;" but it has put "Scenes from Clerical Life," "Silas Marner," "The Mill on the Floss," and "Adam Bede" with the books that endure; and it has postponed final judgment on "Middlemarch" and "Felix Holt." On the whole, therefore, George Eliot has fared extremely well, and is likely to go down to posterity in the company of a goodly array of works of noble quality. During those fortunate years when the artistic temper was in the ascendant, and the philosophic temper was its servant, she was a really great writer; a master of some of the deeper elements of human experience, and of a style at once capacious, vigorous, and eloquent in a worthy sense of that much-abused word. Messrs. E. P. Dutton & Co. have put the work of this gifted woman in a Standard Edition which is both dignified and agreeable; the books are admirably printed and bound, the page is harmonious, the coloring and stamping rich, and the general effect of the long row of books very taking.

Thomas Hardy
(By courtesy of Harper & Brothers)

Charles Kingsley

This generation, which has seen so many literary artists attain the mastery of their craft through years of laborious training, has known no finer artist in the field of fiction than Ivan Turgenev. The deep-hearted Russian, who loved his country and his people so passionately that he could not do more nor less than speak the truth about both, paid the penalty which is always exacted of the man who feels with the radicals the misery of existing conditions, but who sees how inadequate are the remedies which radicalism often brings forward. Feared, hated, and exiled by the Government, Turgenev was compelled also, by his sheer veracity, to antagonize the popular movement in which so many of his friends were enlisted. Time always works for a writer of such insight and mastery of form, and the lonely novelist has already had his reward. The six novels which bear his name, with the volume of sketches which first made Russia completely aware of the conditions of serf life, are now recognized as masterpieces. They ought to be in the hands of every young novelist; for their restraint, condensation, balance, and deep-going energy of style are corrective of some of the worst faults of contemporary writing. No writer ever submitted himself more loyally to the discipline of art; none was ever more entirely free from carelessness, haste, crudity, and unbalanced emotion. It was a service to American readers to secure a fresh translation of this noble group of novels, and to give them so convenient a form as that which they have received at the hands of the Macmillan Company in nine small volumes.

Thomas Carlyle

Thomas Hardy brings to the writing of fiction the greatest natural force now at work among English novelists. Less intellectual than Meredith, he is far more dramatic. At his best he easily stands in the front rank, and in one field he has no superior in English literature. "Under the Greenwood Tree," "Far from the Madding Crowd," and "The Woodlanders" are stories of classic quality; in power of natural description, of vivid portraiture of rustic life, in humor and keen characterization, they are unsurpassed. They have a Shakespearean breadth and vitality of treatment; their roots are deep in the soil out of which they grow. In sheer dramatic power, "Tess," "The Mayor of Casterbridge," and "The Return of the Native" belong also in the front rank. Mr. Hardy is, however, a fatalist, with a tremendous grasp of the irony of life as it appears from his standpoint, and with a limitation of interest and vision which, in later years especially, have told heavily against the truth of his interpretation and the beauty of his art. He has had a great theme in his creed that the man should be punished as severely as the woman for sexual sins; but in some of his later stories his touch has not been sound nor his taste healthful. "Two on a Tower" and "A Group of Noble Dames" are distinctly repulsive. It is a misfortune that so great a writer should have gone so far astray. Aside from this small group of books, he is an artist of commanding force and interest, to whom the future, with dispassionate discrimination between his sound and his unsound work, will assign a greater place than that which he holds to-day. In the new edition which bears the imprint of the Messrs. Harper & Brothers his works are presented for the first time entire and in uniform style to American readers.

J. Fenimore Cooper

It is a satisfaction to come upon a new edition of Thackeray's Henry Esmond in a single volume, well printed, tasteful in dress, and of such moderate cost that it is easily within the reach of all who desire to make the acquaintance of the most perfect novel in the English language. A companion volume in form, although not in quality, is Charles Kingsley's Hypatia—a story of very uneven workmanship, but full of that vitality which characterized Kingsley, and disclosing a certain picturesque force and pictorial quality which have given the novel high rank among books of its kind. In this same group belongs also a single-volume edition of Carlyle's characteristic Sartor Resartus, in which one may find the key to Carlyle's thinking; in fact, whoever knows "Sartor Resartus" thoroughly as regards its contents and its form, knows Carlyle's view of life and art, and his manner of practicing the one and formulating the other. These three volumes bear the imprint of Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

Izaak Walton

There have been times in late years when it has seemed as if James Fenimore Cooper's day were over, but there is too much of the stuff of which real books are made in these stories to permit of their becoming merely monuments in our literary history. They remain, in their way, among the very best stories which have yet been written on our soil. They are distinctively American, characteristic in a peculiar sense of early American conditions and character; they are, in the second place, capital pieces of narrative. The workmanship is very uneven from the standpoint of the artistic thoroughness with which most writing of high quality is done to-day. Cooper's workmanship is often slovenly, and never, perhaps, discloses the very highest quality. The average of it is, nevertheless, for the purposes for which it is used, sound. Cooper was, in the third place, a capital story-teller. He knew how to dispose of his material, how to give it order and sequence, and he remains, in spite of many successors and competitors, a real figure among the group of American novelists. It was his good fortune that the writing of his life in these later times fell into the hands of Professor Lounsbury, who made out of the material which he found one of the best biographies yet written in America. There have been many editions of these novels, but none which, for popular purposes, has been more attractive than the Mohawk Edition, which is to be completed in thirty-two volumes, large 12mo, printed from very clear type, with numerous illustrations, and substantially and attractively bound. This edition resembles very closely the Hudson Edition of Irving, an excellent model. (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.)

Messrs. T. Y. Crowell & Co. have grouped in five well-made volumes the Leatherstocking Tales, the most popular of all the Cooper novels. These volumes contain twenty photogravure illustrations by Frank T. Merrill. They are bound in green ribbed cloth, they are well printed, and they leave little to be desired in the way of a library edition of this particular group of stories.

If there be a book in our language which fits the mood of a leisure hour, and which takes its fortunate reader out of the rush of contemporary life and the agitation of contemporary discussion, it is surely Izaak Walton's Compleat Angler; that old-fashioned, meditative, leisurely, out-of-door classic, full of the repose of the English landscape, of the charm of the gentlest of the sports, and of the quality which makes literature. This is one of those books which the reader who knows what he wants and provides himself with it likes to have close at hand, not for consecutive reading, but for sipping now and then; and this classic has certainly never been put into more convenient shape than in the new edition which bears the imprint of the Macmillan Company, which is prefaced by a characteristic introduction from the hand of Mr. Andrew Lang, and which is admirably illustrated by Mr. E. J. Sullivan.

Never, surely, was an old poet more fortunate than Omar Khayyám on the day when his verse fell into the hands of Edward Fitzgerald. As a result of this happy contact between one of the most gifted of English translators and one of the most suggestive of old Persian poets, Omar Khayyám has become to all intents a modern writer, and for that matter an English writer. It is of small consequence, so far as the reader is concerned, how much Omar Khayyám owes to Edward Fitzgerald; the fact remains that the translation of the Rubáiyát has put into the hands of the English reader a body of verse entirely unlike anything which he has read in his own tongue before; at once stimulating, suggestive, irritating, and pathetic. This translation comes from the press of Messrs. T. Y. Crowell & Co., in a single volume, compact and clearly printed.

Other Holiday Books

One of the most important of holiday books is Modern French Masters, edited by Professor John C. Van Dyke (The Century Company, New York). It is a sumptuous volume, and is one of the best contributions to contemporary art. Like the "Old Italian Masters" and the "Old Dutch and Flemish Masters," this book is made up of twenty biographical and critical monographs on the best-known modern French masters, written by their American pupils and admirers. To those who know anything about contemporary American artists and their pictures, it is easy to see that in each case the writer has been chosen because of his knowledge of the painter of whom he writes, and because of his sympathy with his works. Mr. Will H. Low contributes the articles on MM. Gérôme and Boutet de Monvel; Mr. Kenyon Cox, those on MM. Puvis de Chavannes and Baudry; Mr. Carroll Beckwith writes of Copyright, 1896, by The Century Co.

"THE FAIR DUTCHWOMAN," BY COURBET.

From "Modern French Masters." (The Century Co.)

From "Ranch Life and the Hunting Trail."
(The Century Co.)

MM. Carolus-Duran and Manet; Mr. E. H. Blashfield, of MM. Bonnat and Jean-Paul Laurens; the late Theodore Robinson, of Corot and Monet; Mr. W. A. Coffin, of Rousseau and Dagnan-Bouveret; the late G. P. A. Healy, of Couture; Mr. H. W. Watrous, of Meissonier; Mr. Arthur Hoeber, of Diaz; Mr. William H. Howe, of Troyon; Mr. D. W. Tryon, of Daubigny; the late Wyatt Eaton, of Millet; Samuel Isham, of Courbet; and, appropriately enough, Mr. Julian Alden Weir, of the lamented Bastien-Lepage. The public is indebted to Mr. Weir that the "Joan of Arc" by Bastien-Lepage is among the treasures of the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Of all the foregoing essays, the one which will probably attract most immediate notice is that on Meissonier. The forthcoming publication of M. Gréard's life of the great artist will lend additional interest to what Mr. Watrous has to say of Meissonier. Like the great master, Mr. Watrous prefers to do his own painting on small panels; his word-picture, however, is on a larger scale, and well describes the man who painted truth as he saw it, regardless of time, trouble, or expense. The picture of Millet is even more graphic. Another satisfactory paper is Mr. Tryon's on Daubigny, and not on Daubigny alone, but on the peculiar conditions which made possible the growth of the Barbizon school at a time when popular art was antagonistic to its growth. As Mr. Tryon justly says, the period of the Barbizon school is the most important of all epochs in the history of landscape-painting. The most delightful feature of all of the essays is not so much their critical quality as the reminiscent tone. One feels that each writer has been sitting as a more or less reverent disciple at the feet of a great master and has learned of him. No matter how much the writer may have advanced in his own originality, inventiveness, and genius, yet there is the stamp of the master on him still, and it is this stamp which makes the modern French school of so much import. We have from that school works of wonderful merit and satisfaction, but perhaps the greatest merit of all is the fact that these masters stimulated other men to go on in the now well-beaten tracks, whether those tracks be impressionistic, or realistic, or mystic, or anything that distinguishes one man's work or one school's work from another. As we turn over page after page of this superb volume we have but one regret, and that is that Professor Van Dyke is not more in evidence. His preface and his notes on the American writers are such good writing that we wish their conciseness might have been expanded. With him, we feel that an artist is not only a better judge of the technique of painting, and is even the better judge of its finer meaning. Of course we hear the contrary continually—the painter is too near his theme to estimate it entirely. But Professor Van Dyke reminds us that soundness of technique is a condition precedent to all great art. Without it a picture cannot be really great, no matter what its ultimate meaning. It does not necessarily follow that one who is interested in methods is blind to what those methods express. We have offered as an example of the union of all that makes criticism, Fromentin's "Les Maîtres d'Autrefois," perhaps the best piece of art-criticism ever written; nor is it too much to say that "Modern French Masters" is a book which goes far to prove the painter's contention that no one but a painter is a competent judge of a picture. The assertion is at least a half-truth. The volume is illustrated by many examples of wood-engraving and of "half-tone" work. If for nothing else, the book would be interesting in the comparison between these two processes. Those who are, on the whole, opposed to wood-engraving think that the engraver's personality intrudes and influences the reproduction overmuch; yet we are reminded, too, that the picture is always photographed upon the block and the engraver works directly from the photograph. Those who oppose the half-tone process claim that it does not deal adequately with subtile tones, with light and shade, with color-values.

To those who unconsciously think of Paris as France, who know little of the simple charm of French country life, we heartily commend M. André Theuriet's Rustic Life in France, which has been well translated for American readers by Mrs. Helen B. Dole. The author lingers with quiet delight over old-time peasant customs and traits now passing away. He loves the idyllic and pastoral side of farm life. He feels also the primitive strength and manliness of the peasant's character. In short, he shows us with his pen just what Millet puts before us on the canvas. Few writers have Theuriet's gift of poetic sincerity untinged with sentimentalism. He writes of the commonest things, of the details of daily toil, of rustic sports, of festivals and sorrows, with unvarying sympathy and fineness of style. M. Lhermitte has aided M. Theuriet by furnishing him with many beautiful drawings, realistic as pertaining directly to peasant life, yet idealized in execution. In all, the book is one to please best the most refined taste. (T. Y. Crowell & Co., New York.)

From "The Heart of Princess Osra." (F. A. Stokes Co.)

Lovers of the writings of John Burroughs—and they are a growing multitude in this country—will find especial delight in the selection from his essays which Mr. Clifton Johnson has made, under the title A Year in the Fields, and to which Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. have given a simple elegance of dress which is taking in the last degree. The illustration of this book is, in a way, unique. It happily combines the picture of the season and the landscape treated in the essay which it faces, and the personality of the author. Mr. Burroughs is shown in a dozen characteristic attitudes, in his study, at his door, on the wood-road, in the woods, and in various localities and in different seasons. The work of the camera in the hands of Mr. Johnson is very skillfully and intelligently done, and the volume will take its place among the most interesting of the books of the season.

From "Italy in the Nineteenth Century." (A. C. McClurg & Co.)

We do not need to point out the reasons that make Constantinople the city to which all eyes are now eagerly directed. This, then, is a peculiarly timely year for the appearance of a translation of Edmondo de Amicis's work on that city. It was one of his earlier books, and he never wrote with more alertness of observation and brilliance of style. He knew his Constantinople from mosque to pariah dog; his descriptive powers were extraordinary; he was a traveler and a literary artist in one. With the Turks, says our author, "sloth wears the mask of leisure, dignity is a cloak for pride;" "the dry rot is covered up;" the Turk "knows how to value Europeans who can be of use to him, accepts such innovations in material things as can offer some palpable advantage; listens without a tremor of the eyelid to all the lectures on civilization which are read to him; alters laws, customs, and ceremonials; learns by heart and repeats fluently the sayings of our philosophers; allows himself to be travestied, caricatured, burlesqued: but at bottom he remains immutably, hopelessly the same." The translation of this really great work is by Maria H. Lansdale, and it deserves high praise. Fifty beautiful photogravures are scattered through the two volumes, and add greatly to its attractiveness as a gift. (H. T. Coates & Co., Philadelphia.)

Another book of Eastern travel is Mr. Robert Howard Russell's The Edge of the Orient. Naturally, this is not to be compared as to style with the work just mentioned; on the other hand, it has the special merit of being absolutely fresh and recent, and of touching comparatively new ground. For the greater part of the author's journey was outside the usual tourists' happy hunting-grounds, though there are chapters on Constantinople, Cairo, and Alexandria. The best chapter of all is that on Montenegro, and there are several of interest on the cities of Dalmatia and Istria. Mr. Russell shows clearly the fearless Montenegrin awaiting impatiently on his mountain passes the battle with his ancient foe, the Turk. In obtaining illustrative material the author was abundantly successful. His photographs are full of novelty and color. One small "kodak," in which he was lucky enough to "catch" the Montenegrin Prince, Princess, and Crown Prince, Archbishop and clergy, army, citizens, principal street of Cetinjè, public buildings, and a background of mountains, will arouse the envy of amateurs. (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.)

Pierre Loti's Iceland Fisherman remains to the general taste his most finished book. The simple pathos of the sturdy characters, the romance of the Iceland fishers' lives, the fineness and exquisite exactness of M. Loti's style and diction, all combine to make the book a veritable masterpiece. It has both delicacy of touch and grandness in motive. The translation now made by Helen B. Dole is smooth, and reproduces the charm of the author's manner with as much success as one could hope for. One notes that the book is in its one hundred and fifty-ninth edition. A portrait of the author is not as well reproduced as could be wished. The cover design is in good taste. (T. Y. Crowell & Co., New York.) From the same publishers come two volumes of selections from The Poems of Robert Browning. These comprise Browning's own selections printed from the text revised by him, together with additions from his later poems. The editors of this edition—Charlotte Porter and Helen A. Clarke, the editors of "Poet Lore"—furnish adequate and readable, though necessarily condensed, biographical and critical introductions, and about fifty pages of notes. They evidently do not agree with their author, who, in his preface of 1872, declared that he had no fear of longer being considered obscure. The notes are none too many; most readers would prefer more. Information and interpretation (so far as the latter is indulged in) are concisely and clearly put. The two volumes present under an excellent plan of selection all the best of Browning's dramatic and lyric work. For the library which does not possess the complete edition these volumes are all but indispensable. The books are well printed; our only criticism is that the lines of type, though quite legible, are a little too close together for beauty; there are two fine portraits; the green and gold of the cover is charming.

Under the apt title In Ole Virginia, Mr. Thomas Nelson Page has collected and dedicated to "My People" six stories which may without exaggeration be described not only as representative of his best work, but as being among the very best short tales in American literature. "Marse Chan," "Unc' Edinburg," and "Meh Lady" are rich in humor, accurate in dialect, and replete in flavor of the old times, while the other stories, if not as good, are yet worthy companions. The illustrations by Messrs. Smedley, Clinedinst, Reinhart, Frost, Pyle, and Castaigne are sympathetic and uniformly admirable. The picture of "Ole Stracted" and his cabin by Mr. Frost is so full of character that we select it for special praise. The cover design is of yellow and white color, with tasteful ornamentation; at first the color scheme seems a little doubtful, but it improves as one becomes used to it. (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.)

From "What the Dragon-Fly Told the Children." (D. Lothrop & Co.)

Dumas's Le Chevalier de Maison Rouge is undoubtedly the best of his stories relating to the time of the French Revolution. A holiday edition is put forth by Estes & Lauriat, of Boston, which has all the honor that clear type, ample margins, finely reproduced etchings, and handsome green and gilt binding can give it. Dumas's popularity among story-readers never wanes, and, theories of art aside, surely he was the prince of story-tellers.

The American Revolution, by John Fiske, has now been five years before the reading public, and has been accepted universally as a standard work. To combine profound knowledge of his subject with the best narrative style in the degree here found is given to few writers. The author has a wonderful faculty of selecting the critical and significant events, of ignoring confusing details, of welding his material into a simple and consistent account, and of illuminating the whole with sound theories of historical philosophy. The "holiday edition" now published at last gives worthy external form to the work. Great care and much labor have evidently been expended in finding pictures, maps, and diagrams which illustrate in the true sense of the word. In portraits and autographs the two substantial volumes are especially rich. As a teacher of sound patriotism the work should be in the hands of all young readers. As the most scholarly and at the same time most readable account of the birth of our Nation, it should be in every library. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.)

From "The Animal Story Book." (Longmans, Green & Co.)

A capital choice of author was made for the volume in Georgia in the series of "Stories from American History" when the publishers induced Mr. Joel Chandler Harris to undertake the work. The result is, as might have been expected, thoroughly satisfactory. The story of Georgia from colonial times down has been a peculiarly interesting one, and Mr. Harris loses none of the chances for picturesque narration. The chapter of "Georgia Wit and Humor" is racy and genial. The account of Georgia's share in the Civil War and of reconstruction days is, of course, written from the Southern standpoint, but is fair in spirit and intention. Nothing in the book is more earnest than Mr. Harris's tribute to Henry W. Grady as the prophet of the New South, "the builder, the peacemaker." The series of which this book forms part is well conceived, and, if the level reached here is sustained throughout, must prove a valuable addition to the literature of State history. (D. Appleton & Co., New York.)

Mr. Clifton Johnson's Country Clouds and Sunshine pleasantly supplements his "New England Country." Here he deals with village life. He holds, despite some drawbacks, that "a pleasant New England village, not too far from a large town and railroad, is the best dwelling-place in the world." With his well-known skill in catching with the camera characteristic scenes and figures, Mr. Johnson has obtained a really remarkable collection of household and outdoor views, which, in half-tone reproduction, finely bring before the eye the life described. Two of the chapters originally appeared as separate articles in The Outlook. (Lee & Shepard, Boston.)

Mr. Theodore Roosevelt's Ranch Life and the Hunting-Trail, illustrated with many spirited drawings by Frederic Remington, has been put into a small quarto (or large octavo?) edition for holiday purposes. It well deserves the extended popularity it has enjoyed, and in its new form will receive a new and hearty welcome. (The Century Company, New York.)

An entertaining account of a holiday ramble is In the Volcanic Eiffel, by Katharine S. and Gilbert S. Macquoid. Local German legends are pleasantly interwoven. The style is gossipy and familiar. There are over fifty illustrations of varying excellence. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.) The same publishers issue Dr. James Wells's Travel Pictures from Palestine, which seeks and points out the picturesque features of modern Palestine, recalling Biblical scenes at every step.

Fairy Tales Far and Near are retold by "Q" in an altogether novel and enjoyable way. An appendix shows how widespread are some of these marvel-myths. (The F. A. Stokes Company, New York.)

From "George Washington." Copyright, 1896, by Harper & Brothers.

Mr. John Ashton has a decided gift in gathering together entertaining anecdotes and odd happenings in such a way as to give a vivid impression of a period. His When William IV. was King reproduces court gossip, newspaper chat, party cries, street scenes, political incidents, and social and literary gossip in great variety. The seven years of the reign of "Billy the King" were singularly prolific in curious and novel features, if not important in history. One chapter-heading, taken at a venture, will give an idea of the delightfully discursive nature of the book:

> First Cargo of Ice to India—Election Notes at Halifax and in Scotland—A Female Sailor—The New Temporary Houses of Parliament—The King and Others Hissed—Question of Admitting Ladies—A Political Skit—Deaths of Hunt and Cobbett.

A few typical subjects treated are: selling wives (Mr. Ashton cites a dozen cases); a girl stolen by Gypsies; "buy a broom" girls; steam carriages on roads; smuggling; Paganini's avarice; mail coaches; quill and steel pens; children in factories; influenza epidemics; riots; tithe agitation; mobbing the Duke of Wellington; stoning the King, etc., etc. The illustrations are as odd and amusing as the text. (D. Appleton & Co., New York.)

An attractive book of travel is G. Vuillier's The Forgotten Islands, which deals with Corsica, Sardinia, Majorca, and Minorca. The author is also an artist of repute, and in both capacities he has a keen eye for the picturesque and unusual. The civilization in these out-of-the-way islands is still half archaic, and nature, art, and native character offer many opportunities to the romancer and the descriptive writer. The book is printed with care and taste. (D. Appleton & Co., New York.)

All who have read Mr. James Barnes's stirring story "For King and Country" will agree that he was eminently fitted to prepare a book on Naval Actions of the War of 1812. Those were days to arouse American pride, and cold indeed must be the blood that will not tingle at the narration of the gallant deeds of the Constitution, the Wasp, the Hornet, and the other defenders of our flag at sea. Admiration of national heroes is in no way incompatible with hatred of war when it can be avoided, or with good will toward the world. The details of the great sea-fights of the war of 1812 have never been so carefully sifted and welded into straightforward narrative as here. The pictures are vigorous and finely executed. (Harper & Brothers, New York.) Another sea-book from the same publishers is Lieutenant-Commander J. D. J. Kelley's The Ship's Company and Other People. The man-of-war's man; the merchant sailor; the trim yacht and the dirty collier; the gilded captain of the "ocean greyhound" and the weary stoker; the millionaire passenger and the boy stowaway—all are presented in their ocean life with fidelity and skill. There is abundant information about naval training, seamanship, sailor's hardships ashore and afloat, superstitions, "beach-combing," and much else. There are many full-page pictures.

Of Professor Woodrow Wilson's George Washington we shall speak more fully at another time. We need now only say that its popular style, its thorough patriotism, and its fine characterization of men and events, together with the beauty of Mr. Howard Pyle's illustrations and the general excellence of its exterior form, make it excellently adapted for holiday purposes. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)

Nothing could possibly be more superfluous than to praise Ian Maclaren's Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush and Auld Lang Syne, but it is not too late to praise the illustrated edition before us. Mr. Clifton Johnson has admirably caught the spirit of the story in his selection of scenes and people in Logiealmond (Drumtochty), and his photographs from life are so typical that the very persons created by Ian Maclaren's genius seem to be before the reader. In their new form the books will take on a renewed popularity. If there be any who have not read the stories, they have a delightful opportunity before them, while all lovers of the tales will like to have them in this worthy form. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)

Mr. Joseph Jacobs has edited a Book of Wonder Voyages, which includes Charles Kingsley's rendering of the story of the Argonauts, Mr. Alfred Nutt's version of "Maelduin," the editor's version of "Hasan of Bassorah," and a translation of the Eric Saga from the Norse by the Rev. J. Sephton. The splendid deeds of these sea-heroes are in all cases related in imaginative and spirited style, while the simple diction reminds one of Hawthorne's "Wonder Tales." The book is a small quarto, and a fine specimen of the book-maker's art. (The Macmillan Company, New York.)

From "Forgotten Isles." (D. Appleton & Co.)

Messrs. T. Y. Crowell & Co., New York, have published an exquisite edition of Robert Browning's Saul, illustrated with drawings by Mr. F. O. Small. There is a helpful introduction by Charlotte E. Porter and Helen A. Clarke. Perhaps there is no more characteristic poem of Browning's than this one, and it lends itself remarkably well to illustration.

Captive Memories is the title of "A Book of Commemorative Verses Interwoven with California Flowers for Anniversary Days and Presentation Occasions," by Mr. James Terry White. (James T. White & Co., New York.) This is a fragrant book in more senses than one, and it certainly does not err in being too unsentimental.

M. André Theuriet's Song-Birds and Seasons, amply illustrated, has been issued by Messrs. Estes & Lauriat, Boston. In this book one learns about the finch, the warbler, the nightingale, the linnet, the kingfisher, the sparrow, the lark, the thrush, and other birds. There is much here which bids us feel that the author is a real and not an imitation lover of nature.

From "Meissonier." (A. C. Armstrong & Son.)

Mr. C. M. Skinner has published in two volumes, through the J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, Myths and Legends of Our Own Land. Few books of this holiday season are more pleasing than these. It is unthinkingly said, as our author declares, that America is not old enough to have developed a legendary era, for such an era grows backward as a nation grows forward. Nevertheless, the bibliography of our own legends, though slight, is sufficient to furnish these two volumes with entertaining literature. We are by no means devoid of folk-lore, and America shows more than one point where myth and history combine. As we are reminded, this field is not an untrodden one. Hawthorne and Irving have made paths across it before, and Mr. Skinner follows.

Scholar Gypsies, by Mr. John Buchan, has been well published by the Macmillan Company, New York. The book is a collection of papers setting forth character and nature, criticisms and moralizings. The author says that it is a more miscellaneous equipment than ever was Don Quixote's, or that which girt the great Sir Hudibras. He tells us, however, of one or two threads of connection. First, his essays were all written in youth, and, further, they were written in close association with the upper valley of the Tweed. The book is of that pleasantly restful sort always needed in this too workaday world.

OLD ROMAN LIBRARY
From "The Eternal City, Rome."
(Estes & Lauriat.)

My Village, by Mr. E. Boyd Smith (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York), is a delightful volume. We learn to know about village life on the French coast, and the book helps us to understand the French peasant character. The author has an instinctive sympathy with all that is real in that character and that life—a sympathy not more evident in his text than in the 150 pictures with which he has illustrated his volume. The book is distinctly unique. Its compact form, its bizarre text and pictures, and, above all, its attractive subject-matter, will insure it a warm reception and a wide reading.

When the parade of anti-free-coinage men marched up Broadway recently, some kites were noticed flying from which cameras were suspended and photographs taken. The success of these photographs was so great as to induce much public interest in the method of their taking; hence the appearance of Mr. Gilbert Totten Woglom's Parakites is a timely one. He tells us that he is a man with continuous business interests, and has taken up the study of kites as a change of occupation during his leisure hours. While he prefers to have this work described simply as a health-maintaining pastime which carries with it suggestions for interesting scientific investigation, yet it is not too much to say that his "Parakites" will probably bring some valuable contributions to the science of aero dynamics. The fact that the flag of our country may be suspended in breezes with a velocity of nineteen to twenty-four miles an hour, at a height of one thousand feet, arouses both patriotic and scientific sensibilities. Mr. Woglom's description of his large photographic camera in the air will also interest every one. As to kites in general, he thinks that in the near future boys will discard the old tail-burdened kite, with its uncertain movements, for the scientifically made parakite, with its great lifting powers. While the instructions given in the text are necessarily technical, yet the directions are so clear that very young readers will have no difficulty in understanding them. (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.)

Lawns and Gardens, by N. Jönsson-Rose, has been published by Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. Books which help us to understand and apply the principles of landscape art are always of great popular benefit. While it is a mistake to suppose that because a thing is natural it is therefore beautiful, and while the landscape gardener should attempt no artificial effects, yet there is so infinitely much which appeals to our instinctive sense of beauty that the art which would create natural scenery by natural means is an art thoroughly worth cultivating. The author of this volume well appreciates the desirability of interesting his readers in the subject itself before giving them directions as to how to go to work. With him we walk through fields and woods; we observe how the little seedling roots in the fissure of a rock gradually form a leafy mat covered with flowers; how the various kinds of trees seek different positions; how the rivulets are born and grow. He takes us along the seashore and through the dunes of sand, through fens and marshes, through meadows and afar inland. Everywhere we learn something of value which we may reproduce or which we may suggest at home.

A handsome publication comes from Messrs. Roberts Brothers, Boston. It is entitled Leaves from Juliana Horatia

From "In Ole Virginia." (Charles Scribner's Sons.)

Ewing's Canada Home, gathered and illustrated by Elizabeth T. Tucker, together with facsimiles of eight water-color drawings by Mrs. Ewing's own hand. There is much of reminiscence in this volume which will appeal to Canadians in general, and to those who knew Mrs. Ewing in particular, but there is much, too, which appeals to the ordinary reader. One feels that the life herein related finds its counterpart in many lives. There are, too, descriptions here and there—for instance, that of Fredericton—which in a few clever strokes give us little pictures of value.

An Eclipse Party in Africa, by Mr. Eben J. Loomis, the Senior Assistant United States Nautical Almanac Officer (Roberts Brothers, Boston), is a capital book. Although it is an account of an expedition which took place so long ago as 1889–90, yet the descriptions of the Azores, the Cape de Verde Islands, Sierra Leone, the Gold Coast, St. Paul de Loanda, and South Africa, are quite as vivid as if the expedition had taken place yesterday, while the volume is not so burdened with statistics as to make it at all out of date. The illustrations are many and good, and much aid the text.

Mr. William Morris's last book, The Well at the World's End (Longmans, Green & Co., New York), has been exquisitely published in two volumes. Any other publication than an exquisite one would not do for the man who has accomplished so much in the art of book-making, both in text and in dress. There is hardly a thing which one can find to criticise in this delightful paper and print. It is a pity that we have not more such books. As to Mr. Morris's story, it is also a pity that it was not half as long. While we enjoy getting back to the old days which he so lovingly and delightfully pictures for us in his poems and romances, yet there is at all events in this last work too much of a good thing. It becomes almost a sing-song. Morris-lovers may find fault with this criticism, but we fear that our end of the century is too impatient to welcome so portentous an appearance as two volumes on "The Well at the World's End." The story smacks too much of the methodical, and Morris never believed in waiting for inspiration. He always gave just so much time to designing, so much to socialism, so much to exercise; he never wrote poetry on week-days, and so on. His reputation was well earned, but it will neither gain nor lose anything by his last achievement.

Two large and attractive collections of drawings appear at this holiday-time. The first is Pictures of People, by the well-known illustrator for "Life," Mr. Charles Dana Gibson, the creator of the "Gibson girl" and other lesser characters. While we are not among those who unreservedly applaud what might be called Mr. Gibson's French woman, there is no denying the virile force which characterizes these and other drawings in the handsome volume which Messrs. R. H. Russell & Son, New York, have published. No text is necessary as a comment on the life here satirized, nor is any required for the drawings of Mr. A. B. Wenzell, another well-known "Life" illustrator, whose drawings are also published by the same house under the title of In Vanity Fair. More than in Mr. Gibson's pictures, Mr. Wenzell's (however artistic) deal with the trivial, effervescent side of living—existing, one might say. While all these illustrations are clever and only occasionally vulgar, yet they are like the after-taste of sweet champagne. An admixture of soberer sentiment, of honester life, would not hurt either artist.

Mr. Albert Lee has published through Messrs. Harper & Brothers, New York, Tommy Toddles, a children's book, and one of the most delightful of children's books. It consists of two parts—"Out of the Ark" and "In the Ark." Tommy sits by the window in the big play-room at the top of a house one afternoon, falls to soliloquizing, then to getting drowsy, and then the Noah's Ark animals, instead of standing still, begin to move. The animals move through the book, and it is only at the last page that the boy finds himself still sitting on the window-seat and his mother standing in the doorway. There are frequent and appropriate illustrations by Mr. Peter S. Newell. Any children who would hear about Animals and boys,

With guns and fights and lots of noise,

should be allowed to read Mr. Lee's charming story.

Two pleasant holiday books are Anna Fuller's A Literary Courtship and A Venetian June (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York). The first is full of the invigoration of Pike's Peak and Colorado cañons; the second of the dolce far niente of Venice. The small size of these volumes, their attractive binding, clear print, and charming illustrations, match well the descriptions, which are both clear and charming, and are of more account than the "story part."

A very artistically illustrated holiday publication is A Book of English Ballads (The Macmillan Company, New York). Mr. George Wharton Edwards gives us "an accompaniment of decorative drawings" which are as good as any of his other work, and in some cases better. The only artist who really rivals him in illustration of old English life and myth is Mr. Walter Crane, but the latter seems often lacking in a certain American chic which distinguishes our own artist. Nor is this quality out of place when transferred to the delineation of another period and another country. Mr. Hamilton Wright Mabie contributes a preface to the volume. He emphasizes the fact that the motives of our popular ballads were drawn directly from nature. He calls attention to a fact which we may be in some danger of forgetting—that the old ballads were objective, whereas our contemporary poetry is largely subjective, and illustrates this by comparing "The Hunting of the Cheviot" with Maeterlinck's "Princess Maleine." These old ballads indeed take us out of doors and out of the individual consciousness. There is in them not only a childlike curiosity about the things that befall men, but a childlike indifference to moral inference and justification. Mr. Mabie reminds us, too, that, in the wide range of human expression, the ballad follows the epic as a kind of aftermath; a second and scattered harvest springing without regularity or nurture out of rich and unexhausted soil. As to the origin of popular song, we have the testimony of Herder, Bürger, and others showing community-authorship. The old ballads have passed away with the conditions that produced them. In our time, it is true, there have been ballads of much power written, but they are as different from the old as the wild from the garden flower. In the old days there was, as Mr. Mabie says, a general experience, a common memory, a universal feeling. There was no poet, because all were poets.

Mr. William Winter's Gray Days and Gold in England and Scotland (The Macmillan Company, New York) has been published in an illustrated edition, and makes a charming holiday book. To this edition Mr. Winter contributes a new preface. The illustrations do not so much emphasize either the gray days or an American wanderer in Great Britain as the gold of fancy and of thought which he has found there. The main charm of Mr. Winter's essays on English subjects is found in the reverent attitude with which he approaches scenes which have been made sacred to him and to us all by their association with great names. Hence Mr. Winter's treatment is always sympathetic. More than this, the author does much to realize his aim of showing that the need of the age in America is a conviction that progress does not consist in material prosperity, but in spiritual advancement. Mr. Winter declares that utility has long been exclusively worshiped, and that the welfare of the future lies in the worship of beauty.

Mr. H. W. Phillips's Fables for the Times are simply Æsop inverted, with an "Immoral" attached to each fable. They are clever and ingenious, and Mr. Sullivant's drawings are rich in fun. The whole is printed in a thin, flat, large volume. (R. H. Russell & Son, New York.)

Several books have been called out by the poster craze. The latest is Posters in Miniature. It consists solely of the reproduction of posters of famous American, French, English, and German artists, without a word of criticism or even an index. Introduction and "fore-word," by Edward Penfield and Percival Pollard respectively, fill only three pages, and give little information. The pictures themselves are generally, but not always, well printed. Several portraits of artists are included. Every style of the grotesque is here represented. Some are artistic, some are merely funny, and some are indecent—for we see no reason why poster art should not be subject to the ordinary rules of criticism, and not a few of these reproductions are purposely and intentionally suggestive. (R. H. Russell & Co., New York.)

Mr. Julian Ralph's Alone in China has been given all the attractive qualities coming from choice illustration, novel cover design, and fine paper. These story-sketches are an outcome of Mr. Ralph's visit to China at the time of the recent war with Japan. He took a two months' trip in a house-boat on China's wonderful rivers and canals, and as Mr. Ralph can see in an hour more than most of us can in a week, it may be guessed that he came back with plenty of material. Under a charming veil of slight romance he talks about Chinese manners and character earnestly, striving to make his reader familiar with what is best and most typical in China. We are constantly finding in these pages things new, things interesting, and things curious. Mr. Ralph is wont to speak of himself as essentially a reporter, and certainly he is a prince of reporters; that he is also a man of refined literary taste and true imagination his recent work has abundantly shown. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)

From "Old English Ballads." (The Macmillan Co.)

Confessio Amantis

When do I love you most, sweet books of mine?
In strenuous morns when o'er your leaves I pore,
Austerely bent to win austerest lore,
Forgetting how the dewy meadows shine;
Or afternoons when honeysuckles twine
About the seat, and to some dreamy shore
Of old romance, where lovers evermore
Keep blissful hours, I follow at your sign?

Yea! ye are precious then, but most to me
Ere lamplight dawneth, when low croons the fire
To whispering twilight in my little room;
And eyes read not, but, sitting silently,
I feel your great hearts throbbing deep in quire,
And hear your breathing round me in the gloom.
—Richard Le Gallienne.

REVERENT AND LOVING CARE
St. Germans, England

The Rural Church

III.—A Neglected Home[1]

By J. Cleveland Cady

ALTHOUGH we enjoyed keenly the great English cathedrals, hardly one of them gave us more pleasure than a sight we met quite unexpectedly one afternoon as we were strolling down the hawthorn-hedged streets of the little old village of Kirkwood. The first glimpse was of a bit of velvety lawn, its deep green streaked by the golden sunshine that came in between the noble trees that bordered it. It was some three or four feet higher than the street, and separated from it by a low stone wall that supported the embankment, but was so overgrown with vines that the stonework was hardly visible.

Beyond the lawn and through a vista of trees was the shadow of a great broad porch, its depth relieved by an open doorway which framed in a pretty interior view—of traceried window and oaken pews, all in bright but delicate contrast with the deep, quiet shade of the porch.

We had to pass still further down the street to reach the entrance, which was emphasized by a simple, massive lich-gate. From this point for a little distance the road lay through prettily wooded grounds that quite concealed the church from sight, but after a turn one suddenly emerged into a large open space with a scene of rarest beauty. At the right was the charming lawn, that had so captivated us in the first glimpse of the place, while at the left was the "village churchyard," with its neatly kept paths, its rude and often grotesque headstones, and an occasional vine-covered seat for rest or meditation. The central and impressive feature of the scene, however, was the church itself, as it stood in its simple dignity, crowning and giving solemn meaning to the whole; for if the sunlit lawn and the quaint churchyard spoke of life and death, the church suggested the hallowed services and teachings that gave wisdom and strength for life, and hope in death.

Everything about the grounds was in exquisite order and revealed the most watchful care, a care that one instinctively felt was not of a purely mercenary character, but had its spring in affection or a high sense of duty. The same was true within. Time and wear had deepened and mellowed the tones of the old building, but had apparently wrought no ill; its condition was perfect, and doubtless the passing years had each added to its beauty.

More and more one felt the presence of loving care within and without, and this itself was not without its charm: it was a place that some one loved and reverenced, and that in turn called forth our admiration and respect.

We had not been long in the building before we met the sexton, an old man whose time and toil had been given here for many years. As he spoke of the place with great pride, he frequently referred to an absent one who seemed to direct his work and those who from time to time assisted him, whose judgment and taste he profoundly respected, and whose approval was his greatest satisfaction. This stimulated our inquiries, and we learned from him that the guardian spirit of the place for many years had been a lady of the neighborhood—a woman of rare cultivation and intelligence, who, finding herself free from family cares, had made the church and its surroundings her great interest. Her time, thought, and generous purse paid constant tribute to the place, and its officials, impressed by her spirit and enthusiasm, gladly gave a free field for its exercise.

In matters of serious moment, the sexton told us, a competent authority upon gardening or architecture was called in; but these occasions seldom occurred. The constant care for small details, the instant and thorough repair of anything becoming defective, the tidiness and order maintained, forestalled troubles of a more serious character, and really was an economical as well as a very attractive policy.

We left the place thinking not only of its rare beauty, but of what had been accomplished by one intelligent and devoted woman—for, doubtless, but for her labor of love the charm of God's house and grounds would have been lacking, and instead there would, very likely, have been "a neglected home."

---

[1] For previous articles see The Outlook for September 26 and October 31.

How frequently the latter is the state of the rural church! Even if it is not "a cathedral in a bandbox," but is well and simply planned and solidly built, and its ample grounds give the gem a generous setting, lack of care suffices to render it wholly unattractive within and without, the appearance of the unkempt grounds and uncared-for building thoroughly neutralizing whatever may have been admirable in the original scheme; for slovenliness cannot possibly be a harmonious adjunct of art, and lack of care evinces a painful lack of love and reverence for the house of God.

It was not the spirit of him who wrote: "Lord, I have loved the habitation of thy house, and the place where thine honor dwelleth."

As afterwards the memory of the English church was often recalled, a desire arose to see again one in a New England town whose building was remembered from boyhood—a church possessing rather unusual and picturesque grounds.

It was an enterprise started by persons of more than common refinement, as well as religious zeal, who called upon the best men of the time to advise them in regard to building and grounds. Public interest was not a little stirred by their decision upon a site somewhat away from the more thickly settled part of the place—quite a picturesque site, with brook, ravine, and a fine knoll beyond, on which the church was to be placed, the ravine being spanned by a rustic bridge of stone.

Popular sentiment held that a level lot in the center of the village would have been far wiser. The result, however, silenced most objections. The architect had admirably adapted the church to the site—it seemed to have always been a part of it. The ravine added not a little to its dignity by separating it from the roadside, while the rustic bridge of rock-faced stone gave an inviting approach.

As time added vines, and the trees carried out their part of the landscape effect, it became a spot of unusual beauty and interest, and was visited from far and near. The committee who carried out the scheme had not only the satisfaction of public approval and admiration, but the knowledge that their venture had not been an extravagant one. Owing to its peculiar conformation, the site had been considered a valueless one for building purposes, and they were able to purchase it, with its ample space, for far less than a limited village plot would have cost—indeed, with the bridge and the treatment of the grounds, the outlay was considerably less than it would have been in the other case.

It was very many years after this that the writer resolved upon a pilgrimage to this spot, which had so fascinated him in his youth. In the meantime a new generation had come into activity, and new people to the place. He wondered as he went if the progress of time had benefited the place, and if this generation had further developed, or perhaps improved upon, the scheme of the past.

One affliction of the village in olden time had been that cattle were permitted the freedom of the streets: in the case of the church, the property had been fenced in by a strong but inconspicuous fence that excluded four-footed intruders, and incidentally gave excuse for pretty stiles for the use of foot-passengers.

One of the first things that attracted attention on approaching was the decay and dilapidation of these fences, which no longer served as a protection, but gave free access to the horses and cattle, which were seen roaming about over the place, to the ruin of shrubbery and grounds.

The paths were overgrown with grass and weeds, except those on sloping ground, where frost and rains had gradually removed the earth, leaving a stony channel like the bed of a stream.

As to the church, the strongly built masonry had well withstood the lack of care; but the roof, with missing slate in various places; the windows, whose broken lead lights had been pieced out with whatever odds and ends of glass were convenient; the timbers of its porch, and the woodwork of its doorway, dark and grimy with mold and

WITH FIT SURROUNDINGS
Bisham Church, England

weather-stain—all presented a sorrowful appearance. How were the mighty fallen! Within, matters were no better. The missing slate had, of course, caused great leaks in the roof, which in turn badly discolored the wall and rotted the plaster, great pieces of which had fallen down. Dust was everywhere, and in many places the busy spider was setting traps for the unwary. To one who remembered this delightful building in its earlier days the sight was distressing, not only because it told of the passing away of a beautiful place, wrought by intelligent skill and self-denying devotion, but more especially because it bespoke an utter indifference to the house of God, a lack of any love for the place consecrated to his service and abiding. Such scenes, unfortunately, are not altogether rare, although in the example given it was the ruin of very unusual beauty.

Churches are often built with the best intention as to site and proper character, and then, when novelty has passed, are left to themselves, until the home of God's flock, replete with interest and beauty in days gone by, is manifestly "a neglected home" to which no loving hand or careful thought does service.

Sometimes in the Eastern States one has, perchance, come upon an "abandoned farm," and has been almost depressed by the melancholy sight. Such a scene of desolation where once life, hope, and happiness reigned! But the reflection will arise that life is full of vicissitudes, that families change with each passing year, and that maturity, removal, and death accentuate these changes sharply, and readily account for the occasional abandoned home.

The house of God, however, should be a more enduring home. As one generation passes away another equally needs its comfort, services, and beloved associations; and for this reason it is one of the saddest of sights to behold its neglect and decadence.

What must be the influence upon a community of such a lack of love and care for a place so hallowed by the Divine Presence, by the lives of worthy men and women who have labored and sacrificed for its interests in the past; by sacred influences which have developed that which was best, restrained evil, and been a constant force for good? Must it not be to render the community indifferent also to the best in life and morals—to steadily lower the public tone?

Perhaps there has been fault in not training the young to be of service in and about the house of God—to take a personal interest in its welfare. There is very much that young people and even children, under proper direction, can do in beautifying and preserving it; in rendering it and its grounds always tidy; in zealously caring for its welfare. In doing these things they will acquire habits of great value to themselves and the church. As, of old, young hands ministered in the temple to the glory of God, there are in these days abundant opportunities for such services; and, as then, it is most likely that they who minister in youth will serve to old age. This service often devolves upon a sexton or committee, who are busy with other affairs, and allow these interests to fall into neglect. If teachers and officers having special relations with the young would stimulate them and guide their efforts in this direction, they would not only find the immediate results gratifying, but also that they have in some measure solved that very practical and trying question in many rural churches, the "finding something for the young people to do."

But, whether by old or young, the care of the sanctuary should be dear to all God's people, and its condition such as never to suggest a "neglected home," but "the very house of God, the gate of heaven."

KATE CARNEGIE[1]

By Ian Maclaren

Author of "Beside the Bonnie Brier-Bush," "The Days of Auld Lang Syne," etc., etc.

CHAPTER XXIII.—MARGET HOWE'S CONFESSIONAL

When the General and Kate were loitering over breakfast the morning after the ovation, they heard the sound of a horse's feet on the gravel, and Donald came in with more than his usual importance.

"It iss a messenger from Muirtown Castle, and he iss waiting to know whether there will be any answer." And Donald put one letter before the father and another before the daughter, both showing the Hay crest. Kate's face whitened as she recognized the handwriting on her envelope, and she went over to the window-seat of a turret in the corner of the room, while the General opened his letter standing on a tiger-skin, with his back to the fireplace in the great hall. This is what he read:

My dear Carnegie: When men have fought together in the trenches before Sebastopol, as their ancestors have ridden side by side with Prince Charlie, I hope you will agree with me they need not stand on ceremony. If I seem guilty of any indiscretion in what I am going to say, then you will pardon me for "Auld Lang Syne."

You have one daughter and I have one son, and so I do not need to tell you that he is very dear to me, and that I have often thought of his marriage, on which not only his own happiness so much depends, but also the future of our house and name. Very likely you have had some such thoughts about Kate, with this difference, that you would rather keep so winsome a girl with you, while I want even so good a son as Hay to be married whenever he can meet with one whom he loves, and who is worthy of him.

Hay never gave me an hour's anxiety, and has no entanglements of any kind, but on the subject of marriage I could make no impression. "Time enough," he would say, or, "The other person has not turned up," and I was getting uneasy, for you and I are not so young as once we were. You may fancy my satisfaction, therefore, when George came down from Drumtochty last August and told me he had found the other person, and that she was my old friend Jack Carnegie's daughter. Of course I urged him to make sure of himself, but now he has had ample opportunities during your two visits, and he is quite determined that his wife is to be Kate or nobody.

It goes without saying that the Countess and I heartily approve Hay's choice and are charmed with Kate, who is as bonnie as she is high-spirited. She sustains the old traditions of her family, who were ever strong and true, and she has a clever tongue, which neither you nor I have, Jack, nor Hay either, good fellow though he be, and that is not a bad thing for a woman nowadays. They would make a handsome pair, as they ought, with such good-looking fathers, eh?

Well, I am coming to my point, for in these circumstances I want your help. What Miss Carnegie thinks of Hay we don't know, and unless I'm much mistaken she will decide for herself; but is it too much to ask you—if you can—to say a word for Hay? You are quite right to think that no man is worthy of Kate, but she is bound to marry some day—I can't conceive how you have kept her so long—and I am certain Hay will make a good husband, and he is simply devoted to her. If she refuses him, I am afraid he will not marry, and then—well, grant I'm selfish, but it would be a calamity to us.

Don't you think that it looks like an arrangement of Providence to unite two families that have shared common dangers and common faith in the past, and to establish a Carnegie once more as lady of Drumtochty? Now that is all, and it's a long screed, but the matter lies near my heart, and we shall wait the answers from you both with anxiety.

Yours faithfully,
KILSPINDIE.

Kate's letter was much shorter, and was written in big school-boy hand with great care.

Dear Miss Carnegie: They say that a woman always knows when a man loves her, and if so you will not be astonished at this letter. From that day I saw you in Drumtochty Kirk I have loved you, and every week I love you more. My mother is the only other woman I have ever cared for, and that is different. Will you be my wife? I often wanted to ask you when you were with us in November and last month, but my heart failed me. Can you love me a little, enough to say yes? I am not clever, and I am afraid I shall never do anything to make you proud of me, but you will have all my heart, and I'll do my best to make you happy.

---

[1] Copyright, 1896, by John Watson.

I am, yours very sincerely,
HAY.

Carnegie could see Kate's face from his place, and she was looking out of the window with a kindly expression, and her father, who was of a simple mind, and knew little of women, was encouraged by such visible friendliness. He was about to go over, when her face changed. She dropped the letter on the seat, and became very thoughtful, knitting her brows and resting her chin on her hand. In a little something stung her—like a person recalling an injury—and she flushed with anger, drumming with her fingers on the sill of the window. Then anger gave place to sadness, as if she had resolved to do something that was inevitable, but less than the best. Kate glanced in her father's direction, and read Lord Hay's letter again; then she seemed to have made up her mind.

"Father," as she joined him on the skin beneath those loyal Carnegies on the wall, "there is Lord Hay's letter, and he is a . . . worthy gentleman. Perhaps I did not give him so much encouragement as he took, but that does not matter. This is a . . . serious decision, and ought not to be made on the spur of the moment. Will you let the messenger go with a note to say that an answer will be sent on Monday? You might write to Lord Kilspindie."

She was still standing in the place when he returned, and had been studying the proud, determined face of Black John's mother, who had not spared her only son for the good cause.

"Did you ever hear of any Carnegie, dad, who married beneath her, or . . . loved one on the other side?"

"Never," said her father. "Our women all married into loyal families of their own rank, which is best for comfort; but why do you ask? Hay is a . . ."

"Yes, I know; it was only . . . curiosity made me ask, and I suppose some of our women must have made sacrifices for their . . . cause?"

"Far more than the men ever did, for, see you, a man is just shot, and all is over, and before he falls he's had some good fighting, but his wife suffers all her days, when he is living and when he is dead. Yet our women were the first to send their men to the field. Heavens! what women do suffer—they ought to have their reward."

"They have," said Kate, with emphasis, "if they help those whom they love. . . . Father, would you be quite satisfied with Lord Hay for a son-in-law, and . . . would you let us live with you here as much as we could?"

"Kate, if you are to marry—and I knew it must come some day—I have not seen a more honest man; but you are forgetting that Tochty Lodge will soon be out of our hands; I'll have to get a den somewhere, not too far away from Muirtown, I hope."

"If I marry Lord Hay, Tochty Lodge will not be sold, and you will never be disturbed, dad. We shall not be separated more than we can help," and Kate caressed the General.

"Do you mean, lassie," said the General, with a sudden suspicion, lifting her face till he saw her eyes, "that you are going to accept Hay in order to keep the old home? You must not do this, for it would not . . . don't you see that I . . . could not accept this at your hands?"

"You cannot prevent your daughter marrying Lord Hay if your daughter so decides, but as yet she is in doubt, very great doubt, and so I am going for a long walk on the big moor, and you . . . well, why not take lunch with the Padre at the manse?"

"Hay is a straight young fellow, and Kate would supply what he wants—a dash of go, you know"—so the General was summing up the situation to his old friend; "but my girl is not to marry Hay or any other man for my sake, and that is what she thinks of doing."

"Did it ever occur to you, Carnegie, that Kate had a . . . well, kindly feeling for any other man?"

"Plenty of fellows tried their luck: first subalterns, then aides-de-camp, and at last commissioners; it was no easy affair to be her father," and Carnegie gave Davidson a comic look. "I used to scold her, but, upon my word, I don't know she was to blame, and I am certain she did not care for one of them; in fact, she laughed at them all till—well, in fact, I had to interfere."

"And since you came to the Lodge"—the Doctor spoke with meaning—"besides Lord Hay?"

"Why, there is just yourself"—the Doctor nodded with much appreciation—"and that Free Kirkman. . . . Davidson, do you mean that—oh, nonsense, man; she was quite angry one day when I suggested a parson. Kate has always said that was the last man she would marry."

"That is an evidence she will."

The General stared at the oracle, and went on:

"She has made his life miserable at the Lodge with her tongue; she delighted in teasing him. Your idea is quite absurd."

"Carnegie, did you ever hear the classical couplet—

Scratching and biting
Mak Scots fouk's 'ooing;

and although I admit the description applies in the first instance to milkmaids, yet there is a fair share of national character in the Carnegies."

"Do you really think that Kate is in . . . has, well, a - eh, tenderness to Carmichael? it would never have occurred to me."

"How would you look on Carmichael as a suitor?"

"Well, if Kate is to marry—and, mind you, I always prepared myself for that—I would of course prefer Hay, not because he is a lord, or rich, or any snobbery of that kind—you know me better than that, Sandie—but because he's . . . you know . . . belongs to our own set.

"Don't you think there is something in that?" and the General tried to explain his honest mind, in which lived no unworthy or uncharitable thought. "I have not one word to say against Carmichael; he's good-looking, and monstrous clever, and he's always made himself very agreeable, very, and the people swear by him in the Glen; but . . . you must understand what I mean, Davidson," and the General was in despair.

"You mean that though he's a first-rate young fellow for a clergyman, he does not belong to your world—has a different set of friends, has different habits of living, has a different way of thinking and speaking—is, in fact, an outsider."

"That's it—just what I was 'ettling' after—lucky fellows we Scots with such words," and the General was immensely delighted to be delivered of his idea in an inoffensive form.

"It is my own belief, Carnegie—and you can laugh at me afterward if I be wrong—that this will be the end of it, however. Yes, putting it plainly, that Kate is in love with Carmichael, as he is certainly with her; and you will have to make the best of the situation."

"You don't like the idea any more than I do, Davidson?"

"Speaking in perfect confidence and frankness, I do not. I look at the matter this way"—the Doctor stood on the hearth-rug in a judicial attitude, pulling down his waistcoat with his two hands, his legs apart, and his eye-glass on his nose. "Carmichael has been brought up among . . . plain, respectable people, and theological books, and church courts, and Free Kirk society, all of which is excellent, but . . . secluded"—the Doctor liked the word, which gave his mind without offense—"secluded. Kate is a Carnegie, was educated in France, has traveled in India, and has lived in the most exciting circumstances. She loves soldiers, war, gayety, sport, besides many other . . . eh, good things, and is a . . . lovely girl. Love laughs at rules, but if you ask me my candid opinion, the marriage would not be . . . in fact, congruous. If it is to be, it must be, and God bless them both, say I, and so will everybody say; but it will be an experiment, a distinct and . . . interesting experiment."

"Kate is not to marry any one for my sake, to save Tochty, but I do wish she had fancied Lord Hay," said the General, ruefully.

"The Free Kirk folk in the depths of their hearts consider me a worldly old clergyman, and perhaps I am, for, Jack, I would dearly like to see our Kate Viscountess Hay, and to think that one day, when we three old fellows are gone, she would be Countess of Kilspindie." That was the first conference of the day on Kate's love affairs, and this is how it ended.

Meanwhile the young woman herself had gone up the road to the high Glen and made her way over dykes and through fields to Whinnyknowe, which she had often visited since the August Sacrament. Whinnie came out from the kitchen door in corduroy trousers, much stained with soil, and gray shirt—wiping his mouth with the back of his hand after a hearty dinner—and went to the barn for his midday sleep before he went again to the sowing. Marget met her at the garden gate, dressed in her weekday clothes and fresh from a morning's churning, but ever refined and spiritual, as one whose soul is shining through the veil of common circumstances.

"It's a benison tae see ye on this bricht day, Miss Carnegie, an' ye 'ill come tae the garden-seat, for the spring flooers are bloomin' bonnie and sweet the noo, an' fillin' 's a' wi' hope.

"Gin there be ony sun shinin'," as she spread a plaid, "the heat fa's here, an' save when the snow is heavy on the glen, there's aye some blossoms here tae mind us o' oor Father's love an' the world that isna seen."

"Marget," began Kate, not with a blush, but rather a richening of color, "you have been awfully good to me, and have helped me in lots of ways, far more than you could dream of. Do you know you've made me almost good at times, with just enough badness to keep me still myself, as when I flounced out from the Free Kirk."

Marget only smiled deprecation and affection, for her heart went out to this motherless, undisciplined girl, whom she respected, like a true Scot, because, although Kate had made her a friend, she was still a Carnegie; whom she loved, because, although Kate might be very provoking, she was honest to the core.

"To-day," Kate resumed, after a pause, and speaking with an unusual nervousness, "I want your advice on a serious matter, which I must decide, and which . . . concerns other people as well as myself. In fact, I would like to ask a question," and she paused to frame her case.

It was a just testimony to Marget Howe that Kate never thought of pledging her to secrecy, for there are people whom to suspect of dishonor is a sin.

"Suppose that a man . . . loved a woman, and that he was honorable, brave, gentle, true, in fact . . . a gentleman, and made her a proposal of marriage."

Marget was looking before her with calm, attentive face, never once glancing at Kate to supplement what was told.

"If . . . the girl accepted him, she would have a high position, and be rich, so that she could . . . save her . . . family from ruin, and keep . . . them in the house they loved."

Marget listened with earnest intelligence.

"She respects this man, and is grateful to him. She is certain that he would be . . . kind to her, and give her everything she wanted. And she thinks that he . . . would be happy."

Marget waited for the end.

"But she does not love him—that is all."

As the tale was being told in brief, clear, slow sentences, Marget's eyes became luminous, and her lips opened as one ready to speak from an inner knowledge.

"Ye hev let me see a piece o' life, an' it is sacred, for naethin' on earth is sae near God as luve, an' a'll no deny that ma woman's heart is wi' that honest gentleman, an' a' the mair gin he dinna win his prize.

"But a man often comes tae his heicht through disappointment, and a woman, she hes tae learn that there is that which she hes the richt tae give for gratitude or friendship's sake, and that which can only be bestowed by the hand o' luve.

"It will maybe help ye gin a' tell ye anither tale, an' though it be o' humble life, yet oor hearts are the same in the castle and the cottar's hoose, wi' the same cup o' sorrow tae drink an' the same croon o' joy tae wear, an' the same dividin' o' roads for oor trial.

"There wes a man showed a wumman muckle kindness, and to her fouk also, an' he wes simple an' honest, an' for what he hed done, an' because there wes nae evil in him, she married him."

"And what has happened?" Kate, being half Highland, had less patience than Marget.

"He hes been a gude man tae her through the dark an' through the licht, an' she hes tried tae repay him as a puir imperfect wumman can, an' her hert is warm tae him, but there hes aye been ae thing wantin'—an' it hes been that wife's cross a' her life—there wes nae ither man, but her husband wesna, isna, canna be her ain a'thegether an' forever—for the want o' luve—that luve o' luve that maks marriage."

Her voice was laden with feeling, and it was plain that she had given of her own and deepest for the guiding of another.

"Marget, I can never be grateful enough to you for what you have shown me this day." As she passed Whinnie with his bag of seed, he apologized for his wife.

"A'm dootin', Miss Carnegie, the gude wife hes keepit ye ower lang in the gairden haiverin' awa' aboot the flooers an' her ither trokes. But she's michty prood for a' that aboot yir comin' up tae veesit us." Such was the second conference on Kate's affairs on that day.

No place could be more thoroughly cleansed from vulgar curiosity than our Glen, or have a finer contempt for "clatters," but the atmosphere was electrical in the diffusion of information. What happened at Burnbrae was known at the foot of Glen Urtach by evening, and the visit of spiritual consolation which Milton, in the days of his Pharisaism, paid to Jamie Soutar on his death-bed was the joy of every fireside in Drumtochty within twenty-four hours. Perhaps it was not, therefore, remarkable that the arrival of Lord Kilspindie's groom at Tochty Lodge post-haste with two letters on Saturday morning—one for the General from his Lordship, and one from his son for Miss Kate—should have been rightly interpreted, and the news spread with such rapidity that Hillocks—a man not distinguished above his fellows for tact—was able to inform Carmichael in the early afternoon that the marriage between the young lord and the "Miss" at Tochty was now practically arranged.

"It's been aff and on a' winter, an' the second veesit tae the Castle settled it, but a'm hearin' it wes the loss o' the Lodge brocht the fast offer this mornin'. She's an able wumman, an' cairried her gear tae the best market. Ma certes," and Hillocks contemplated Kate's achievement with sympathetic admiration, "but she 'ill set her place weel, an' haud her ain wi' the Duchess o' Athole."

Carmichael ought to have taken his beating like a man, and said nothing to any one, but instead thereof he betook himself for consolation to Marget, a better counselor in a crisis than Janet, with all her Celtic wiles, and Marget set him in the very seat where Kate had put her case.

"It has, I suppose, been all a dream, and now I have awaked, but it was . . . a pleasant dream, and one finds the morning light a little chill. One must just learn to forget, and be as if one had never . . . dreamed," but Carmichael looked at Marget wistfully.

"Ye canna be the same again, for a' coont, gin ony man luves a wumman wi' a leal hert, whether she answer or no, or whether she even kens, he's been the gainer, an' the harvest will be his forever.

"It hes seemed tae me that nae luve is proved an' crooned for eternity onless the man hes forgotten himsel' an' is willin' tae live alane gin the wumman he luves sees prosperity. He only is the perfect lover, and for him God hes the best gifts.

"Yes, a've seen it wi' ma ain eyes"—for indeed this seemed to Carmichael an impossible height of self-abnegation—"a man who luved an' served a wumman wi' his best an' at a great cost, an' yet for whom there cud be no reward but his ain luve." Marget's face grew so beautiful as she told of the constancy of this unknown, unrewarded lover that Carmichael left without further speech, but with a purer vision of love than had ever before visited his soul. Marget watched him go down the same path by which Kate went, and she said to herself, "Whether or no he win is in the will of God, but already luve hes given his blessin' tae man and maid."

Kate did not go to kirk on Sunday, but lived all day in the woods, and in the evening she kissed her father and laid this answer in his hands :

> Dear Lord Hay : You have done me the greatest honor any woman can receive at your hands, and for two days I have thought of nothing else. If it were enough that your wife should like and respect you, then I would at once accept you as my betrothed, but as it is plain to me that no woman ought to marry any one unless she also loves him, I am obliged to refuse one of the truest men I have ever met, for whom I have a very kindly place in my heart, and whose happiness I shall always desire. Believe me, yours sincerely,
>
> KATE CARNEGIE.

"You could do nothing else, Kit, and you have done right to close the matter, . . . but I'm sorry for Hay."

CHAPTER XXIV.—LOVE IS LORD

It could not be said with a steady face that the proceedings of the Free Kirk Presbytery of Muirtown increased the gayety of nations, and there might be persons—far left to themselves, of course—who would describe its members as wearisome ecclesiastics. Carmichael himself, in a mood of gay irresponsibility, had once sketched a meeting of this reverend court, in which the names were skillfully adapted, after the ancient fashion, to represent character, and the incidents, if not vero, were certainly ben trovato, and had the article ready for transmission to "Ferrier's Journal." "A Sederunt" did not, however, add to the miseries of a most courteous editor, for Jenkins, having come up for an all-night conference, and having heard the article with unfeigned delight, pointed out that, if it were accepted, which Carmichael's experience did not certify, the writer would be run down within fourteen days, and that, so unreasonable a thing is human nature, some of the Presbytery might be less than pleased with their own likenesses. "It's in the waste-paper basket," Carmichael said next morning, which, as the author was twenty-five years of age and not conspicuously modest, is a conclusive testimonial to the goodness of one Presbytery, and its hold on the affection of its members.

Scots take their pleasures sadly, and no one can imagine from what arid soil they may not draw their nutriment, but it was not for motions of ponderous ambiguity and pragmatical points of order a country minister rose before daybreak on a winter's morning and worked his way to the nearest station, with the stars still overhead and the snow below his feet, so that when the clerk made a sign to the Moderator punctually at one minute past eleven to "constitute the Presbytery," he might not be missing from his place. It was the longing of a lonely man, across whose front door no visitor had come for weeks, for friendly company, of a weary minister, discouraged by narrow circumstances, monotonous routine, unexpected disappointments among his people, for a word of good cheer. A cynical stranger might discover various stupidities, peculiarities, provincialisms in the Presbytery—he knew himself who had a temper and who was a trifle sensitive about his rights—but this middle-aged, hard-working, simple-living man saw twenty faithful brethren—the elders did not count in this connection, for they did not understand—who stood beside him on occasion at the Holy Table, and gave him advice in his perplexities, and would bury him with honest regret when he died, and fight like wildcats that his widow and children should have their due. His toilsome journey was forgotten when Doctor Dowbiggin, in an interstice of motions, came across the floor and sat down beside him and whispered confidentially, "Well, how are things going at Kincairney?"—Dowbiggin really deserved his leadership—or when the clerk, suddenly wheeling round in his seat, would pass his snuff-box across to him without a word, for the clerk had a way of handing his box which, being interpreted, ran as follows : "You suppose that I am lifted above all ordinary affairs in my clerkly isolation, and that I do not know what a solid work you are doing for God and man in the obscure parish of Kincairney, but you are wrong. You have a very warm corner in my memory, and in sign thereof accept my box." And the said minister, trudging home that evening, and being met at a certain turn of the road by his wife—sentimental at fifty, you see, after a quarter of a century's toiling and preaching—would enlarge on Doctor Dowbiggin's cordiality and the marked courtesy of the clerk, and when they were alone in the manse his wife would kiss him—incredible to our cynic—and say, "You see, Tom, more people than I know what a good work you are doing," and Tom would start his twenty-first lecture on the Ephesians next morning with new spirit. Such is the power of comradeship, such is the thirst for sympathy ; and, indeed, there is no dog either so big or so little that it does not appreciate a pat, and go down the street afterward with better heart.

The Presbytery had always a tender regard for the Free Kirk of Drumtochty, and happened to treat Carmichael with much favor. When the "call" to him was signed at once by every member of the congregation, the clerk—who had been obliged to summon Donald Menzies from Gaelic by the intimation that Drumtochty was by the law of the Church "uno lingual, and that all proceedings must be conducted in the English language"—arose and declared that "such unanimous attention to their ecclesiastical duties was unexampled in his experience ;" and when at Carmichael's ordination a certain certificate was wanting, the clerk, whose intervention was regarded with awe, proposed that the court should anticipate its arrival, dealing with the matter "proleptically," and that the court saw in the very word another proof of the clerk's masterly official genius. It was he also—expressing the mind of the Presbytery—who proposed that the court should send Carmichael as a commissioner to the General Assembly in the first year of his ministry, and took occasion to remark that Mr. Carmichael, according to "reliable information at his disposal," was rendering important service to the Free Church in his sphere at Drumtochty. Carmichael was very happy in those days, and was so petted by his ecclesiastical superiors that he never missed a meeting of court, where he either sat in a demure silence, which commended him greatly to the old men, or conversed with his friends on a back bench about general affairs.

It gave him, therefore, a shock to sit with his brethren in the month of June—when the walk through the woods had been a joy, and Muirtown lay at her fairest, and the sunshine filled the court-room, and every man had a summer air, and Doctor Dowbiggin actually wore a rose in his coat—and to discover that he himself was sick of his old friends, of his work, of his people, of himself. The reasons were obvious. Was it not a sin that thirty Christian men should be cooped up in a room passing schedules when the summer was young and fresh upon the land ? Could any one of the Rabbi's boys sit in that room and see his accustomed place—a corner next the wall on a back seat—empty and not be cast down ? Besides, does not a minister's year begin in September and end in July, and before it closes is not the minister at his lowest, having given away himself for eleven months ? "One begins to weary for a rest," he whispered to Kincairney, and that worthy man explained that he and his wife had been planning their triennial holiday, and hoped to have a fortnight at Carnoustie. Carmichael realized his hypocrisy in that instant, for he knew perfectly that he had lost touch with life because of a hopeless love and a proud face he had not seen a year ago. He flung himself out of the court with such impatience that the clerk stayed his hand in the midst of the sacred words pro re nata, and Kincairney mentioned to his wife in the evening that Carmichael had never got over Doctor Saunderson's death.

Carmichael wandered up one of the meadows which are the glory of Muirtown, and sat down by the queen of Scottish rivers, which runs deep and swift, clean and bright, from Loch Tay to the sea, between wooded banks and overhanging trees, past corn-fields and ancient castles ; a river for him who swims, or rows, or fishes, or dreams—in which, if such were to be his fate, a man might ask to be drowned. Opposite him began the woods of Muirtown Castle, and he tried to be glad that Kate . . . Miss Carnegie would one day be their mistress: the formal announcement of her engagement, he had heard, was to be made next week, on Lord Kilspindie's birthday. A distant whistle came on the clear air from Muirtown station, where . . . and all this turmoil of hope and fear, love and despair, had been packed into a few months. There is a bend in the river where he sits, and the salmon-fishers have dropped their nets, and are now dragging them to the bank. With a thrill of sympathy, Carmichael watched the fish struggling in the meshes, and his heart leaped when, through some mishandling, one escaped with a splash of silver and plunged into the river. He had also been caught quite suddenly in the joyous current of his life and held in bonds. Why should he not make a bold plunge for freedom, which he could never have with the Lodge at his doors, with the Castle only twelve miles away? He had been asked in his student days to go to the northwest of Canada and take charge of a parish fifty miles square. The idea had for a little fired his imagination, and then faded before other ambitions. It revived with power on the banks of that joyful, forceful river, and he saw himself beginning life again on the open prairie lands—riding, camping, shooting, preaching—a free man and an apostle to the Scottish Dispersion.

With this bracing resolution, that seemed a call of God to deliver him from bondage, came a longing to visit Kilbogie Manse and the Rabbi's grave. It was a journey of expiation, for Carmichael followed the road the Rabbi walked with the hand of death upon him after that lamentable Presbytery, and he marked the hills where the old man must have stood and fought for breath. He could see Mains, where he had gone with the Rabbi to the exposition, and he passed the spot where the Rabbi had taken farewell of George Pitillo in a figure. What learning, and simplicity, and unselfishness, and honesty, and affection were mingled in the character of the Rabbi! What skill, and courage, and tenderness, and self-sacrifice, and humility there had been also in Weelum MacLure, who had just died! Carmichael dwelt on the likeness and unlikeness of the two men, who had each loved the highest he knew and served his generation according to the will of God, till he found himself again with the Drumtochty doctor on his heroic journeys, with the Rabbi in his long vigils. It was a singular means of grace to have known two such men in the flesh, when he was still young and impressionable. A spiritual emotion possessed Carmichael. He lifted his heart to the Eternal, and prayed that if on account of any hardship he shrank from duty he might remember MacLure, and if in any intellectual strait he was tempted to palter with truth he might see the Rabbi pursuing his solitary way. The district was full of the Rabbi, who could not have gone forever, who might appear any moment—buried in a book and proceeding steadily in the wrong direction. The Rabbi surely was not dead, and Carmichael drifted into that dear world of romance where what we desire comes to pass, and facts count for nothing. This was how the Idyll went. From the moment of the reconciliation the Rabbi's disease began to abate in a quite unheard-of fashion—love wrought a miracle—and with Kate's nursing and his he speedily recovered. Things came right between Kate and himself as they shared their task of love, and so . . . of course—it took place last month—and now he was going to carry off the Rabbi, who somehow had not come to the Presbytery, to Drumtochty Manse, where his bride would meet them both beneath the laburnum arch at the gate. He would be cunning as he approached the door of Kilbogie Manse, and walk on the grass border lest the Rabbi, poring over some Father, should hear the crunch of the gravel—he did know his footstep—and so he would take the old man by surprise. Alas! he need not take such care, for the walk was now as the border with grass, and the gate was lying open, and the dead house stared at him with open, unthinking eyes, and knew him not. The key was in the door, and he crossed the threshold once more—no need to beware of parcels on the floor now—and turned to the familiar room. The shelves had been taken down, but he could trace their lines on the ancient discolored paper that was now revealed for the first time; there, where a new shutter was resting against the wall, used to stand the "seat of the fathers," and exactly in the midst of that heap of straw the Rabbi had his chair. . . .

"Ye've come tae see hoo we're gettin' on wi' the repairs"—it was the joiner of Kilbogie; "it's no a licht job, for there's nae doot the hoose hes been awfu' neglecklt. The Doctor wes a terrible scholar, but he wudna hae kent that the slats were aff the roof till the drap cam intae his bed.

"Ou, aye, the manse is tae be papered an' pented for the new minister; a' cud show ye the papers; juist as ye please: they're verra tasty an' showy. He's tae be married at once, a'm hearin', an' this is tae be the drawin'-room; he wes here ten days syne—the day aifter he wes eleckit; they're aye in a hurry when they're engaged—an' seleckit a sma' room upstairs for his study; he didna think he wud need as lairge a room for bukes, an' he thocht the auld study wud dae fine for pairties.

"There's juist ae room feenished, an' ye micht like tae see the paper on't; it's a yellow rose on a licht blue grund; a'm jidgin' it wes the Doctor's ain room. Weel, it's a gude lang wy tae Drumtochty, an' ye 'ill no be wantin' tae pit aff time, a' daresay."

It was a terrible douche of prose, and Carmichael was still shivering when he reached the kindly shade of Tochty woods. He had seen the successful candidate at the Presbytery arranging about his "trial discourses" with the clerk—who regarded him dubiously—and he had heard some story about his being a "popular hand," and bewitching the young people with a sermon on the "good fight," with four heads—"the soldier," "the battle-field," "the battle," and "the crown"—each with an illustration, an anecdote, and a verse of poetry. Carmichael recognized the type, and already saw the new minister of Kilbogie, smug and self-satisfied, handing round cream and sugar in the Rabbi's old study, while his wife, a stout young woman in gay clothing, pours tea from a pot of florid design, and bearing a blazing marriage inscription. There would be a soirée in the kirk where the Rabbi had opened the mysteries of God, and his successor would explain how unworthy he felt to follow Doctor Saunderson, and how he was going to reorganize the congregation, and there would be many jocose allusions to his coming marriage, but Carmichael would by that time have left the district.

No one can walk a mile in Tochty woods, where there are little glades of mossy turf, and banks of violets and geraniums, and gentle creatures on ground and branch, and cool shade from the summer sun, and the sound of running water by your side, without being sweetened and comforted. Bitter thoughts and cynical criticisms, as well as vain regrets and peevish complaints, fell away from Carmichael's soul, and gave place to a gentle melancholy. He came to the heart of the wood, where was the lovers' grave, and the place seem to invite his company. A sense of the tears of things came over him, and he sat down by the riverside to meditate. It was two hundred years and more since the lassies died before they were wedded, and for him there was not even to be love. The ages were linked together by a long tragedy of disappointment and vanity, but the Tochty ran now as in the former days. What was any human life but a drop in the river that flowed without ceasing to the unknown sea? What could any one do but yield himself to necessity and summon his courage to endure? Then at the singing of a bird his mood lightened and was changed, as if he had heard the Evangel. God was over all, and life was immortal, and he could not be wrong who did the will of God. After a day of conflict, peace came to his soul, and in the soft light of the setting sun he rose to go home.

"Miss Carnegie . . . I did not know you were here . . . I thought you were in London," and Carmichael stood before Kate in great confusion.

"Nor did I see you behind that tree"—Kate herself was startled. "Yes, the General and I have been visiting some old friends, and only came home an hour ago.

"Do you know"—Kate was herself again—"the first thing I do on arrival is to make a pilgrimage to this place? Half an hour here banishes the dust of a day's journey and of . . . life.

"Besides, I don't know whether you have heard"—Kate spoke hurriedly—"that it is now settled that I . . . we will be leaving the Lodge soon, and one wants to have as much as possible of the old place in the time remaining."

She gave him this opportunity in kindness, as it seemed, and he reproached himself because he did not offer his congratulations.

"You will, I . . . the people hope, come often here, Miss Carnegie, and not cast off Drumtochty, although the Lodge be not your home. You will always have a place in the hearts of the Glen. Marjorie will never be grateful enough for your readings," which was bravely said.

"Do you think that I can ever forget the Glen and my . . . friends here? Not while I live; the Carnegies have their own faults, but ingratitude is not one. Nor the dear Rabbi's grave." Then there was a silence which Carmichael found very trying—they had been so near that day in Kilbogie Manse, with only the Rabbi, who loved them both, between; but now, although they stood face to face, there was a gulf dividing them.

"It may not be easy for me to visit Drumtochty often, for you know there has been a change . . . in our circumstances, and one must suit one's self to it."

Carmichael flushed uneasily, and Kate supposed that he was sympathizing with their losses.

"I hope to be a busy woman soon, with lots of work, and I shall use every one of my little scraps of knowledge. How do you think I shall acquit myself in my new rôle?"

It was a little hard on Carmichael, who was thinking of a countess, while Kate meant a governess.

"You need not ask me how I think you will do, as . . . in any position, and I . . . wish you every success, and . . . (with a visible effort) happiness."

He spoke so stiffly that Kate sought about for reasons, and could only remember their quarrel and imagine he retained a grudge—which was rather ungenerous.

"It occurs to me that one man ought to be thankful when we depart, for then he will be able to call Queen Mary names every Sunday without a misguided Jacobite girl dropping in to create a disturbance."

"Drumtochty will have to form its own opinion of poor Mary without my aid," and Carmichael smiled sadly in pardon of the past, "for it is likely, although no one knows this in the Glen, that I shall soon be far away."

"Leaving Drumtochty? What will Marjorie do without you, and Dr. Davidson, and . . . all the people?" Then, remembering Janet's gossip, and her voice freezing, "I suppose you have got a better or more convenient living. The Glen is certainly rather inaccessible."

"Have I done anything, Miss Carnegie, to justify you in thinking that I would leave the Glen, which has been so good to me, for . . . worldly reasons? There is enough to support an unmarried man, and I am not likely to . . . to marry," said Carmichael, bitterly; "but there are times when it is better for a man to change his whole surroundings and make a new life."

It was clear that the Bailie's daughter was a romance of Janet's Celtic imagination, and Kate's manner softened.

"The Rabbi's death and . . . your difference of opinion—something about doctrine, wasn't it? we were from home—must have been a great trial, and, as there was no opportunity before, let me say how much we sympathized with you and . . . thought of you.

"Don't you think, however, Mr. Carmichael"—she spoke with hesitation, but much kindness—"that you ought not to fling up your work here on that account? Would not the Rabbi himself have wished you to stick to your post? . . . and all your friends would like to think you had been . . . brave."

"You are cruel, Miss Carnegie; you try me beyond what I can endure, although I shall be ashamed to-night for what I am to say. Do you not know or guess that it is your . . . on account of you, I mean, that I must leave Drumtochty?"

"On account of me?" Kate looked at him in unaffected amazement.

"Are you blind, or is it that you could not suspect me of such presumption? Had you no idea that night in Dr. Davidson's drawing-room? Have you never seen that I . . . Kate—I will say it once to your face as I say it every hour to myself—you won my heart in an instant on Muirtown Station, and will hold it till I die.

"Do not speak till I be done, and then order me from your presence as I deserve. I know that it is unworthy of a gentleman, and . . . a minister of Christ to say such things to the betrothed of another man; only one minute more"—for Kate had started as if in anger—"I know also that if I were stronger I could go on living as before, and meet you from time to time when you came from the Castle with your husband, and never allow myself to think of Lady Hay as I felt to Miss Carnegie. But I am afraid of myself, and . . . this is the last time we shall meet, Miss Carnegie. Forgive me for my love, and believe that one man will ever remember . . . and pray for you."

Carmichael bowed low, the last sunshine of the evening playing on his fair hair, and turned to go.

"One word, if you please," said Kate, and they looked into one another's eyes, the blue and brown, seeing many things that cannot be written. "You may be forgiven for . . . loving me, because you could not help that"—this with a very roguish look, our Kate all over—"and I suppose you must be forgiven for listening to foolish gossip, since people will tell lies"—this with a stamp of the foot, our Kate again—"but I shall never forgive you if you leave me, never"—this was a new Kate, like to the opening of a flower.

"Why? Tell me plainly," and in the silence Carmichael heard a trout leap in the river.

"Because I love you."

The Tochty water sang a pleasant song, and the sun set gloriously behind Ben Urtach.

THE END

Mrs. Smedley's Thanksgiving

By Mary T. Mott

Mrs. Fiscus's comely blonde face wore a look of stern determination as she steadily galloped her pinto mustang along the road leading to her sister's house.

"Somethin's obleeged to be done with Polly," she communed with herself. "I'll try coaxin' her fust, an' if hit don't do her no good I'll bemean her an' see how she'll take hit; I won't tell her nothin' but the honorable truth neither. Hit was powerful hard on her to have pore Asbury killed by his team thataway, but she's been lamentin' him for mighty near a solid year, an' she'll die if she don't stop hit. Hit's a plumb shame, too, the way she treats her children, lettin' em run as dirty an' ragged as little Diggers, an' a-scoldin' 'em if they want to frolic an' laugh like other young ones."

As she dismounted at the Smedley gate she glanced around the premises.

"Yes, I'm glad that Lem Scott's got up a right smart jag of wood," she thought, approvingly. "If 'twa'n't for him I b'leeve she'd let the young ones starve or freeze; but he gits mighty little thanks for helpin' her."

Mrs. Fiscus stepped briskly up to the kitchen door and opened it with an aggressive air of cheerfulness. The four children rushed upon her with uproarious welcome, before their mother could offer her greeting. "Well, Polly," said the visitor, giving her sister a vigorous kiss, "how are you a-makin' hit?" The pretty, fair-haired mother was in a state of ostentatious untidiness, and she sighed drearily as she answered, "Mis'able, Emmeline; clean out'n heart."

Mrs. Fiscus clasped the despondent creature in her arms, kissing her again, and saying: "There, there, honey; I know you feel right bad, an' that's the reason I left my work an' rode over. You've got to give up that thar foolishness of stayin' hyar an' grievin' yourself to death over your trouble. You'd orter show more religion 'n that. Matt's comin' over for you early to-morrer, to go to preachin' with us, an' then we're goin' to take you back to dinner with us. The Presidin' Elder an' his wife's going to be thar."

"You put hit up fine, didn't you, Emmeline, arter me tellin' you over and over agin that me an' the children ain't a-goin' to set foot off'n this ranch to-morrer! I don't take no stock in these hyar Yankee Thanksgivin's noway," indignantly returned Mrs. Smedley. "We never had none of 'em in Missouri."

"This hyar ain't no Yankee Thanksgivin'—the Governor of California ordered hit; an' Matt's as good a Missourian as you da'r be, but he says he won't never go back on no day that gives him a show for a turkey dinner. Do go an' hear the Presidin' Elder; he'll give us a mighty good preach; you'll feel quite another sort better when you git back," pleaded the older sister.

"I don't want to feel better." But, with vexing inconsistency, Polly added, "Hit would only make me feel a heap worse to think how Asbury set there last year, lookin' so pleasin' with two of the babies on his lap. Hit ain't no use a-wearyin' me to go to your house, neither; if you-alls was like you was when him an' me used to be thar together 'twould only make me sense my loneliness the harder; an' if I seed you-alls still an' sorter solemn, I'd feel like I was spoilin' everybody's satisfaction. I ain't fit for nothin' but stayin' by my lone self an' mournin' for my pore husband."

"Seems like hit's hard to do anything for you, but, honey, why can't the children come an' have a good time with their cousins? They're too little to know any reason for bein' kep' away," pleaded the aunt.

"Hit's time they knowed that they've lost the best father that ever drawed breath, an' they ain't a-goin' up thar to be a-rompin' an' tearin' around when I'm at home a-grievin' for him," dolefully insisted the mourner.

"Polly Smedley!" indignantly cried Mrs. Fiscus, "you plumb outdo me; you shorely lost a good husband, an' I lost a brother that I loved like as if he'd been borned one to me; but you hadn't orter try to keep them babies in mind of hit, an' now I'll just tell you that you show mighty little respect to a man that war so proud of your looks an' give you such fine dressin', when you go around lookin' so slummicky. Hit's a disgrace to the name o' Smedley to go around with your ha'r hangin' down, an' your shoes unlaced, an' the buttons half off'n yer dress. You'd better cut off your ha'r an' put tar on your head like a Digger Injun; you wouldn't look no worse. An' the way you treat Asbury's childern 's the talk of the whole settle*ment*. If Lem Scott wasn't a-seein' that they was treated half white, I'd be bound to take 'em away from you."

"Oh, yes; he's always makin' himself right numerous, an' I ain't a-thankin' him for hit. He had the imperdence to fetch a turkey over hyar last week and ax me to cook it for dinner to-day, seein' I was bent to stay to home. You'd think he owned me an' the young ones, the orderly way he talks to me," retorted Polly; "that thar's one reason I dassent fix myself up half decent, for fear of folks passin' remarks on him stayin' hyar so much an' nussin' the childern on his lap. No matter who's in the house a-lookin' on, if I take up a bucket to go to the spring he stumbles over his big feet to ketch it out of my hand an' git it hisself. Mrs. Hill she's been a-tellin' me that the boys around hyar's jest runnin' him high about me. I often wish in my heart that I could git plumb out'n sight 'n' hearin'. A pore widder woman, that ain't a-keerin' whether she ever sees any man as long as she lives, can't be let alone! Them no-account bachelors in the settle*ment*, every last one has some triflin' excuse to stop at the door as they go to the post-office or to the ferry. Oh, you don't know nothin' about hit, sister Emmeline; 'pears like a married woman's got her husband to protect her, an' a girl's father an' brothers won't stand no foolishness about her, but thar ain't nobody to look out for a widder's good name."

Mrs. Fiscus swallowed a sob; she did not feel that too much sympathy was wholesome for her sister. "You musn't think I don't feel for you, honey, nor that Matt wouldn't make hit lively for anybody that'd pass slighty remarks about you; but hit's bad for you an' for the babies to nuss your trouble like you do. Hit would interrupt pore Asbury powerfully to know how you keep takin' on about him. Now, won't you jest agree to come to dinner, if you won't go to preachin'? I never seed as fat a turkey as we've killed, an' I've made some sliced sweet-petater pies on purpose for you. The childern's just wild for Aunt Polly an' the little cousins to be thar." She stopped; the hardening of Polly's face showed how useless was her reiterated appeal. "I wouldn't do you thataway," she said, reproachfully. She rose, kissing the little ones good-by, and Mrs. Smedley said, "I'm mighty sorry I can't please you, but come back soon."

"I'm tollable busy; I don't think you'll see me agin this year," said Emmeline. "You needn't disfurnish yourself to come out with me," and as she rode away she said, in vexed frustration, "She always was as hard-headed as a mule."

The children, who were disappointed at the brevity of their aunt's visit, cried after her, and their mother sent them out to gather acorns for a pet pig; then she walked up to the small looking-glass on the mantelpiece and gazed at her reflection. "I do shorely look slouchy," she admitted, beginning to brush out her abundant light hair, "an' I allow hit don't do pore Asbury no good to go so sloven. I used to think a heap of my clothes, but thar ain't nobody a-keerin' how I fix myself now. Emmeline went off right mad, an' she's been mighty good to me. I 'most wish I'd give in to her an' not hurt her feelin's. Asbury said he never see anybody so hard to make back down as me. Well, hit's too late now."

The next morning Mrs. Smedley saw, with rising anger, Lem Scott driving up to the gate with his roan colts and new buggy.

He met an ungracious hostess. "Lem Scott," she demanded, "didn't I tell you I wouldn't go nary single step to preachin' or to dinner to-day?"

"You better wait till I'm axin' you, Polly Smedley," he answered, in unexpected wrath. "I ain't no more anxious to take you than you are to go. I've heerd this mornin' from ole Mrs. Hill how you've been noratin' around this settle*ment* that I've been pushin' myself in whar my company wasn't wanted. I have been a-comin' hyar a heap, but 't wa'n't on your account. Asbury Smedley an' me was double cousins, an' his mammy raised me; us two was jest like brothers, an' I ax you now, flat-footed, if I wasn't a-comin' hyar as reg'lar before he died as I have since? Arter he was gone an' you was in a manner distracted, I didn't think hit was safe to leave you alone with them thar babies for fear you'd do somethin' desperate, so I've been doin' chores an' fetchin' an' carryin' for you like a nigger, an' I'll tell you the reason why. You recollect last Thanksgivin' that me an' Asbury stayed out to the barn a-talkin' a long time, an' you had to send out for us three times before we came in to dinner, an' you got right mad about hit. Well, he had somethin' onto his mind; you know Tom Hinkle had just died, an' his wife was so interrupted her folks thought she was goin' plumb crazy; an' I reckon Asbury must have had a warnin', bekase he said he knowed if the like was to happen to him you'd be just as bad off, an' he made me promise him solemn to hover the little fellers an' look arter you if it was needin'; an' hit was only the next week that his break-block broke an' his team run off'n the grade."

"Oh, Cousin Lem!" cried Polly, tears streaming down her face, "why didn't you never tell me that thar before?"

"Bekase I was afeerd of harryin' up your feelin's," he said, adding contemptuously, "I didn't never conceit that you'd think you'd orter have to make a plumb scarecrow out'n yourself to keep me from gettin' stuck arter you. I never dreamed of such as that a-comin' in your head when you was a-takin' on thataway, or I wouldn't have made myself so sufficious. But now I'm a-goin' to take these hyar little folks to preachin' this mornin'. Thar's some kind of performance for the Sunday-school to git off, an' they're a-goin' to be thar; and when hit's out, I'm a-goin' to take 'em to their Uncle Matt's to eat a turkey dinner; you can stay hyar all day an' hate yourself an' go hungry if hit suits you," said the irate Scott.

Polly was thunderstruck; her husband's near kinsman had heretofore been the gentlest of servitors. "Oh, Lem," she besought, "don't be so mad at me; I didn't go to mistreat you, an' you don't know what a heap of things that triflin' Mrs. Hill told me. Won't you forgive me?"

"Git out the clothes for them thar young ones; if you won't git 'em ready, I will," was the irrelevant reply.

With trembling fingers, Polly got out the small garments and arrayed the quartet, her visitor assisting in the process.

"Pretty decent-lookin' little chaps, but if I hadn't bought the goods an' your sister made 'em up, what show would they've had for goin' out amongst folks to-day?" he said, gruffly.

Mrs. Smedley had meekly yielded to his will, and walked out, still shedding penitential tears, to see him depart with the happy flock.

"I'm sorry to disfurnish you so much, but my team's tolerable gay, an' you'll have to pass the babies up to me after I git in," he said, beginning to unfasten the hitching-strap. Then he stopped. "Cousin Polly," he remarked, with dignity, "I am a-goin' to send these hyar youngsters home to you by Matt Fiscus. I reckon hit was foolish to git so mad at you, but I think you played hit mighty low down when you passed them thar slighty remarks about me to that thar long-tongued Hill woman; if you'd only named hit to me that you'd like less of my company, I'd have taken hit well an' kind, for I been aimin' to go to Salmon River the last ten months, an' only stayed bekase I allowed you was a-needin' my help. I'm fixin' to start next week, so you won't be troubled with the sight of me for many a day. If I strike it rich in the mines, I don't never allow to come back hyar. I hope you'll have luck." She held out a tremulous hand, too choked with sobs to speak, but he turned to untie his horses, and, stepping into the buggy, received the children from her, one by one. "Well," he said, disposing them comfortably, "so long," and rapidly drove away.

She leaned against the rude gate-post, pierced by the sense of ingratitude and indelicacy. "He had a right to come down on me thataway; hit was powerful indecent of me to put hit up that he was tryin' to make love to me, when he was jest a-feelin' that his honor was out to pore Asbury to see that me an' the childern didn't lack for nothin'. He knowed that his cousin never liked me to wrench myself packin' water an' wood, an' he tried to do me like a sister. When Asbury had the typhoid fever three year ago, Lem stayed by him night an' day an' wouldn't let me w'ar myself out nussin' him. Oh, what a plumb fool I've been makin' myself! Thar ain't no other woman on the creek got a door-yard fence, an' Lem split every single one of them thar oak palin's out hisself. He planted that thar orchard, he built that thar back gallery, he put in my crop, he done every blessed thing jest bekase I been his double cousin by marriage, an' he was always so wrapped up in his kinfolks; an' to think I had the meanness, the low-downness, to open my mouth about'n him to that old meddlesome somebody! She made me so mad a-tryin' to run me about him that I don't rightly know what-like remarks I passed, but they was no-account enough to drive the best friend I ever had out'n the State. Oh, whatever'll me an' them thar pore orphant babies do without him this endurin' winter? Matt's folks is three mild away, an' I sha'n't have no protector but a strange man, an' I always did mistrust a hirelin'. I'll have to b'ar that, but hit just kills me with shame for him to go off with a hardness toward me. However could I have been so forsaken as to give him such a in*sult!* 'Pears like the Lord shorely has left me to undo myself, but I know in reason He wouldn't have gone back on me only for my backslidin' like I done. Hit was only a year ago last August that Asbury an' me jined the church at the Big Creek camp-meetin', but since he died I've been a-feelin' like I didn't have no use for religion. I been too hard-headed to go to preachin' since the funeral, an' this hyar fresh trouble has come out of hit."

She gazed off into the distance where the Sierras were faintly outlined, and murmured wearily: "Oh, I wish I knowed what I'd orter do!"

A sudden inspiration flushed her worn cheek. "I'm a-goin' to that thar preachin'; I'll foot hit every step of that thar four mild if no team don't catch up to me; I feel humble enough to stan' up thar before the face an' eyes of the whole settlement an' say I've been makin' crooked paths for myself a whole year, an' I want to git back into the straight and narrer road ag'in; an', what's more, I'm a-goin' to ask Lem Scott to forgive me, if thar's fifty of 'em to hear me an' make light of hit. I'll git down on my knees if nothin' else won't do him. If he's dead bent to go, he sha'n't feel that I run him out'n the community."

She went in and made a careful but hurried toilet, glancing into the disfiguring little mirror to say with scorn, "You holler-eyed, peaked-faced thing, you look like you'd be enticin' enough for all the bachelors in the settle*ment* to be stuck arter! I allow nary single one ever came hyar only for friendliness."

She set out with undue speed; she was unused to walking, and her new shoes were stiff, but she made her first mile gallantly; the second, the sun shining out of the fleckless November sky of the year of our Lord 1860 seemed to oppress her with summer heat; she was fain to go more slowly, and repeatedly to sit on a stump to rest. She unconsciously noted an occasional wild rose blooming by the roadside, a small rabbit scuttling into the privacy of the brush fence, a little owl winking solemnly at her, a hare fleeing before her with long leaps. She found more frequent necessity to pause for breath as she toiled along on the third mile, and she began her fourth with blistered feet and lessening strength.

"I've got powerful weak dumpin' around the house an' goin' without half'n my meals; I'm afeered I can't make hit," she said, wearily; then she fiercely chided herself. "You've got to git thar, Polly Smedley, if you ever lay eyes onto Lem Scott. You was right up an' a-comin' when you footed hit over to Mrs. Hill's to tell her you didn't go nary cent on havin' him make himself sufficious round the ranch; you've got to make hit, if you crawl on your hands and knees."

In the entireness of her self-surrender she urged her trembling limbs onward, panting and almost falling from exhaustion, till the goal was almost won. Then, overcome by thirst and the beating of her heart, she dropped by the wayside. The feverishness of her body gave way to chilliness, and she dragged herself up and made her way feebly to the open door of the school-house where the services were held. As she held by the casing to steady herself every head turned toward her, and her youngest child, sitting on Lem Scott's knee, cried out, "Mamma!" Mrs. Fiscus, alarmed at her sister's haggard face, rushed to her, shrilly whispering, "For the Lord's sake, Polly, tell me what's happened!"

"Nothin'," returned Mrs. Smedley, faintly, "only I allowed I'd better come to preachin' arter all."

She sank into one of the rough seats and leaned on the desk in front. The Presiding Elder had paused at the slight confusion, but he now looked at her with a benignant face and resumed his discourse. The late comer listened to his gracious words without comprehending them, the air grew close around her, the people in front of her seemed to sway to and fro, the room turned dark as night, her head dropped on the desk before her.

When she opened her eyes again she lay on a blanket outdoors, water was dripping on her face, and Emmeline was sobbing at her side. "Do you feel better, Cousin Polly?" said Lem Scott, bending over her.

She put up her hand to him. "I'll feel a heap better if you'll say you forgive me; I footed hit all the way to ax you that, an' to git my name back on the church book agin."

"It has never been taken off, Sister Smedley," interposed the friendly voice of the Elder; "we have always felt that when the bitterness of your sorrow had given way, you would come back to your Father's house."

Lem Scott had clasped the small, cold hand in his, and he now answered: "I allow I'll have to, Cousin Polly, but hit gits me to think you'd be so contrairey as to in a manner kill yourself before you'd ride with me."

"But I want to ride with you, Cousin Lem; I want you to carry me over to Matt's to that thar dinner; an' if you've got any bit of good feelin' for your Cousin Asbury's widder an' orphants you won't leave us to go off to Salmon River."

"Emmeline," said Lem Scott, "I reckon you better take the little chaps in your wagon. Polly's right wearied out, an' she'd orter have plenty of room."

As the family and the guests drove homeward to the Thanksgiving dinner with anticipative smiles, Mrs. Fiscus looked at the flashing wheels of the new buggy as it led the procession and said, "Matt, I b'leeve thar is somethin' between him an' Polly arter all."

The Kingdom, the Power, and the Glory[1]

By Lyman Abbott

Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.—Matthew vi., 13.

That is, the everlasting kingdom, the eternal kingdom, the glory that will not fade. Finally, we say Amen—let it be so—we are glad of it.

How many Americans believe this? How many in this congregation believe it? We believe in the Republic; in the power of the common people; in the glory of America; but how much, as expressed by our lives, do we believe that the kingdom is God's, and the power is God's, and the glory is God's?

God's is the kingdom. There is one kingdom. Life is not made up of fragments; it is not heterogeneous. It does sometimes seem so; but it is not so. The authority in life does not consist of a great quantity of independent wills; there is one kingdom; life is one. We used to think there were at least three kingdoms—a mineral kingdom, a vegetable kingdom, and an animal kingdom; and then we set man off by himself as a sort of fourth kingdom. But science long since has abandoned these definite discriminations. To-day we know that the mineral and vegetable and animal and human kingdoms are all one kingdom. You cannot draw sharply the line between the animal and the human, nor between the vegetable and the animal, nor yet between the mineral and the vegetable; there is one great kingdom—organic and inorganic. One—not three.

This great kingdom starts from one birthplace. The last word of science is evolution. Religious people are afraid of it. I do not see why. The message of evolution is a profoundly religious message. There is nothing since the Copernican system of astronomy was unfolded to the world that has so much to say of the unity of life, and, therefore, the unity of God. All life starts from one germ, and the greatest man, with towering intellect and ardent love and noble aspiration, comes from the same monad as the blade of grass he treads beneath his feet. There is one cradle of the whole universe; it all starts from one beginning. And the process of life is one. There are not half a dozen looms in which half a dozen different patterns are being woven; there is only one loom. There are many threads, but they are all brought to one loom, and out of its interweaving there is to be one pattern. Comparative physiology has shown that the life in man and the life in animal are the same; and comparative biology has shown that the life in man and in plant and in animal are the same. The birth of life is the same, the processes of life are the same; and the goal is the same. The final end of all the processes, beginning with the lowest monad and going through all the successive stages, reaches forward to man—or, rather, to a community and society of men, a brotherhood of man, bound together by love, by a common reverence for a common ideal, by a common loyalty to one God. The Semitic word for God means goal. That is what God is; he is the goal of the universal life. There are not three kingdoms—there is one kingdom; there are not three birthplaces—there is one birthplace; there are not three processes of life—there is one process of life; and there are not three goals—there is one goal. God is the birth, God is the process, God is the goal.

And God's is the power. Every now and then I get a letter from some one who says, since God is omnipotent, why does not he make the world virtuous by a stroke? What do you mean by omnipotent? The metaphysicians mean by omnipotent that God is able to do everything, that he can make two and two five, that he can make it right to violate a law of righteousness, that he can violate the inherent and essential laws of life. Metaphysicians may mean that, but the Bible does not mean that. That is not omnipotence. Omnipotence is this: that all the powers of the universe are, in the last analysis, powers of God. It is not that there are no impossibilities, no conceivable contradictions; it is not that God can set aside the moral laws. He would cease to be God if he did. It is impossible for God to lie, says one of the Apostles. Why? Because if he lied he would cease to be God. It is righteousness that makes God. It is not wisdom, it is not power; it is righteousness; and if you could conceive of God as violating the law of righteousness, he would cease to be God. Nay, omnipotence does not mean that there is some one somewhere who can set aside all laws of nature and order. John Stuart Mill has well said that if God were omnipotent in the metaphysical sense of the term, he could not exercise skill, because skill consists in overcoming obstacles by the use of means; and if there are no difficulties for God to overcome, do you not see that there cannot be any skill in overcoming them?. That is not what the Bible means by omnipotence. Omnipotence means this: that all forces are one force; that as all processes are one process, so all powers are one power.

We know that now in nature. We can understand that there are not forces in nature; there is only one great force. That has been scientifically demonstrated. Light and heat and electricity are only forms of the one great force. But it is as true in the moral realm as in the natural realm. Herbert Spencer, looking out on the natural realm, says we are in the midst of one infinite and eternal energy. Why? Because, as I said a moment ago, this universe is a *uni*verse. There is a unity as truly in the moral realm as in the material realm. There is a unity in history. If not, a science of history would be impossible, and history would be simply a collection of accidental events. There is a unity in society. If not, there would be no possible political economy, for political economy consists in finding the unity that exists. There are laws of industry, of honesty, of social and industrial and political life. They are. We do not make them. This unity of history, of social organization, of political movement, is itself the demonstration of the one great power carrying through history to its final development. The powers are not in the king. When Sennacherib came with his host to beleaguer Jerusalem, and scoffed at Israel's God, and said, Can your God save you? have the gods of any of the other nations saved them? one prophet replied, God shall put a hook in your nose, and a bridle in your mouth, and lead you back the way you came. The power is not in the individual king. We know that. But we think it is in the masses. No! There is no more power in the masses than there is in the individual; and if you are to look at life from the human point of view, there is far more sense in thinking that power resides in an aristocracy than in an unwashed democracy. The power is in God, and the only advantage that democracy has over monarchy is this: that God is in the hearts of all his children, and we find his word by comparing their varied interpretations better than by getting one pope, one bishop, or one king to interpret the voice for us.

The power of a nation does not lie in the things it possesses. It is not strong because it is rich, or cultured, or highly organized, or has religious institutions. What a great nation this is! What boundless territory we possess! What gold, and silver, and wealth! What public buildings! What wheat-fields! What miles and miles of railroad! How splendidly we are organized! How magnificently equipped! What a magnificent set of fortifications we are going to have, by and by, along our Atlantic coast! What a beautiful white fleet we have to look at, now and then! What colleges we possess! What a public-school system! What academies! What institutions of learning! What literature! What authors! What religious institutions have we! What rituals! What meeting-houses! What creeds, sound and orthodox—at least that shall save us! Have you never read history? Will great material wealth make a nation? Ask Babylon. Will schools and philosophies make a nation? Ask Greece. Will highly organized society and a great army make a nation? Ask Rome. Will religious institutions, with a ritual and a creed that have come straight from heaven, make a nation? Ask Judea. No! no! These things do not make a nation great. They do not give it power. The power is in God, and, save as the nation gets its hold on God, and its life from God, and its power in God, it is a weak, insufficient, incapable thing, no matter how many miles of railroad it has, no matter how complete its organization, no matter how fine its culture—nay, no matter how orthodox its religious institutions. Neither is a nation great by virtue of the form of its political institutions. It is not great because it has a great king. It is not great because it has a cultured aristocracy. It is not great because it is a great democracy. The form of organization does not make the nation great; and transferring superstitious reverence for the divinity that doth hedge about the king into superstitious reverence that doth hedge about the masses of the people is no exchange for the better. The State! says the Bourbon king—I am the State: and history answers with the French Revolution. The State! say the people, educated in the school of Voltairism—we are the State; power comes from the people; authority of the government rests on the consent of the governed; we are the strong and the mighty: and history answers with Napoleon Bonaparte. The State! says Napoleon Bonaparte—I am the State; God is on the side of the strongest battalions: and history answers with Waterloo. A nation is not great by what it possesses, and it is not great by the form of its organization; it is great only as it lays hold on God's power, for all power belongeth unto God. It is not rich in any other way. There is no possible way by which the community can get lasting riches, riches that endure, except by understanding the divine laws and complying with them. We ought to know that in this country. We said to ourselves—at least one-half of our nation said to itself—we will have a leisure class; we will not degrade ourselves by manual labor; we will put the drudgery on the black man, and that will give us wealth; we will put the drudgery on the black man, and that will release us to cultivate ourselves and develop a literary and cultured aristocracy. It was a very fine scheme, except that it left God out of account; and after a hundred years or so had gone by, what was the result? The South burned and blackened and bankrupt. Where was its wealth? And the South without a public-school system, with scarcely a college or a university worthy of the name, without authors or literature; not that the South was worse than the North, not that it was incapable of culture or incapable of wealth, but because it had forgotten that there is a God in the world and power comes from him. You cannot organize an industrial system on any hypothesis that leaves God out of account. Go to; we will make an industrial system on the basis of selfishness; we will say to the capitalist, get your labor in the cheapest market, pay as little wages as you can, and get as much work as you can; and then we will say to the laborer, do as little as you can, and get as much as you can; and if you put these two selfishnesses in conflict—this capitalist who says, I will give only what I must and will get what I can, and this laborer who says, I will give only what I must and will get what I can—these two in conflict with each other will balance each other, like the centripetal and the centrifugal forces, and they will make order. This science! No! Any system founded on selfishness is an unscientific system; for the foundation of social science is love, and there is no way in which men can live peacefully, and happily, and together, except on the basis of mutual respect and mutual love. Let us, then, sweep the present system all away and build up a socialistic system. Let us have the State own the factories, the railroads, and the telegraphs, and operate them all: what then? If we leave the spirit of selfishness in the human heart, we shall but have a political boss substituted for a factory boss, and I would like to know which is the worst of the two. No, no; an industrial system that is going to make permanent and enduring wealth will be founded on exactly the contradictory principle—the desire on the part of the owner to give the greatest wages he can and carry on successfully the business, and the desire on the part of the workman to give the best work he can and live prosperously. It is in mutual service, not in mutual selfishness, an industrial order is to be built up. The foundation of political organization, the foundation of industrial organization, is, in the last analysis, this: that there are laws of God in the universe and we must know them and understand them.

---

[1] Sermon preached at Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., Sunday morning, October 25, 1896. Reported stenographically by Henry Winans, and revised by the author.

The secret power in the nation is God, and the secret power in the individual in the nation is God. Tell me who have been what we call statesmen, the real statesmen, in history? Who have been the men in England that have left a mark on English life? Richard the Lion-Hearted? the Stuarts? the Georges? Nobody thinks that. Who then? Alfred the Great, with his heart of love for humanity, and his heart of reverence for God. Cromwell, with his strong faith in the power of an Almighty, and his endeavor to interpret the will of the Almighty. Queen Victoria, illustrating in half a century the virtues of a pure and noble womanhood. The great men and women of England have been the pure, the true, the patriotic, the godly men and women of England. In America who have been the real powers, the enduring powers—not the powers for a day, or a week, or a month, or a year, but the men who really have shaped the course of the nation? Aaron Burr? Little Douglas? Cass? Polk? Have they even been the men who, in the beginning of their life, did undertake to interpret divine law, and then, called off by ambition, or by public sentiment, which they could not resist, abandoned principle for expediency? Even Clay and Webster have left no such influence on human history here in America as Lincoln and Sumner and Seward and Chase. It is the men who try to see what God meant, and try to work with God, who have been the men of power in American life. And in literature, and in teaching, the secret of power is the same. Consider what is the difference between what we call a classic literature and what is not a classic. What is not a classic plays on the surface of life, portrays that which any one may see if he has an observing eye, is what we call realistic; the classic goes down into human hearts and sees the divine principles in human life, and interprets those so that men can understand them. "Adam Bede" will live longer than "Middlemarch." Byron and Pope are already forgotten; but Shakespeare with his lessons against ambition and jealousy, and Browning with his lesson of God and God's love in humanity, and Wordsworth with his message of God in the world of nature—these men will never be forgotten, because they have revealed the power of God, and made him a power in human hearts.

"Thine is the kingdom, and thine is the power, and thine is the glory." All the glory of human life is God's glory, for the end of all life is the manifestation of God. All the varied phenomena of nature, and of human nature, and of history, and of science, are but the revelations of the great power, the great wisdom, the great beneficence that lies back of all and shines through all. And, therefore, all the varied glory of life is but a reflection of this divine glory. All art is borrowed from nature—that is, from God. Into the forest went the Greek and got his Corinthian pillar and his Doric pillar. Into the forest went the later artist and got his pointed arch and all the glories of Gothic architecture. It is from nature, that is, from God, the artist gets all his color, imitating what God has already wrought in the clouds; and when he paints, he paints only to give us the vision of what God has painted before in the world of nature, or to make clear what God is doing in human hearts and lives. Literature is glorious only as it interprets the divine in humanity, and life is glorious only and because there is God in it. It is glorious to write a great poem, is it not? But it is far more glorious to live a poem. It is glorious to write the history of a noble hero, but it is a great deal more glorious to have been the hero. It is glorious to tell the story of a Florence Nightingale, but it is a great deal more glorious to have been Florence Nightingale. It is glorious to tell the story, spun out of the imagination, of some splendid achievement, but it is far more glorious to have achieved it; because God shows himself in life even more than he shows himself in thought about life.

The Religious World

Mr. Moody's Meetings

The great meetings held in New York under the leadership of Mr. Moody have continued. The places of meeting are thronged at every service, and overflow meetings have had to be arranged for. An audience of four thousand people is no unusual sight, and it is now quite evident that if there were larger audience-rooms they, too, would be crowded. As perhaps is to be expected, and possibly as is desirable, the greater number of those who attend are already Christians, but if they can be fired with something of Mr. Moody's enthusiasm the work will reach thousands who never hear the sound of his voice. The sermons which Mr. Moody preaches are, many of them, familiar to those who have heard him in the past, but they are fresh and powerful because behind them is a living man whose spirit is constantly open to the Spirit of God. Some of his interpretations of Scripture sound very strange in these times, when, for instance, he says that if the story of Jonah being swallowed by the whale is not literally received, then Christ himself goes. Of course Mr. Moody is entitled to his own opinion, but the fact is that multitudes give to that incident a figurative interpretation, and cling with all the enthusiasm of their natures to the Saviour Christ. As we have said before, the place of Jesus Christ in this world is not affected by any theories of Biblical interpretation. He is a power apart from all theories, new or old, concerning the Bible. But Mr. Moody is a man of God, and such statements are not regarded as they would be if made by other men.

Dr. Storrs's Jubilee Continued

The services in recognition of the jubilee of the Rev. Richard S. Storrs, D.D., were continued according to the programme previously announced. The Manhattan Association gave the distinguished preacher a dinner in the parlors of the Clinton Avenue Congregational Church, Brooklyn. About two hundred members and guests were present. Dr. T. B. McLeod presided. The chief address of the evening was delivered by the Rev. A. J. Lyman, D.D., who, in the name of the Association, presented Dr. Storrs with a beautiful loving-cup. The address was marked by the singular felicity which usually characterizes the utterances of Dr. Lyman. The response of Dr. Storrs was, of course, the event of the evening. It was full of tenderness and bright with gracious reminiscence. Other speakers were President Patton, of Princeton, Dr. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, Dr. Charles R. Baker, representing the Episcopal churches of Brooklyn, Dr. Humpstone, representing the Baptists, Dr. A. S. Hunt, representing the Methodists. On the following evening the Hamilton Club of Brooklyn tendered Dr. Storrs a dinner, and congratulatory addresses were delivered. But the chief event of all the week was the reception and celebration in the Church of the Pilgrims on Thursday evening, at which time Dr. Storrs was presented with a check for $5,000, and in addition informed that $20,000 had been subscribed for needed improvements in the church. Mr. George P. Stockwell presided at the evening celebration. Addresses were delivered by the Revs. Charles Cuthbert Hall, D.D., of Brooklyn, John Hall, D.D., of New York, Professor George P. Fisher, D.D., of New Haven, and R. R. Meredith, D.D., of Brooklyn. The address of Mr. Joseph E. Brown, who spoke in behalf of the congregation, was singularly comprehensive and beautiful. The address of Dr. Storrs in reply was such as only he could deliver on such an occasion. The afternoon reception was largely attended. The services of Sunday, the 22d, were chiefly devoted to the young people, while on Monday the Congregational Club of Brooklyn tendered to Dr. Storrs a reception. As we go to press the great Citizens' Meeting is being held in the Academy of Music. Thus ends one of the most notable events of the kind in recent years. Others have remained as long, but no other clergyman, equally prominent, has been so long in so prominent a field of Christian service.

Meeting of the Interseminary Missionary Alliance

The American Interseminary Alliance is the outcome of a movement which originated among the students of Princeton Theological Seminary in the year 1879. A circular-letter was issued urging the various seminaries "to consider the establishment of some permanent system of interseminary correspondence on the subject of missions." It resulted in the calling together of delegates from the various seminaries in convention. An annual National Convention has been held ever since in various cities, East and West, to consider City, Home, and Foreign Missions, and to confer in regard to plans looking toward a deeper spiritual and missionary life in our seminaries. The seventeenth Convention has just been held (November 12–15), in the Divinity School of the University of Chicago. Seventy-five accredited delegates were in attendance, representing seminaries from Andover, Mass., to Omaha, Neb., with an aggregate number of students numbering about fifteen hundred. About three hundred were in attendance from the seminaries in Chicago. The address of welcome was given by President Harper, of the University, who emphasized the necessity of theological students coming together to consider, "hand to hand, eye to eye, soul to soul," their various and common problems relating to the great missionary work of the Church. He was followed by Dr. C. J. Little, President of Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, Ill., on "The Spirit of Christianity Essentially Missionary." "We assent to this with our intellects," he said, "but do not grasp it and believe it with our hearts;" and then proceeded to show that if our Christianity is anything it is missionary. Dr. J. L. Withrow spoke on "What should be the Attitude of the Ministry toward Missions." The negative side was taken up by the Rev. H. D. Wiard, Western Secretary of the Congregational Home Missionary Society, who spoke on "What is the Present Attitude of the Ministry toward Missions?" He declared that a large number are indifferent to this cause. Dr. Graham Taylor urged the necessity for accurate, scientific knowledge of the city field, enforcing his points by showing map after map illustrating the density, poverty, nationality, etc., of the people in the most crowded parts of Chicago and other cities. Two things, he said, are needed in the "missionary administration of a city: (1) comity in the suburbs; and (2) vast co-operation." Mr. Wiard also spoke on the "Neglected Fields of the West." The Rev. Harlan P. Beach and Dr. A. T. Pierson brought before the students the actual work of the foreign field, what would be expected of them as missionaries, and the claims of the heathen lands upon their life. At a conference conducted by Mr. H. W. Luce the fact was emphasized that the real need is a deeper spiritual life in the individual student; and this in turn led up to the subjects of the addresses of the Rev. R. A. Torrey and the Rev. Daniel Shepardson: "In the presence of God—Prayer;" "In the Presence of His Word—Devotional Personal Bible Study." The hearts of all the students were deeply moved by the address of Dr. J. T. Gracey, of India, on "The Broader View of Missions." His thought was that God's hand is on his world, moving to a sure conclusion; yet it was put in such a way as to arouse the young men to action, because, he said, "though God is doing it, he must do it through men." The Convention was one of the strongest and most spiritual held in years. In our own land there seems to be a deepening missionary spirit in our seminaries; the same is true in England; while it is significant that this year the theological students of England and America, unknown to each other, have decided to send one of their number through the seminaries to confer with faculties and students about the missionary life of the seminaries, and to bind the seminaries closer together in their one great common missionary work.

Bishop Satterlee and the Czar

The New York "Tribune" of November 18 contained an extremely interesting account of a visit paid by Bishop Satterlee, of Washington, to the Czar of Russia. The mission was undertaken at the request of various religious bodies to present to the Czar a petition imploring his interposition on the part of the persecuted Armenians. Nothing was publicly said concerning the visit until it had been made. Bishop Satterlee carried with him a petition, to which were appended the signatures of eighty Bishops of the Episcopal Church of the United States, twenty-two Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Secretaries of the American Board for Foreign Missions, and the Secretaries of various other missionary organizations In addition were the names of nearly if not quite all the Bishops of the Church of England and the Colonial Bishops, the deans of cathedrals, doctors and professors in universities, and, really, representatives of nearly all the religious organizations of Great Britain. Bishop Satterlee was courteously received by the Czar and Czarina on the 5th of August, and by the mother of the Czar on August 7. He was allowed to explain fully the object of his visit, and he says that he came home with the conviction that God himself had inspired and blessed the memorial, whatever its results may be. No response was made to it at the time, and no promise was given. It seems impossible, however, that such a mission should be entirely without effect. Whether release comes by way of England or by way of Russia is of comparatively little importance, but the whole Christian world ought to continue the agitation until this awful blot upon the civilization of the nineteenth century is forever removed.

The Orthodoxy of Bishop Vincent

One of the most amusing and absurd of all the attempts to fix opprobrium on a distinguished man because of fancied heresy is that which has recently been made on Bishop John H. Vincent, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The papers which seem to have been chiefly concerned in the matter are the "Presbyterian Banner," of Pittsburg, and the "Presbyterian," of Philadelphia. It seems that an unnamed Southern Presbyterian clergyman charges that Bishop Vincent said that the divinity of Christ is not an essential article of the Christian faith. When it was brought to his attention, Bishop Vincent telegraphed as follows: "The quotation sent is a gross misrepresentation. It could scarcely more perfectly misrepresent what I said." The matter has been followed up by editorials in the "Presbyterian Banner," which concludes that "the cumulative testimony which it presents leaves Bishop Vincent and those who rush so speedily to his defense in a sorry plight." Well, perhaps it does, but we have read the "evidence" in the 'Banner," and confess that it does not seem to us at all to have the force it is supposed to have. Nothing is easier than for one, two, or a dozen persons who are specially alert for heresy to put into the mouths of public speakers meanings which do not belong to their words and which they never intended to give them. We have no brief for the defense of Bishop Vincent. He is abundantly able to take care of himself. The probability is that, simply because at one time he was a popular preacher at Harvard, certain persons began to suspect him of leanings toward Unitarianism; then his utterances were listened to with suspicion rather than sympathy. The next step was easy to take; his words were twisted and given meanings which he never intended them to have. Certainly when he makes the disclaimer which he has made he is entitled to belief. But, after all, is anything more absurd! The man who has done as much as almost any man of his time for the advancement of evangelical Christianity is suspected of heresy because of a chance remark, the meaning of which he utterly disclaims. A stronger attack than that would be required to shake the faith of the American people in the man who has given such a strong impetus to the reverent study of the Bible, and who has made Chautauqua a center of world-wide evangelical Christian influence.

The New Bishop of London

The translation of Dr. Temple from the post of Bishop of London to the Archbishopric of Canterbury has been followed by the appointment of Bishop Crichton, of Peterborough, to the See of London. It was generally believed that the Bishop of Peterborough would be made Archbishop, the great age of Dr. Temple making his choice improbable; and it is now believed that if his life is spared the new Bishop of London will in time become the Archbishop of Canterbury. The "Guardian" tells us that formerly the Bishop of London was "a simple suffragan of Canterbury," but that now the circumstances are different. The chief problems which concern the Church of England—namely, "the reconciliation of liberty and law, the co-existence of widely divergent opinions on questions of the first moment, the relation of the congregational and parochial systems, and, still more, the recovery of the huge population which has drifted away from the Church or has grown up outside of it—press for solution in London as nowhere else in the Kingdom." It is evident that a man of large experience, broad views, and resolute will is required for this distinguished position. The Bishop of Peterborough has proved himself to possess great gifts, and his appointment as the successor of Dr. Temple is welcomed on all sides. That he is a broad-minded man is proved by the fraternal message which he sent to the Congregational Union of England and Wales at its late meeting in Leicester, while his scholarship is abundantly proven by the many works which he has published.

The New Rector of the Catholic University

The Rev. Thomas J. Conaty, D.D., of the Church of the Sacred Heart, Worcester, Mass., has been chosen to succeed Bishop Keane as Rector of the Catholic University at Washington. Dr. Conaty belongs to the conservative party in the Roman Church, but is well known as a friend of Bishop Keane. He is a strong temperance man, and has frequently lectured on this subject before the country, He is between forty and fifty years of age, and was educated at the Jesuit College of the Holy Cross at Worcester. For several years he has been President of the Catholic Summer School at Plattsburg, N. Y. He is an earnest friend of the parochial school system, and is said to have been the choice both of Cardinal Satolli and of Archbishop Corrigan. He succeeds to the position at a difficult time, and one which will require all the courage and ability which he is supposed to possess. It would not be easy, under existing circumstances, for any man to take up the work of Bishop Keane.

Installation of Dr. Savage

The Rev. Minot J. Savage, D.D., late of Boston, was installed pastor of the Church of the Messiah (Unitarian) on Sunday, November 22. We noticed at length the call of Dr. Savage to this pulpit a few weeks ago. The services at his installation were conducted by the Revs. S. H. Camp, S. A. Eliot, M. St. C. Wright, J. W. Chadwick, and E. C. Bolles, D.D. The sermon was preached by the Rev. E. E. Hale, D.D., of Boston, while the prayer of installation was offered by Dr. Collyer, the senior pastor of the church. Dr. Savage had a large following in Boston, and will be sure to have one equally large in New York.

A Mission to the Jews

The Brooklyn Christian Mission to the Jews, an interdenominational organization, has for its President T. B. McLeod, D.D.; its Vice-President, Charles Cuthbert Hall, D.D.; its missionary, the Rev. B. A. M. Shapiro. It has in addition eight or ten lecturers. It was started in the summer of 1892. It is said that the Jewish population of Brooklyn numbers about 70,000. The soul of the work is Mr. Shapiro. A converted Jew himself, he has consecrated his energies to telling his nation of the Messiahship of Jesus. Services are held every Saturday afternoon in which the sermon is in the "Jewish language" and the songs in English, while an English service is held every Saturday evening. The work is heartily commended by those who ought to be well informed concerning it, and the spirit of all the literature which we have been permitted to read is evangelical and earnest. While different peoples retain their race lines, such forms of Christian work are no doubt essential. It is, however, devoutly to be hoped that the time is not far distant when such lines may be ignored, and the common Church receive black and white, Jew and Gentile, to its common service.

Church Congress of the Protestant Episcopal Church

From a Special Correspondent

The Indian summer sun which enveloped Norfolk, shedding warm beams upon the quaint old colonial houses and resting upon the still unfrosted roses in its magnolia-shaded gardens, shone, too, upon a distinguished company gathered at the seventeenth meeting of the Church Congress of the United States. The weather but supplemented the warmth of the Southern welcome, which Virginia alone perhaps could give, to a congress composed of representatives of that Church which found its earliest American home within her borders, the Church to whose training she owed some of her noblest sons and daughters, the Church which through those sons had so large an influence upon the foundation of the American commonwealth. The Church Congress is not a legislative body; it seeks neither to determine nor to resolve; but it affords a free platform for the discussion of problems interesting to the whole Christian world, as well as of subjects of special interest to those within the borders of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

A religious service began, as is usual, the proceedings of the Congress, and in Christ Church the members assembled on the morning of Tuesday for a solemn communion service, at which Bishop Satterlee, of the new Diocese of Washington, was the preacher. His sermon, from the text, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind," was a whole-souled plea for the entire consecration of the human personality to the service of God in response to the love of God.

At the first business session on Tuesday evening, Archdeacon Tiffany, of New York, General Secretary of the Congress, explained its simple rules, and Bishop Randolph, in his hearty address of welcome, gained the sympathy and affection of the audience, which he, as its presiding officer, maintained throughout its sessions. "How can Social Unity be best attained?" asked the programme of the Church Congress of its appointed readers and speakers on this first evening. They did not answer it, although they were all men well chosen for their practical work in bringing into harmony the too widely separated elements of social life in our great cities. They did not answer a question which can be worked out by continued, patient, self-sacrificing effort alone; but they contributed much to the earnest, sober understanding of the relations of the Church to rich and to poor, of the educated to the ignorant, of the ruling to the governed classes. Mr. Reese, of Macon, brought into prominence the fact that the Church, in deciding that it must not only snatch men from the fires of evil, and send individuals redeemed into heaven, but quench those fires and redeem the conditions which make such a thing as lost souls possible, had entered a new future of usefulness. Social unity he defined as the right of fair dealing and justice, the result of brotherhood and love. Professor Gould, of Philadelphia, emphasized the fact that love and social unity are identical terms, and that the great corporations of the country, even when managed by church officers and Sunday-school superintendents, do not, as a rule, make it their first business to manifest this love, selfishness being the principle which tends to the disintegration of society.

Mr. Godkin, editor of the "Evening Post," spoke of the three laws by which alone labor productions can be distributed—the natural but impossible law by which every man takes his own products; arbitrary law, which, if passed by a supreme power (which cannot exist), would be considered final; and the law of agreement. Under this every man would get an equivalent for his labor, but as this would involve arbitrary distribution by a few men, the present system of competition must be continued.

Dr. Rainsford, the next speaker, commended the press, as represented by Mr. Godkin, for what it had accomplished for the higher interests of society, and proceeded to speak of the legal evils with which the reformer who would reach men must grapple, and the unrighteous power which organized capital possesses. The contribution which the churches should make to social unity would be the giving of help and opportunity to the workingman. To aid him to organize and to develop his organizations into educative, self-helpful agencies would be the best way to promote social unity.

Mr. George Wharton Pepper, of Philadelphia, gave in conclusion a clearly reasoned and effective address. He recommended for the cure of social disintegration the application of specific remedies to specific evils. Whether or not the Episcopal Church needs a hierarchy, the future conventions of the Church will determine, probably after years of thought and discussion. The subject was discussed tentatively by the Congress, and a strong opposition to the introduction of a hierarchical spirit upon American soil was manifested. It was claimed, however, notably by Dr. Locke, of Bristol, R. I., that the Church, in its three orders of the ministry, already has a hierarchy, which might be developed further without introducing the dangerous elements which mark the Roman hierarchical idea. Dr. Huntington, the last speaker of the morning, said that what Protestantism most needed to-day was leadership. He had no more sympathy with the peacock feather and yellow jacket aspects of a hierarchy than had any Protestant. He thought, however, that the Church had departed from the ideal of Bishop White, and had become less National, had in fact lost its original likeness to the Constitution in the blotting out of State lines. In the rapid development of the Church he hoped to see the time when each State should have its House of Bishops, and the whole country its House of Presiding Bishops—a great council in which the units shall be the States.

Protestantism needs leaders, and suffers to-day from contrast with Roman organization. It is the organism which grows the shell, not the shell which grows the organism, and yet if the shell is crushed the organism will be destroyed. We are bound to meet and to conquer Roman absolutism with a philosophy of American churchmanship, and to continue the patient, careful study of the needs of this Church and of the country.

An intensely interesting discussion of the Ideal and the Real in Literature took place on Wednesday evening. The Rev. William Wilberforce Newton, in the absence of Mr. Thomas Nelson Page, read the first paper of the evening. Defining realism as the art of reporting things as they are, he said that idealism and realism were really one spirit and one body. The main question in realistic literature is a question of vision. What does the writer see? Our hope is that, whatever the present fads, he may in time rise from the slough of evil suggestions, and, seeing, not merely the actuality, but the potentiality of man, find a true adjustment of moral and literary values. Realism is the interpretation of natural objects as the artist sees them, but good is as real as evil, and the pendulum is swinging back, and the day is coming when artists will see that they must paint truth, and not think it their glory to recognize moral deformity alone.

The Rev. Percy Grant gave a finely conceived analysis of literature as the expression of life. The source of literature, he said, is interest in man and his environment, and therefore uncolored and uncritical literature is impossible. In the best of the lettered records of life man is seen in actual human intercourse. The speaker showed that it was literature rather than philosophy which in the past followed always the social and moral conditions of humanity, and that the world to-day still calls upon literature to express the history of the inner life of humanity. So we must still call literature the lettered study of life, and recognize that in the literary world the greatest realist is also the most perfect idealist.

Mr. Hamilton W. Mabie, who spoke next on this topic, began by saying that to the untrained lay mind a few elementary statements did not seem inappropriate. The terms realist and idealist are not antagonistic. Realism and idealism are two methods of expression which are largely temperamental. Men are romantic or realistic by nature, and in both ways men show reverence for art. The great vogue which realism has had during recent years is due to two causes—its scientific spirit, absolute veracity, intellectual honesty, being one of the debts we owe to science; and its passionate humanism, that profound sympathy for human life which asserts that there is no bit of life which is not divine, and no child of God who can be by any misfortune forever exiled from his Father's heart. There are no logical realists. No purely photographic reproduction of life is possible. The essence of idealism is the interpretation of the fact through the imagination, and art is forever nature plus the artist. No man ever saw the world as the world is, but realism seizes the truth with exact and uncompromising veracity, and idealism gives expression to the perception of what the real is when the real is perfect. Realism is faithful delineation; idealism also involves clear sight of the real and of its spiritual meaning, and interprets the actual through the imagination. Both are elements in every great art, and are related as are body and soul. Idealism is shown by such powerful realization of the individual as Shakespeare manifests, and in each description of the individual true art must evidence the divine purpose. Shakespeare, the first of realists, was also a great idealist. In art nature and imagination must always mingle, so that true art is always nature reproduced, not through mechanism, but through imagination. Art is always the object plus the artist; the human soul is mixed with everything, and man is compelled to interpret nature by his own constitution.

Referring to Colonel Newcome as an ideal picture of the Christian gentleman, the speaker alluded to the use of the term gentleman in its special and significant sense, and spoke of the ideal of the Virginian gentleman which had found so often actual expression in dignity of life, sweetness of manner, and elevation and nobility of character.

The Rev. D. D. Addison said that much that is known as realism might be called caricature, because it represents men as worse than they are, and spies only into charnel-houses. The true realist is he who recognizes two great facts—that man has a soul, and that a soul is as true a thing as can be found by any chemical analysis. The true realist sees man not only as he is, but man in process of becoming; the idealist paints man better than he is because he wishes to raise him to what he may be. True literature is man's attempt to reason from the truth and beauty which he sees to the perfect truth and beauty which he conceives. Nature has the will but not the power to realize perfection, and the artist is he who discovers her will and executes it in art; thus art fulfills and supplements nature. The Greek beauty was the expression of the Greek actual expressed in high imaginative terms. The final result is the representative art which consoles, sustains, and liberates by giving us the enduring and the universal; such art is the synonym for immortality. There is no art for art's sake; let us think always of art for character's sake. It is man who is struggling onward for redemption, not literature. The truth lies always behind the fact, the law behind the phenomena.

Thursday morning was devoted to a series of valuable and interesting papers and addresses on "Archæology and the Bible." The paper by Mr. Baldwin, of this city, was notably clear and persuasive, and held the unbroken attention of the audience. Professor Crawford, of Alexandria, and Professor Jackson, of Columbia University, and the Rev. Dr. Peters, of this city, sustained the discussion on a high level.

Three topics remained for the consideration of the Congress. "Permanence and Progress in the Interpretation of Christian Symbols" called out valuable papers on the relation of ancient creed to modern thought, from the Rev. Drs. Leighton Parks, W. M. Hughes, William P. Dubose, Hall Harrison, and Edward T. Drown. "The Organic Law of this Church" received treatment, or rather criticism, from the Rev. Dr. Mallory, of the "Churchman," the Rev. Dr. Elliott, Messrs. Bryan and Packard. The Congress concluded its sessions with a series of papers and addresses on "The Pastoral Office as affected by the Conditions of Modern Life."

Norfolk, Va.

New Books

[The books mentioned under this head and under that of Books Received include all received by The Outlook during the week ending November 13. This weekly report of current literature will be supplemented by fuller reviews of the more important works.]

Mr. Poultney Bigelow's History of the German Struggle for Liberty has been attractively issued by Messrs. Harper & Brothers, New York. To those who have not followed this history in "Harper's Magazine" we may say that the work begins with the execution in 1806, by order of Napoleon, of a certain bookseller. There is a narration of the causes which in two decades destroyed Frederick the Great's army. The story of the battle of Jena is told; the incompetence of Frederick William III. exposed; Queen Louise's noble agitation narrated, and the creative work of Gneisenau, Scharnhorst, and others described. More inspiring than that work was the kindling by "Turnvater Jahn" of a patriotic fire which has never been quenched. The first Prussian Parliament and its effect on the people finds fit place here, but behind and beyond any single event or group of events is the gloomy background of political and social servitude, rarely relieved by bright gleams—a servitude which has now brought about its logical result in the parallel progress of militarism and Socialism. The value of the work is doubled by its many illustrations, collected from rare sources. While by these volumes Mr. Bigelow may not altogether establish his title as a historian, he has given us a readable, graphic, and, we must believe, tolerably correct notion of one of the most important movements in history. Mr. Bigelow hints that he may continue his history, and we hope that he may ultimately continue it to the present year. The present work ends with the Peace of Paris in 1814.——Messrs. D. C. Heath & Co., Boston, have issued A Compendium of United States History and Literature, with Contemporary Events, by Annie E. Wilson, the author of "Handy Helps in the Study and Reading of English History," etc. This chronological list is of distinct value. It is, of course, supplemented by an ample index.——The author and publisher of Armenia's Ordeal, Mr. Armayis P. Vartooguian, has put forth a sketch of the history of Armenia, together with an interesting account of the work of American missionaries among Armenians and its ruinous effect! It seems that the books on the Armenian question by some persons formerly connected with missionary work in Turkey have displeased this author, who commends, nevertheless, Canon MacColl's pamphlets and Mr. Watson's sonnets. The present book is somewhat of a curiosity, especially in its attitude toward missions. It may surprise some to know that our missionaries have created discord and schism by teaching the pious Armenian to scorn what he had learned to regard as sacred; that our missionaries have been determined to impose their religion, and employed dishonest methods of so doing; that there is no such doctrine in the Gospel that the Armenians possess as the divide et impera policy of the missionaries. We shall be surprised if this onslaught does not meet with a prompt repulse.

Scribner's Popular History of the United States (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York) was in its original form edited by William Cullen Byrant and Sydney Howard Gay. Commenced on too large a scale to be kept up without becoming excessive in size, the latter and really more important years of the national life were treated in a condensed form which made the last volume little more than a compendium. Practically the history came to an end with the momentous life-and-death struggle between liberty and slavery culminating in the Civil War. The completion of the work—for so we must regard it—by the rewriting of the history of the last half of the present century wholly removes this defect, and makes the work what its publishers claim for it, the standard History of the United States for the household and the general reader. Noah Brooks is a worthy collaborator with his predecessors, and has completed their work worthily.

Governments and Parties in Continental Europe, by A. Lawrence Lowell, is an exceptionally valuable and an exceptionally interesting work upon modern political developments. Mr. Lowell in his preface cleverly compares the State to a stage-coach whose horses are running away, and whose driver is harassed by the conflicting shouts of two sets of party leaders by his side, "while at the back a couple of old gentlemen with spy-glasses are carefully surveying the road already traveled." Upon the stage, he says, there ought to be room for quiet observers, who watch how the stage is now progressing, and listen both to the hubbub on the front seat and the grave conversation at the rear. This is the position he assumes, and the observations he makes are generally replete with the scholarship of the historians back of him and the animation of the party leaders in front. Mr. Lowell's two volumes form a successful modern history of Continental Europe, and a comprehensive survey of the party struggles now going on. In the main, his eyes are toward the past, and his temper is conservative; but as an observer of present-day experiments he is singularly dispassionate. His conservatism chiefly shows itself in his hesitancy to commend for our own country institutions like the referendum, whose success elsewhere he cordially recognizes. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.)

International Law: A Simple Statement of Its Principles, by Herbert W. Bowen, United States Consul at Barcelona, Spain, is an exceptionally successful attempt to cover a great subject in a short compass. A great many important topics are satisfactorily disposed of in a single epigrammatic paragraph. Such rapid generalization would of course be inadmissible in a treatise on international law designed for lawyers, but is most welcome in a compendium designed to meet the practical needs of the general reading public. (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.)

The Eighth Series of Miss Yonge's Cameos of English History covers the period from the restoration of the Stuarts until the final ruin of that house through the crushing of the Jacobites about the middle of the last century. Many of the episodes of this period possess a rare dramatic interest, which the author of the "Heir of Redclyffe" has developed with her accustomed skill. Typographically, however, the book is not up to the level usually maintained by the publishers. (The Macmillan Company, New York.)

The same firm has published in superb form the Journal of the Right Hon. Sir Joseph Banks during Captain Cook's voyage to Australasia in 1768–71. The observations of the distinguished naturalist during this memorable voyage were largely drawn upon by Captain Cook in the preparation of his own famous "Journal," and in their present completed form, admirably edited by Sir Joseph D. Hooker, they constitute a valuable contribution to the history of scientific research.

A Quarter of a Century of Prices, by Ellsworth Daggett, is a very elaborate and careful study of the quantities and prices of the principal American products during the past twenty-five years. Since 1880 Mr. Daggett finds that the quantity of these products—twenty-one in number—has increased barely as fast as the population, while their prices have fallen 30 per cent. (Published for the Author at Salt Lake City.)

The projected series of Bodley Head Anthologies is certainly very happy in its initial numbers. English Epithalamies, by Robert H. Case, is a collection of marriage songs of the Elizabethan poets and of their successors—a collection which it is unnecessary to say includes some of the finest lyrical verse in our language. A glance at the index of names shows how very generally the greatest poets have contributed to this class of verse, and how rich in the higher qualities of imagination and melody is the mass of poetry included between the covers of this volume. The book is very handsomely printed and bound, and contains an extended and interesting introduction by the editor. In the same series appears also Musa Piscatrix, selected by Mr. John Buchan, and very appropriately dedicated to Andrew Lang. The editor disclaims the intention of making a complete collection of the fishing songs of our literature, but he has made what is still better—a smaller, choicer, thoroughly representative selection from some of the most humorous, some of the quaintest, and some of the gentlest and sweetest of English poems. English poets from Shakespeare to Austin Dobson are generously drawn upon, and it is a great pity that Dr. Henry van Dyke could not be included in the number; he belongs there by virtue of one of the most charming fishing songs in our literature. The volume contains a series of very taking etchings, and is altogether a book to give delight. Both volumes bear the imprint of A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago.

Mrs. James T. Fields has enriched American literature by a good many delightful essays, gathering up her rich associations with the notable group of which she herself was no inconspicuous member. In Authors and Friends (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston) she tells us about Longfellow, Emerson, Dr. Holmes, Mrs. Thaxter, Whittier, Tennyson, Lady Tennyson, and Mrs. Stowe. Mrs. Fields has the gift of being able to write intimately without parting with that reserve which sound morals and sound taste impose upon every one who attempts to touch upon personal relations. She has also a delightful style, and her prose has never been more refined, delicate, and interesting than in this beautifully made book.

Mr. Bellamy's "Century of Charades" brought aid, comfort, occupation, and irritation to so many people that it is not surprising to find them followed by A Second Century of Charades (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.), as clever, ingenious, and bewildering as those which appeared in the earlier volume.——Professor Woodrow Wilson has done well to issue in book form a collection of papers which, although dealing largely with historical subjects, have revealed a distinct literary quality and possess a distinct literary interest. Mere Literature and Other Essays (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.) contains a series of eight papers largely reprinted in the "Atlantic Monthly," "The Century Magazine," and the "Forum." An essay on Burke appears in print for the first time. These essays are delightful reading; Professor Wilson is one of the small group of men who are rapidly discrediting the notion, imported from Germany, that in order to be accurate one must be dull.

The Rev. Dr. W. F. Crafts has put into a small volume a series of lectures under the title Before the Lost Arts—a contribution to the literature of design and creation, with emphasis upon moral reform. The lectures are illustrated by diagrams, portraits, and pictures of various matters introduced in the text. (Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C.)——Hawthorne's Wonder-Book is issued this year by Messrs. T. Y. Crowell & Co., in a small volume with illustrations by Mr. St. John Harper. The book is well printed and has a taking binding.

Quotations for Occasions, compiled by Katharine B. Wood, is a volume which shows intelligent and judicious command of the resources of literature for those occasions when one would like to have an apt quotation at hand. This book will give joy to after-dinner speakers, to orators on occasions, to those unhappy ones who are compelled to elaborate witty programmes and menus, etc.; to all, in fact, who are in need of an apt phrase or a felicitous citation. The book is handsomely made. (The Century Company, New York.)

Professor Angelo Heilprin has written for Silver, Burdett & Co. (Boston) a first book in geology under the title The Earth and Its Story. The treatment is thorough without being in any sense technical. The writer speaks from a complete command of his subject, but he speaks also to the person who knows very little about it, and he is not above explaining obvious and familiar things about the geological significance of which most people are densely ignorant. The style is pictorial and fresh, and the illustrations are apt. The volume will serve not only as a text-book but as a supplementary reader.

During the past summer few books were more discussed in Paris than "Les Adventures de Ma Vie," by M. Henri Rochefort. We now have in two volumes an English translation of the five volumes (Edwin Arnold, New York), and we are told that these have been revised and arranged by the author and Mr. Ernest Smith. In the translation we miss the brilliance of the French which has long distinguished the erratic but clever editor of the "Intransigeant," yet there is enough brilliance left to attract many readers to these pages. They are well named The Adventures of My Life. Adventures they certainly were: the author's life has been in and out of prison, in and out of exile. His numerous duels alone would fill a volume; his experience of the French Commune, another; and his transportation to the penal settlement of New Caledonia, another. Unlike some other French writers, however, his impressions of America do not constitute a volume. They are as interesting as any, nevertheless. More interesting still are M. Rochefort's ventures and adventures in journalism. He has too often been a scurrilous writer. No matter how independent in politics, no matter how closely related to Victor Hugo and others, no matter how distinguished as an art collector, no matter how vivacious as a man, he has been, there is in his connection with journalism a brutality both of thought and of utterance which may be compared only with the instinctive brutality of the French peasant as narrated by M. Zola. This is coated with a veneer of diverting talk, which, however, one may easily pick with a pin-point. In the preface M. Rochefort promises to introduce his own personality as little as possible, but the pages fairly bristle with "I's." The greatest of living French writers, M. Alphonse Daudet, has depicted M. Rochefort for us more attractively than M. Rochefort describes himself. In the "Adventures" we see not an entirely manly man; instead, one for whom the sanctities of home do not mean what they mean to us, who has many acquaintances and admirers but few real friends, whose idea of politics has ever been that of the adventurer and not of the solid statesman. The great cleverness of M. Rochefort's life cannot at all make up for his defects.

The publication of the fortieth volume of the Temple Shakespeare (The Macmillan Company, New York) completes an edition which, for general attractiveness and convenience, is certainly unsurpassed. It is not surprising to know that these dainty volumes have had a very wide sale; they are of the sort not only to satisfy the student and lover of the great dramatist, but to win a new audience for one who has more to give than almost any other poet in the whole range of literature.——The latest addition to the new translation of Balzac's novels now coming from the press of The Macmillan Company is The Peasantry, translated by Ellen Marriage, with the usual preface by Mr. Saintsbury. In this story Balzac touched upon a theme which George Sand also treated, and which has evoked one of Zola's most powerful novels.——Miss Margaret Sherwood's "An Experiment in Altruism" has been very widely read, so full was it of fresh statement of socialistic matters, of clever character-studies, and of general brightness. The earlier book has now been followed by what is in effect a companion volume, for A Puritan Bohemia takes the reader into the same atmosphere of very clever young people immensely interested in themselves and also in the moral reform of the world. This story has, however, a studio instead of a social settlement for its background. (The Macmillan Company, New York.)

Songs of Exile, by Mr. Herbert Bates, comes to us in attractive form from Messrs. Copeland & Day, Boston. The tiny volume contains some good lines in which there is once in a while a faintest reminder of Stevenson's "Songs of Travel." Mr. Bates's verses are more remarkable for their promise of the future than for any present excellence.

The first chapter of Friendly Letters to Girl Friends, by Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston), should be printed as a leaflet for every teacher in the country. Mrs. Whitney says:

> I have thanked my teacher all my life for this singleness and stringency of treatment. It reached farther than the supply of weapons for an educational campaign from the great arsenal of words. It gave me the key-principle of success in any work. It began the habit, later developed, of making complete, exact beginnings. It stood me in stead, I see now, even to the ordering of a house-cleaning, the fitting of a garment, the preparatory processes of cookery, or for one of those removals, three of which, without the principle, are equal to the disaster of a fire.

The principle on which to select books laid down by Mr. George B. Emerson, to whom Mrs. Whitney pays such a noble tribute in this book, is a principle that is as valuable to-day as when Mrs. Whitney heard it in her girlhood, and, with rare insight, made it the ruling principle of her life:

> Read the books that do you good, that make you hate evil and love the better things; that put you in the highest companionship—whether they are sermons or novels, history or poetry—and be not deterred nor attracted by the mere name of anything.

Not every chapter in this book is as valuable as the first; nor will every girl find inspiration in every chapter. But it is an honest, straightforward, successful effort at putting before girls of eighteen and thereabouts some facts and principles of life that are necessary to a full education. Mrs. Whitney talks of books, of literature, of poetry, of society, of clothes, of beauty, of work, of marriage, of religion, in that pleasantly familiar way that the readers of her stories know so well. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.)

Sir Walter Besant's The City of Refuge has one inherent improbability—the well-bred, conservative, high-class Englishman who pursues a dissolute scoundrel to America with a calm, matter-of-fact intention of killing him. Otherwise the book is well thought out, and has Sir Walter's invariable charm of style. The sketch of the New York "Community" which exists for Elevation and Meditation is capitally done, and the slightly supernatural working out of justice and vengeance is in a quite consistent imaginative vein. (F. A. Stokes Company, New York).——The number of really good writers of Irish character stories is increasing surprisingly. Shan F. Bullock's Ring o' Rushes is worthy to be placed beside the work of Miss Barlow and Mrs. Hinkson. The little sketches have fine flavor and genuine humor. (Stone & Kimball, New York.)——Mr. Rolf Boldrewood has used his local knowledge of Australia to great advantage in both short tales and novels. The Sealskin Cloak is his most ambitious novel, but not, we think, his best. (The Macmillan Company, New York.)——Mr. W. Clark Russell's What Cheer? is a love story and a sea story. Its scene is laid chiefly among the sailors and fishermen of Deal. (R. F. Fenno & Co., New York.)——Mr. L. E. Mitchell, under the title Love in the Backwoods, has joined two short stories, one humorous, the other tragic. The latter is to our minds the more successful, and we may add that neither is on the literary level reached by some of Mr. Mitchell's poems. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)——Many of our readers are already familiar with Mr. Chester B. Fernald's stories of the Chinese quarter of San Francisco, as they have been published in the "Century." The Cat and the Cherub and Other Stories (Mr. Fernald is fertile in finding odd and amusing titles) has the quaintest flavor of Chinese fun and shrewdness, and the Chinese children, in particular, are delightful. Several New England stories of a distinctly new type are added. "The Parlous Wholeness of Ephraim" has many laughs in it. (The Century Company, New York.)——James, or Virtue Rewarded (anonymous) is a very local study of character, with the novelty added that the locality is carefully concealed. It might be any English rural town. It is mildly, quietly, gently interesting. (Stone & Kimball, New York).

The title One of God's Dilemmas will seem to many irreverent. It certainly has little real application to Mr. Allen Upward's story, which is one of a father and mother estranged soon after marriage by the former's worldliness and lack of orthodox belief. A child is born, and when he is fourteen the father desires to make peace with the mother, or at least to help and educate the child. The mother refuses, and indirectly her desire to keep the boy from his father's influence leads to the boy's death. (Edward Arnold, New York.)

A very delightful book is the collection of Stories of a Sanctified Town, by Lucy S. Furman. (The Century Company, New York.) The town lies in western Kentucky, and was not long since swept by a wave of religious enthusiasm. The people believed themselves so full of the Holy Spirit that no evil might longer abide with them. The Bible was their one book, almanac, and guide in all matters. Their conversation became fuller of the letter than of the spirit. While the author's treatment of sacred subjects is entirely reverent, her sense of humor is no less strong. Her dialect is delightful, and in a few rapid strokes she gives us such a graphic picture of her characters that we feel as if we had long known them.——Charming in dress is Mr. Clinton Ross's The Scarlet Coat. (Stone & Kimball, New York.) The story is charming, too. It occurs at the time of our Revolution, and we learn a great deal about Lord Cornwallis, the Marquis de la Fayette, and others. The Epilogue summarizes history, and consists of letters from Cornwallis to Sir Henry Clinton, and from George Washington to Congress.——Mr. W. E. Norris's last novel is entitled Clarissa Furiosa. (Harper & Brothers, New York.) At first we are inclined to believe that in Clarissa's case marriage is a decided failure, and so inclines Clarissa, too. She leaves her husband, establishes a home of her own, and begins a semi-public career as a writer and lecturer on woman's rights. This career is somewhat interfered with by the illness of her child, and the best part of the story consists in Clarissa's conviction that a reconciliation is necessary to the recovery of the child. The reconciliation takes place, and everybody leaves the stage in orthodox fashion.——The Rev. J. W. Dawson has published through Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York, The Story of Hannah, a book which will recall his own "Idylls," though the scene is changed to a remote village. The period of the story is thirty years back, and the Hannah is a girl in a Nonconformist manse. The village life is somewhat analogous to that already described for us by the present Scottish school as characteristic of village life in Scotland. Here, however, the scene is in England. The story of Hannah is an attractive one, with a strong element of the pathetic, too.——Mr. Sydney C. Grier, author of "In Furthest Ind," has published through Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York, An Uncrowned King, a work which the author assures us has no pretensions to be considered a historical novel, or even a roman à clef. No actual characters, living or dead, are presented by this tale. Neither shall we get a clear idea of the topography or history of any Balkan State after reading Mr. Grier's book. The book is, indeed, a composite photograph. It takes features and accidents from all; it adopts the characteristics of none. There is a certain whimsical something about this romance, founded on hypothesis, which is attractive and suggestive.——Interludes, by Maud Oxenden (Edwin Arnold, New York), is a collection of realistic and rather morbid stories. The author's style is forceful.

Max Pemberton's latest story, A Puritan's Wife, deals with a period in English History which is definitely suggested by its title. The Puritan in this tale returns to England at the time of the Restoration, but not under the protection of the amnesty granted by Charles II. to so many Roundheads. The heroine is a noblewoman who takes shelter in the hero's family during the Revolution, and who comes to great prosperity under the Restoration. The concluding chapters introduce some descriptive passages relating to the Plague in London. The story reminds one in its general style and spirit of a former tale by the same author, "A Little Huguenot." (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)——Mr. Edward Irenæus Stevenson's novel, A Matter of Temperament, comes to us with the imprint of the American Publishers Corporation. In this story Mr. Stevenson deals with the question of the relation of the musical temperament to morals.

A country girl who had "advantages," in the language of a New England village—which means being sent away to school; a great opera singer, whose actions are more the result of impulse than principle, and who, for personal gratification and the sake of experiment, takes the country girl into her own world and trains her; a tenor who is not a model of constancy; a farmer's household in New England, and a man who can love through coldness that amounts to cruelty and hardness that is brutal, make the characters and setting for Maria Louise Pool's new book, In the First Person. (Harper & Brothers, New York.) The book contains some of her strongest work, but it lacks the rare descriptive writing of "In a Dike Shanty."

The readers who have followed Sonny, by Ruth McEnery Stuart (The Century Company, New York), from his glad advent on that Christmas morning to his "wedding presents" period, will gladly welcome the binding together of his several experiences in book form. Ruth McEnery Stuart shows her genius by making this impossible boy so real that every reader knows him well, and rejoices with his father in Sonny's rare gift of having his own way and accomplishing his own ends. In these pages of wit and loving record there is many a suggestion for parents and teachers whose minds are open to suggestion; for Sonny is a many-sided boy of many experiences, some of which, at some time or other, find their way into every boy's life.

Mr. George Manville Fenn tells a tale of the time of George I. of England in a way to hold the attention closely. It is a story of fighting, romance, and politics strongly knit together and full of action. The pictures and cover design are not attractive. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)——Harry Castlemon pleases boy readers and continues to produce stories with great rapidity. The Young Game Warden is ingenious but not always probable or natural. (H. T. Coates & Co., Philadelphia.)——The Other Boy's Sake, by Marshall Saunders, is a collection of short stories for children, in which pet animals play a pleasant part. They are "improving" without being stupid. (C. H. Bane, Philadelphia.)

Gascoigne's Ghost, by J. B. Burgin (Harper & Brothers, New York), is the story of a father who is a victim of alcoholism and of a son who uses his father's brains to establish himself before the public and denies his father. Reform comes to both, and the book ends happily. There is some unpleasant writing in the book which hardly seems necessary to the working out of the plot.——Catalina, by L. T. Mead (J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia), is the story of an art student in England. There is the usual experience in a studio under a master, with the friendships and animosities always to be found among students. There is the story of temptation, of fall, a strong honest friend, retribution, and justice.——A delightful book of fairy tales collected by Zoe Dana Underhill, entitled The Dwarfs' Tailor, and Other Stories (Harper & Brothers, New York), will be gladly welcomed by the children. Mrs. Underhill's well-known sympathy with children, and her artistic sense, find full play in this book designed for the children's Christmas.——A most curious book entitled Karma, a story of early Buddhism, by Paul Carus, has just been published by the Open Court Publishing Company, Chicago, Ill. The book is printed and illustrated on crape paper, and as a curiosity in book-making is worth possessing. It is a collection of stories, or legends, more properly, written with a view to illustrating the philosophy of Buddha.

Happy the author who always finds a waiting audience! This is the delightful fate of Mrs. Molesworth. The Oriel Window, illustrated by L. Leslie Brooke (The Macmillan Company, New York), is Mrs. Molesworth's latest contribution to the sum total of happiness for the children's holiday season. Mrs. Molesworth's stories are so well known that no outline of the story is necessary.——Margaret Sidney, the author of "Five Little Peppers," has won her way into so many children's hearts that the mere announcement that she has written another book will bring gladness to hundreds of children. The Gingham Bag (Lothrop Publishing Company, Boston) appeared in one of the children's magazines. The little people are very lifelike, and Margaret Sidney's adults are always friends of the children. It is this that makes her books so popular.——Dick, a story for boys and girls, by Anna Chapin Ray (Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York), is a healthy, rollicking tale of school experience and vacation experience. The characters are the boys and girls of to-day carried through the early college years. There is a love episode in the last chapter.——The editor of "Baby Land," Mrs. Ellen Farman Pratt, has just issued an exquisitely illustrated book for little children entitled Happy Christmas. (Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York.) This book will delight the hearts of the wee tots too young to read, and those who are just beginning to struggle with the intricacies of the alphabet when arranged in the groups that we call words.

Ancient Ideals, by Henry Osborn Taylor (G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York), is described on the title-page as a study of intellectual and spiritual growth from early times to the establishment of Christianity, and in the preface as "an attempt to treat human development from the standpoint of the ideals of the different races as these ideals disclose themselves in the art and literature, in the philosophy and religion, and in the conduct and political fortunes of each race." It thus furnishes a study in comparative religion, for it is the ideals of a people which interpret if they do not furnish and constitute its religion. The author has taken a wide range in his examination of the world.

A Greek-English Lexicon to the New Testament, revised and enlarged by Thomas Sheldon Green, M.A., with a preface by H. L. Hastings, editor of "The Christian," and a supplement by Dr. J. H. Thayer, Professor in Harvard University (H. L. Hastings, Boston), has been published in compact form and in small but clear type. This little book contains the more than 5,000 words in the Greek Testament; references to every passage where those words occur; every English word which is used to translate the given Greek word; the passages in which the Greek word is translated by each English word, classified and set by themselves; the various readings of the leading critical editions, and an English index. Hence one who does not know a letter of the Greek alphabet may find the original for any English word in the New Testament, may learn in how many places it occurs, and in how many ways it is translated.——No. 22 in "By-paths of Bible Knowledge" is a reprint of the late William Knight's The Arch of Titus. (Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.) The little book is interesting from archæological, historical, and religious standpoints. There is an introduction by "B. F. Dunelm," whom some American readers may have some difficulty in recognizing as Dr. Brooke Foss Westcott, the eminent Bishop of Durham.——Mr. Coulson Kernahan, the author of "A Dead Man's Diary," etc., has published a little volume entitled The Child, the Wise Man, and the Devil. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.) This little book is somewhat longer than the author's "God and the Ant." It consists of the narration of a dramatic dream. Christ has been taken from the hearts of men, and the narration of this bit of imagination may add to Mr. Kernahan's reputation.

"The child mind is a castle that can be taken neither by stealth nor storm; but there is a natural way of approach and a gate of easy entry always open to him who knows how to find it." This is the opening paragraph of the preface to The Point of Contact in Teaching, by Patterson DuBois. This book will be especially valuable to Sunday-school teachers, for it points out clearly some of the reasons why our Sunday-school work does not accomplish more positive results in the mind development of the child. The book is divided into five chapters, or five short essays—The General Principle of Teaching, The Plane of Experience and Applying Experience to Teaching, Missing the Point, and The Lesson Material. (John D. Wattles & Co., Philadelphia.)——Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York, publish Culture and Reform, by Anna Robertson Brown, Ph.D., author of "What Is Worth While." The last-named book has made so great an impression that Miss Brown has a large audience waiting for this book which follows it. There is a deep spiritual thought underlying this latest work.——The Gentle Heart, by J. R. Miller, D.D., is a plea for gentleness. Dr. Miller says we are strong only as we are gentle. Gentleness is the power of God working in the world. Believing this, Dr. Miller has written an address which will leave his readers his debtors. (Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York.)

The Romance of Commerce, by Mr. Macdonald Oxley (T. Y. Crowell & Co., Boston), is a good book for young readers. It retraces a number of the more famous enterprises which have had for their object the extension of commerce, among such episodes being the Mississippi Bubble, the South Sea Bubble, Drake's Chase of the Spanish Galleons, etc.——Mr. James Newton Baskett has published, through Messrs. D. Appleton & Co., New York, The Story of the Birds, and has given us a book in which both old and young readers may find much interesting information concerning ornithology.

Bible Characters: Adam to Achan, by Alexander Whyte, D.D. (Fleming H. Revell Company, New York), has throughout a flavor of antiquity. There is neither discussion nor recognition of modern questions, and, except with now and then a reference to a modern book such as Dr. Herrick's "Heretics of Yesterday," one might suppose the volume was written in the seventeenth or eighteenth century, and by a student of, let us say, Burton's "Anatomy of Melancholy." The antiquity is, however, literary rather than theological, for the book is literary rather than theological, and might be read with interest and profit by any man of spiritual instinct and some taste for the antique, whatever his theological conceptions.

Dr. S. S. Curry has issued, from the press of the Boston School of Expression, two valuable volumes, Lessons in Vocal Expression and Imagination and Dramatic Instinct. Dr. Curry well calls the attention of speakers to his processes of thinking in the modulation of the voice. Every one will be benefited by reading his volumes. Elemental and logical relations become properly classified and progressively arranged. The pages devoted to "Modes of Development" are perhaps the most valuable of all, but the most interesting are those on the creative instinct, namely, imagination, and on the dramatic instinct, namely, assimilation. Too much stress can hardly be laid on the author's ground-principle, that where a method aims to regulate the modulations of the voice by rules, then inconsistencies and lack of organic coherence begin to take the place of that sense of life which lies at the heart of every true product of art. On the contrary, where vocal expression is studied as a manifestation of the processes of thinking, there results the truer energy of the student's powers and the more natural unity of the complex elements of his expression.

Two recent additions to Heath's Modern Language Series (D. C. Heath & Co., Boston) are, first, Der Schwiegersohn, by Rudolph Baumbach, annotated by Dr. William Bernhardt—a delightful story, somewhat after the manner of that much longer one by Gustav Freytag, "Soll und Haben." "Der Schwiegersohn" shows that honest toil in trade and in scholarly pursuits forms a foundation of German life. The other little volume comprises two plays by Roderich Benedix, Plautus und Terenz and Die Sonntagsjäger. The plays are edited by Dr. B. W. Wells, the author of excellent histories of German and French literature. The first play voices the revolt of Young Germany against dry-as-dust pedantry. The second is a satire on the snobbishness of certain members of society. The notes to both books are capital.

In a little volume entitled Tobacco in Song and Story, John Bain, Jr., has collected and arranged a great many poems and prose passages relating to the "weed." The book has a few odd and original drawings. Smokers will read it with pleasure and amusement; non-smokers will not read it, and will, therefore, be none the worse for it. (Arthur Gray & Co., New York.)

Dr. George P. Fisher's Brief History of Nations has as its distinctive characteristics an account of the progress of civilization rather than the progress of "events," and a recognition that a knowledge of modern history is of more importance to thoughtful men of to-day than the knowledge of ancient history. Indeed, Dr. Fisher would probably subscribe to Dr. Arnold's view that ancient history is important only in the degree in which it affects modern life. The work is eminently judicial throughout. (American Book Company, New York.)

[For list of Books Received see Table of Contents]

For the Little People

The Owl and His Neighbors

By Mary E. M. Richardson

There once dwelt an owl in a lofty oak-tree.
A very exclusive, grave creature was he;
As solemn a biped as ever could be;
A winking, and blinking, and grim Pharisee;
An anchoret owl.

He stealthily foraged at night-time for prey,
But ne'er from his haunt during daylight did stray.
With eyes and with beak 'neath his feathers of gray,
'Twas there in the dimness he liked well to stay—
That mournful old owl!

He longed for repose; but, because of the sound
Of song-birds that twittered and fluttered around,
He had no enjoyment of slumber profound;
And, being disturbed, O, how fiercely he frowned—
That somnolent owl!

The Singing Lesson

"Now! now! they're beginning their noises inane!
Well balanced am I, or I'd be quite insane!
They have no respect for their neighbor, 'tis plain;
But I'm too disgusted to even complain,"
Bewailed that sad owl.

He dozed once again, and the merry birds flew,
While louder their carols and canticles grew.
"Oh! why do they make such a hullabaloo?
It can't be compared to my own sweet tu whoo!"
Declared that vain owl.

Again did he nap, when a wonderful scheme
Unfolded itself in the flash of a dream.
He surely might teach the young birds not to scream!
And O, how refreshing their silence would seem,
Imagined that owl.

That night to his neighbors—a vast company—
He paid his respects; 'twas a rare courtesy.
The birds were a-nest, but agreed, timidly,
To what he suggested with pomposity—
That bigoted owl!

"My friends, I have called a proposal to make.
You know I'm the wisest of birds—when awake—
And so, on the morrow, I've planned, for your sake,
My usual repose," he explained, "not to take."
That desperate owl!

"Come, then, in the morning to my coterie.
To benefit all of you do I agree!
You sing much too loud, and you don't keep the key!
I want you to hear, and to imitate me,"
Remarked that rude owl.

So, next day, the youngsters proceeded to flit
Towards the tall oak; in the green midst of it
The arrogant, self-loving recluse did sit;
But all he could say was "Tu whoo!" and "Tu whit!"
That ludicrous owl!

"Tu whoo!" and "Tu whit!" said the confident bird;
"Tu whit!" and "Tu whoo!" and not one other word.
Then, while an embarrassing stillness occurred,
He winked, and he blinked, and appeared most absurd—
That whimsical owl!

His guests were well-bred, and discreet silence kept
Until their host's head 'neath his downy wing crept;
Assured that he then unmistakably slept,
They jeered at the pedant; they mocked the adept,
The musical owl!

"He wished us to imitate his style," laughed they,
"The wiseacre!" Then the birds scurried away.
And so it remains that, to this very day,
Their songs are too jubilant, noisy, and gay
To please an old owl.

A Pumpkin Moonshine

By Emilye A. Braddock

The Pumpkintons are a set of sprites that live in pumpkin blossoms.

And very good houses these are, too. Deeply hollowed, with high walls, jagged at the top, the tiny creatures within are quite safe and comfortable, a half-dozen sometimes living in one.

As their stay-at-home clothes are yellow and their go-abroad cloaks green, they are, of course, invisible to most folks.

What with dances and races on the vines, driving out the bees that sometimes buzz into their houses, playing hide and seek with butterfly visitors, or perching on their wings for a ride, with sometimes a trip on a toad's back, the days go on. By and by their house turns to a ball, first green, then yellow, and growing larger and larger. Now the Pumpkintons must live outside instead of inside. But by this time they are full-grown and hardy, and like "camping out." They sleep snugly under the pumpkin, perch on top of it, run and play about it, and visit their neighbors. But when harvest-time comes, what becomes of the Pumpkintons? They move away, to be sure, but nobody knows where. Perhaps eyes sharp enough might find out, but it is certain the Pumpkintons of the next season, to those who can see them, look exactly like those of the last.

But now we must come to one particular Pumpkinton family. There were just five of them—all brothers—Caper, Sleepy-Head, Long-Ears, Ready, and Moonshine.

Caper was frolicsome and sprightly, Sleepy-Head dull though good-natured, Long-Ears always listening to find out things, and Ready prompt and businesslike. But Moonshine was full of fancies. He was the genius or odd one of the family. He was forever making rhymes, telling his dreams, or speaking of queer things that might or that he wished would happen.

It was the twilight of an autumn day.

Caper was pushing his brothers off from the pumpkin as fast as they climbed up.

Sleepy Head began to rub his eyes and whine that he was "too tired to play any more."

"To bed—to bed
You Sleepy Head!"

shouted Long-Ears, from something he had heard.

Moonshine stood up, and, waving his arms, began rhyming and singing:

"Hear, hear, one and all!
A coach will be made of this golden ball,
And I shall ride in it, with two horses tall."

"Silly Moonshine!" said Ready. "Foolish dreamer!" broke in Long-Ears. "Farmer Green will make no coach of our old house. But, from what I've heard, he'll be after it pretty soon, perhaps to-morrow."

"We'd better pack to-night," spoke up Ready, bustling about.

"You'll see—you'll see
What a Prince I shall be,"

Moonshine went on singing, and then strolled out to look at the moon, while Caper hid under a leaf to trip him, Sleepy-Head went to bed, and Long-Ears and Ready planned for the moving.

Their house was in a field belonging to Farmer Green. His two children, Frank and Nell, had watched this one pumpkin for a long time, for it was the largest one of all.

"What a splendid Pumpkin Moonshine it would make!" Frank often said to Nell, and they talked and planned so much about it that kind Farmer Green at last said they might have it for their own. So the very next day after the evening just spoken of, Frank cut the pumpkin from the vine, and he and Nell rolled it away in great glee.

Hard enough they worked on it, nearly all day, hollowing it out, cutting great holes in it for eyes, a long gash for a nose, a still larger one for a mouth, and even making teeth.

Moonshine watched the whole work eagerly. When the Pumpkintons flitted, he had stayed behind to see what would become of the old homestead.

"I'll come by and by," he called out after his brothers, "who knows but in my coach?"

"I really believe they are making a coach," said Moonshine to himself, as he looked on. "Yes, there are windows and a door—

"In it I'll hide,
And away I'll ride."

When Nell put a piece of a candle in the pumpkin all ready to light, he jumped in, hid behind it, and waited. At last it began to grow dark.

The pumpkin was raised on a long pole held by Frank and Nell. The eyes, nose, and mouth glared red with the light behind them. And fierce enough looked the Pumpkin Moonshine as it started off.

Just what they were going to do the children didn't know, only they hoped to "scare somebody." As they went chattering along Moonshine Pumpkinton kept singing—

"Look at me, one and all,
As I ride in my coach of a golden ball,
Drawn by two horses tall!"

"Oh! here come Ned and Nan," said Frank, just as the little Browns, coming home from an errand, and turning a corner, caught sight of the fiery head.

Away they ran, screaming, and, after them, the goblin, bobbing up and down, coming nearer and nearer.

At last they reached the very edge of a steep hill, and Frank, afraid they would fall, shouted:

"It's only a Pumpkin Moonshine."

"Only a Punkey Moonshine," echoed little Nell.

Moonshine Pumpkinton, inside his coach, heard. "Oh! they mean me, only they've called my name backwards," said he to himself. "They've found me out; what shall I do?—

> "I'll put out the light,
> And be out of sight."

So he climbed up the candle, and with a puff blew it out.

Suddenly all was darkness. The Browns stumbled and went rolling down the hill, and the Greens came "tumbling after."

The Pumpkin Moonshine leaped ahead, bounding from rock to rock.

At the foot of the hill the Browns and Greens, in a little heap, began to pick themselves up, with shrieks that changed to laughs when they found they were not much hurt after all, and soon they were limping home. But it was the end of the Pumpkin Moonshine. It lay, in a dozen pieces, under a sharp rock. As for Moonshine Pumpkinton, his rough-and-tumble ride scattered some of his fancies, but he soon started nimbly on, singing:

> "One dream has come true, and another may,
> So now I'll be off and away, away."

And, no doubt, he at last overtook the other Pumpkintons.

The Home Club

Woman's Progress

Miss Frances Willard has recently been compiling facts as to the progress of women in the world of industry. At the meeting of the Purity Conference of the Women's Christian Temperance Union in St. Louis this compilation was made public. It includes the work of women in religious, philanthropic, educational, political, medical, legal, literary, and artistic circles. The facts are most interesting. The women in the Methodist Episcopal Church have in the last four years collected for missionary purposes almost two millions of dollars, over one million for foreign missions, and over seven hundred thousand for home missions. The women of this Church maintain fifty-one deaconesses' homes, fifteen of which are in foreign lands. The deaconesses work without salaries. In the Congregational Church there are thirty-one regularly ordained Congregational ministers and pastors who are women. Miss Willard speaks in this compilation of the scholarship maintained by women within the last few years, especially in the Universities of Germany. She states that of the four hundred and fifty-one colleges and universities in the United States only forty-one are closed to women. One-fourth of the fellowships of the University of Chicago are held by women. These scholarships represent eleven States and fourteen colleges or universities. Twenty-five States have given the educational ballot to women, one the municipal, and three—Wyoming, Colorado, and Utah—have given them full franchise. There are 37,910 women physicians and nurses in England. The most interesting part of Miss Willard's compilation shows unusual employments of women. For instance, three young women are the proprietors of a large restaurant in the Chamber of Commerce Building in Cincinnati. They pay for rent and services $10,000 a year. A woman has just opened a bakery at Circle City on the Yukon River, Alaska. There are twenty women lighthouse keepers. Denver has a woman as a garbage contractor, and the same city appointed the first woman health inspector. Decatur, Mich., is a city given up to the control of women. The leading physician is a woman, the most popular pastor is a woman, the proprietor of the largest dry-goods store is a woman, one of the best shoemakers is a woman, and the town has a postmistress.

A Principals' Association

Brooklyn is the first of Eastern cities to make an authoritative effort to bring the teachers and the parents of the children in the public schools together. Dr. Walter B. Gunnison, President of the Principals' Association of Brooklyn, must have the full credit of organizing and carrying out the purpose of the Principals' Association. The wisdom of making a common meeting-ground for parents and teachers has received a full measure of attention from this Association, and at last plans were formulated of having on a given day in several of the public schools of the city, under the authority of the principals of the schools, a meeting to which the parents will be invited, the same subject to be discussed at all the meetings. In nineteen of the public schools of Brooklyn on the afternoon of November 17 parents' meetings were held. The speakers were representatives of the Board of Education, the principals of the schools, and in one or two instances outside speakers. The parents responded enthusiastically to the invitation. The subject discussed was, "How Can the Home Assist the School?" When the official programme had been carried out, the parents present were given an opportunity to express their views, and time was left for the teachers to meet the mothers and fathers of their pupils personally. At some of the schools music was rendered by choirs composed of the boys and girls. The outlook for the children of the city is most hopeful. Certainly to bring the teachers and parents together to discuss the subject of common interest to both—the development of the child—is the natural outgrowth, the flower, so to speak, of this nineteenth-century effort in behalf of education. It is proposed to hold these meetings monthly.

A Housewife Society

The German Housewife Society has been organized in New York. One thousand servants are members of this, and two hundred and twenty-five employers are members. The object of the society is twofold—to guard the interest of the employer and the employee, and at the same time to better the chances of the servant's progress. Mrs. L. Rosenburg is the President. Every employer who becomes a member pays an initiation fee of $3, and $2 in advance as dues every six months. This income becomes a fund which will furnish premiums to servants for faithful service. A servant serving for two years faithfully and satisfactorily in one family receives as a reward $20; for three years' uninterrupted service, $30; for five years' uninterrupted service, $45; and for ten years', $100. Any servant discharged for incompetency, immorality, neglect of duties, will be dropped from the list and will forfeit all privileges of membership. The employing members have the right to secure services from the list of employee members who are out of employment. The history of this society will be watched with a good deal of interest. It is following somewhat the plan that has proved very successful in Germany.

Women's Clubs

The general response to the request for club programmes made last summer by The Outlook indicates the tremendous interest of women in club work. Among the most remarkable of the programmes submitted is that of the St. Johnsbury Woman's Club, of St. Johnsbury, Vt. The club's motto is, "Every person is responsible for all the good within the scope of his abilities, and for no more," and none can tell whose scope is the largest. The club was organized in 1892, and became a member of the State Federation in 1893. The subjects laid out for the winter's work do not differ greatly from that of other clubs in topics selected. The committee given first place in the programme is The Village Improvement Committee. Education, Domestic Science, Social Science, Current Events, History, Travel, Music, and Art, each under a separate committee, constitute the year's work. The method of working differs in that a summary is made of the papers presented under the auspices of the different committees and issued in the form of a pamphlet. The club has just issued a summary of "The Laws of Inheritance for Women and Children," a valuable little leaflet which places the leading law principles governing property rights of women and laws pertaining to children in the State in a concrete form, and in so small a leaflet that it might occupy a place in a woman's work-basket, ready for reference at any moment.

The Des Moines Woman's Club has found it necessary to print its motto in German, "Was man nicht besprecht bedenkt man nicht recht." The club was organized in 1885. Its committees are about the same as that of most of the women's clubs, with the exception that it has one which but a small percentage of the clubs yet possess, judging from the year-books received—a Household Economic Committee—which has a place in the programme about once a month. The club is incorporated. It has a stock company limited to one thousand shares of stock at a value of five dollars each. Each member is permitted to own one share of stock only, and this is not transferable. The business of the club is managed by a property committee who make all purchases for the club, and take charge of the property. There are nine standing committees—art, household economics, education, social economics, history, music and drama, philosophy and science, literature, and a social committee. The special feature of the Des Moines Woman's Club is its art collection. It several years ago pledged itself to the establishment of an art collection in the city, and it has worked steadily to that end. The club purchased "Jean d'Arc," by Chapu, exhibited at the World's Fair. They also purchased the copy of "Diana of the Louvre" exhibited at the same time. Both of these works of art were purchased as souvenirs of the Fair. In 1895 the club purchased three paintings by Mr. C. H. Baldwin. Three landscapes were purchased later from the studio of Mr. Harry C. Williams, of Illinois. The next year there were added to these "Nantasket Beach," "Afternoon at Block Island," and "Summer Day at Nahant," by Mr. David Gue. Through the generosity of some friends a copy of Corot and a portrait of Sir Frederick Leighton were presented. These pictures, after being exhibited at the public library, are now in the club's rooms, and these rooms are kept open on Saturday afternoon for the general public.

The Monday Club of Rockford, Ill., has been organized twenty years. "The Development of the Religious Conscience among the People of Israel" is the subject of the winter's work, the club using for its motto, "May we rightly understand, as a whole, the unique work which the Spirit of God, that is the soul of the world, has realized through Israel." The first period the subject of discussion will be "Theocracy;" the second period, "Monarchy;" the third period, "Exile and Return;" the fourth period, "Storm and Stress." The following is the club's reference library:

The Old Testament; The Old Testament Apocrypha; Works of Josephus; "History of Israel," H. Ewald; "History of the People of Israel," E. Renan; "Studies in Religious History," E. Renan; "History of Israel and Judah," A. Wellhausen; "History of the Jews," H. Graetz; "History of the Hebrews," Kittel; "History of the Jewish Church," A. P. Stanley; "Prophets of Israel and Their Place in History," W. R. Smith; "Religion of the Semites," W. R. Smith; "Religion of Israel," A. Kuenen; "National Religions," A. Kuenen "Judaism and Christianity," C. H. Toy; "Origin and Growth of Religion as Illustrated by the Religion of the Ancient Hebrews," C. G. Montefiore; "Origin and Development of Religious Belief," S Baring-Gould; "Origin and Growth of the Conception of God," G. d'Alviella; "Evolution of Religion," E. Caird; "The Philosophy of Religion," Otto Pfleiderer; "What is the Bible?" G. T. Ladd "Right and Wrong Uses of the Bible," Heber Newton; "The Book of the Beginnings," Heber Newton; "Who Wrote the Bible?" W. Gladden; "The Genesis of Genesis," W. Bacon; "Andover Review," November, 1884; "Andover Review," March, April, 1893; "Old Testament Student," May, 1884; "Biblical World," January, February, April, June, 1896 Articles on Israel, Pentateuch, Prophets, etc., in "Encyclopædia Britannica."

The Century Club of Amsterdam, R. I., presents a most bewildering programme. Hawaii, Memories of Italy, Our Public Schools, The Basis of the Kindergarten, Epochs of English History, The Religion of Ancient Greece, Glimpses of Travel and Astronomy, with space given to music at each meeting, represent the unlimited field of its activities.

Tea Sets
Berry Bowls
Bread Trays
Bonbon Dishes
Coffee Sets
Salvers
Salad Bowls
Tea Kettles
Water Pitchers
Jelly Dishes
Syrup Jugs
Celery Trays
Chafing Dishes
Candelabra
Candlesticks
Fern Dishes
Loving Cups
Ladles
Punch Bowls
Child's Bowls
Vases
Carving Sets
Cigar Jars
Brush and Comb Sets
Cigar Lamps
Smokers' Sets

Ink Bottles
Perfume Jars
Manicure Goods
Razors
Hair-Pin Trays
Match Boxes
Cologne Bottles
Mirrors
Shaving Cups
Soap Boxes
Powder Boxes
Shoe Horns
Button Hooks
Scissors
Tea Spoons
Dessert Spoons
Table Spoons
Table Forks
Dessert Knives
Coffee Spoons
Ice Cream Spoons
Orange Spoons
Berry Spoons
Sugar Tongs
Preserve Spoons
Orange Knives

We mention above only a few of the articles in sterling silver specially appropriate for Christmas gifts which may be found at our stores

41 Union Square,
Broadway, cor. 17th St.,
New York

REED & BARTON
SILVERSMITHS

13 Maiden Lane,
New York

Correspondence

Government by Injunction[1]

To the Editors of The Outlook:

In your discussion of "Government by Injunction" in your issue of October 24 you say: " . . . We think English history abundantly demonstrates the danger of any policy which allows a judicial tribunal, first by the issuance of an injunction to create an obligation or prohibition, in a controversy affecting not merely the contestants before the court, but the entire community, and then to try, condemn, and punish, without a jury, and without the intervention of any separate and unprejudiced tribunal, those who are accused of having disregarded its commands."

No more salutary power is exercised by courts of chancery than that of issuing writs of injunction in proper cases. Any case is a proper case for the issue of the writ in which there is threatened an unlawful invasion of private rights for which no adequate remedy at the common law exists.

The injunction should, of course, not be granted simply because public interests are affected, nor because the act sought to be enjoined is a crime, and as such an invasion of the peace and dignity of the State. Neither, on the other hand, should it be refused because such is the case. Here we seem to stand on no debatable ground.

That the controversy is one which affects not merely private rights but the entire community should not prevent the issue of the writ. Such a controversy is very apt to be one in which the greatest and most irreparable injury to private property interests is threatened.

Where the writ is properly issued, the power to punish—and to punish promptly—must exist. This is essential to the maintenance of the power and dignity of the court. Its command must not be a mere brutum fulmen.

Your argument would seem to go to the extent of depriving individuals and corporations of the right to an injunction—no matter how necessary to the preservation of their property rights—in all cases where the questions involved were matters of public interest, or, as you say, where the controversy affects the entire community.

The action of the courts in the Debs case may be open to criticism on the ground that their jurisdiction as courts of chancery was invoked in the name of the public and for the protection of public interests. The acts threatened were crimes which the Executive was empowered to prevent and the criminal courts to punish.

But it will be remembered that the proceeding in the Debs case was instituted under the so-called "Anti-Trust" law, which conferred this identical jurisdiction upon the United States Circuit Courts.

Without, however, attempting to vindicate the action of the courts in the Debs case, I must say that I cannot see why individuals or corporations should be deprived of the remedy by injunction against threatened interference with their property rights simply because the public are interested in or affected by the controversy in question. It would certainly seriously impair the efficiency of our courts of chancery to be deprived of the power to grant the relief in such cases.

A good illustration of the use of the writ in a case of this kind is afforded by the case of the Ann Arbor Railroad against Mr. Arthur as Chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. There was a strike of the engineers in the employ of the railroad. A rule of the Brotherhood (which could be called into operation by the Chief) required all members of the Brotherhood to refuse to aid in the interchange of cars or freight with any railroad in which a strike was in progress. Mr. Arthur had called this rule into operation. The whole community was interested, for this act seemed likely to result in a "tie-up" on all railroads passing through Toledo. The act was also a criminal offense under the Federal laws, for which Mr. Arthur might have been indicted and tried. The court, by injunction, required him to rescind the order calling the rule into operation. Mr. Arthur (to his credit be it said) promptly obeyed. Suspended traffic was at once resumed.

Suppose the court had had no power to issue or enforce this writ. Mr. Arthur might have been indicted. He might possibly have been convicted. But it is very certain that long before this could have been done the property and business of the railroad company would have been seriously and irreparably injured. The subsequent punishment of Mr. Arthur might have satisfied the public, but it would have been a very unsatisfactory recompense to the railway company. The latter did not want to punish him. It simply wanted to prevent him from injuring its property and business.

That this remedy has been improperly used to protect public interests—if such be the case—is no reason why it should not be used in all cases where it is necessary to protect private property interests. The character of our Federal judges is an effective guarantee against abuses. This your article practically admits.

Alexander L. Smith,
Attorney at Law.

Toledo, O.

The Founders of Chautauqua

To the Editors of The Outlook:

When Bishop Vincent first read the article in The Outlook on "The Founder of Chautauqua," he immediately called the writer's attention to the omission of the name of Mr. Lewis Miller, of Akron, Ohio, "who was," as Bishop Vincent says, "not only one of the founders of Chautauqua, but who has been intimately associated with myself from the beginning of the Chautauqua movement as friend, counselor, promoter of popular education, and, especially in the earlier years, as financial backer; so that no mention should be made of one name without the introduction of the other." It would be difficult, as it is unnecessary, to draw a line between the services of Mr. Miller and Bishop Vincent in the founding of the Chautauqua work. The object of the article in question was an analysis of the character of one of these men. The title was given to the article by the editor and not by the writer; and this explanatory note is written at the earnest request of Bishop Vincent.

William P. Harper.

The University of Chicago.

A Case of Coercion

To The Editors of The Outlook:

In your issue of November 14 you say, "We have yet to learn of a single well-authenticated case of coercion." There is a small manufactory in a little hamlet in this county employing eight or ten men. The works were shut down two weeks before election, with notice that they would not be opened again unless McKinley was elected, but in case he was a large building would be put up and an increased number of men put to work. My informants, who were Republicans, only laughed at the idea that the proprietor had any intention of closing his works or of increasing them in the near future; it was simply done to influence the votes of these men by inciting their fears. If this was not coercion or intimidation, what name would The Outlook apply to it? This is but a small sample of what has been done all over the country by closing factories, and the publication of large orders having been received to be canceled if Bryan was elected. Some of these may have been honest, and may have just expressed the fears of the manufacturers, but a great many were evidently merely for political effect. It is easy for men in good circumstances to say that "the American workingman is too intelligent and courageous to be influenced in this way," but I know personally of many men with families, who are honest, frugal, and industrious, and of fair average intelligence, who have been brought by the long continuance of unsteady employment so near penury that the loss of even two weeks' wages means hunger and cold to their families or the incurring of debts they may be unable to pay, or charity. Is it any wonder that, with these men, their fears may be brought to overcome their judgment? I think this has been largely the cause of the great Republican majorities.

---

[1] See editorial in this issue.

ONE WHO VOTED FOR BRYAN.

Whitewater, Wis.

That there may have been other cases in which coercion was resorted to we do not deny; but this is the only definite case which has been brought to our knowledge. We do not believe that the giving of orders conditioned on McKinley's election was generally for political effect; this was due to a real fear, whether well or ill founded, that Mr. Bryan's election would produce such commercial disaster, or at least would lead to such uncertainties in business, that enlargement of orders would not be safe.

Notes and Queries

I want to spend about fifty dollars on books which will prove helpful to me in my sermon work, such as the best modern sermons, essays, speeches, etc. Will you kindly tell me what, in your judgment, are the best books for me to purchase, and oblige,

OUTLOOK SUBSCRIBER.

It is always difficult to recommend books not on technical topics, where expert knowledge is the desideratum, because what inspires one is dull to another. From the following catalogue our correspondent can make a selection of valuable books, though we advise him not to spend the whole fifty dollars in one purchase. Buy a few books at a time: Sermons by Bushnell, Brooks, Martineau, Munger, Watson; Wendell Phillips's Speeches; Emerson's Essays; Van Dyke, "Gospel for an Age of Doubt;" H. W. Beecher, "Lectures on Preaching;" Dr. Watson, "Lectures on Preaching;" Phillips Brooks, "Lectures on Preaching;" Storrs, "Divine Origin of Christianity;" Brace, "Gesta Christi;" Caird, "Evolution of Religion;" Stanley, "Christian Institutions;" Fremantle, "World the Subject of Redemption;" James, "Psychology;" Halleck, "Education of the Central Nervous System;" Sayce, "Higher Criticism and the Verdict of the Monuments;" W. R. Smith, "Prophets of Israel;" Le Conte, "Evolution in Relation to Religious Thought;" Matheson, "The Psalmist and the Scientist," "The Spiritual Development of St. Paul;" Harris, "Moral Evolution;" Abbott, "The Evolution of Christianity," "Christianity and Social Problems;" Gordon, "The Christ of To-Day;" Gladden, "Ruling Ideas of the Present Age;" Hodges, "Faith and Social Service;" Harris, "Moral Evolution;" Bradford, "Heredity and Christian Problems;" Horder, W. G., "The Poet's Bible;" Palgrave, "Treasury of Sacred Song;" Whiton, "Gloria Patri;" George Adam Smith, "Isaiah;" Storrs, "Preaching Without Notes."

In a discussion the following question was referred to you: In Atlanta, Ga., and other large cities of the South are white teachers, sent from the North to teach the negroes, regarded as intruders and treated with indignity or ostracized? Is the feeling of the South still very bitter against the North on account of the abolition of slavery, and do the Southerners want the negro kept in a state of ignorance?

H. A. G.

White teachers sent from the North are not treated as intruders, nor is the feeling of the South still bitter against the North on account of the abolition of slavery, nor do the Southerners wish the negroes kept in a state of ignorance. If they wished them kept in a state of ignorance, their course would be extraordinary, for they have organized, established, and maintained, in spite of their poverty, an efficient public-school system for their education. It would be difficult to find a minority large enough to count who regret the abolition of slavery, or who would desire to see it re-established. Of course there is prejudice in the South against Northern teachers who are coming thither on a missionary errand, much as there would be prejudice in the North against teachers from any other section, assuming that the Northern cities were missionary grounds and either could not or would not educate their own poor. Two causes have aggravated this prejudice: First, in many instances, a lack of tact on the part of Northern teachers; secondly, a radical difference in the point of view of the Southern and the Northern whites. The Northern teacher affiliates with her pupils, eats at the same table with them, lives under the same roof with them, treats them as equals. The Southerner is probably as hostile now as ever to anything approximating social equality with the negro, and absolutely refuses to live in the same house or sit at the same table with him, or travel in the same cars, or live in the same hotel, or go to the same church, or attend the same school, under any conditions which imply social equality. The reasons for this, so far as there are any, we do not here consider, but the same objections to social equality are often manifested in the North.

I notice that in your Notes and Queries for November 7 it is stated that down to the time of Jerome, who died in 420, the presbyters of Alexandria enthroned their own bishop, without any other ceremony of ordination. This is an error. Jerome says that this custom prevailed down to the episcopate of Dionysius, which ended 265. The usage, then, at Jerome's death, had been extinct for 155 years. In his time presbyterial ordination, in every form, had become obsolete, "for," says he, "what can a bishop do which a presbyter cannot also do, except ordain?" Your argument is good if Jerome's report is correct, but it protracts the earlier order a century and a half too long.

C. C. S.

We accept correction as to the expiry of the Alexandrian custom, but there is no reason to doubt the correctness of Jerome's report. That the earlier, and what Romanists and Anglicans would now regard as loose, notions of ordination continued into the fifth century, Dr. Hatch shows by quoting the enactment of a Gallican council that irregular ordinations should be held invalid unless objections were settled by arrangement.

1. Please comment on Hebrews iv., 15. (How could a sinless one sympathize with a sinner? Never have I seen anything satisfying on this.) 2. How can one be sure he is doing the right work?

G. W.

1. Compare chapter v., 7–10. Sympathy with him who is to be saved is an essential qualification of him who saves. All sympathy with another depends on the imagination, which puts yourself in his place. One who has been tempted but has not fallen can sympathize thus with the tempted one who has fallen; can imagine his distress; can, as we say "realize" his condition. The passages referred to show that this is true of Christ, and commends him to those that seek a sympathizing Saviour. 2. When one is sure that he has done his best to find his proper work, he may be sure that the work he has found is, at least for the time being, the proper work for him.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., New York.

I want, as a minister, to gain some influence with the young men who are outside the church; with such object in view, I thought of forming a class in my village to teach political economy or social science or sociology, or some such subject. I desire to choose the subject that would be most interesting and useful. Can you suggest to me the best subject and the best text-book upon it? The latter would need to be simple and inexpensive.

SUBSCRIBER.

From some experience in this line, we think that John Fiske's "Civil Government in the United States" will prove as good as anything to start on At least you should examine it. Professor Ely's "Problems of To-Day" and his "Political Economy" can also be strongly recommended. In these books you will find others suggested. As to expense, it is not necessary for every member of the class to own a book.

If "A. M. S." will write to Madame Delacroix, 16 Rue Augustin Normand, Le Havre, France, he or she may possibly obtain the desired information Her husband had a brother who was an artist, and may be the one referred to.

F. E. G.

Home Parties

And Church Sociable Ideas

Are made a constant feature in The Ladies' Home Journal. Experienced home and church entertainers originate and furnish them. A page of "Home Parties" is in the November issue; in the December number there will be two pages. Succeeding pages in other issues, all new ideas.

One Dollar for One Year

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY, PHILADELPHIA

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

NEW BOOKS

ON THE TRAIL OF DON QUIXOTE.

By AUGUST F. JACCACI. With 130 Illustrations by Daniel Vierge. 12mo, $2.50.

This volume is in a sense the outgrowth of a long friendship between the artist, who was born and bred a Spaniard, and the author, who is familiar from boyhood and from recent travel with the province of La Mancha. The book describes Don Quixote's country as it is to-day, with incidental allusions to such scenes as are acknowledged and easily recognizable.

THE EDGE OF THE ORIENT.

By ROBERT HOWARD RUSSELL. With 130 Illustrations, chiefly from photographs. 12mo, $2.00.

"An enthusiastic story of most interesting journeyings. It is graceful, light-hearted, yet giving with great earnestness the traditions and customs of the people between its sunny covers."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

SPRIGHTLY ROMANCE OF MARSAC.

By MOLLY ELLIOT SEAWELL. Illustrated by Gustave Verbeek. 12mo, $1.25.

"A particularly bright little tale. It is a tale of the Latin Quarter. The movement is brisk, the manner bright and good humored."—Philadelphia Times.

THE LAST QUARTER CENTURY IN THE UNITED STATES.

1870–1895. By E. BENJAMIN ANDREWS, President of Brown University. With 350 Illustrations, 2 vols. 8vo, $6.00.

President Andrews' work is absolutely unique. Never before have the many history-making events of this period been gathered together in a historical narrative by a competent hand. Since its publication in SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE the History has been thoroughly revised and increased in size, almost one-half, with 100 additional illustrations.

"He has undertaken a stupendous task and has executed it with a fulness of knowledge and a grasp of events that are admirable."—Boston Beacon.

MY VILLAGE.

By E. BOYD SMITH. With nearly 150 Illustrations from drawing by the author. 12mo, $2.00.

"Persons of artistic taste will appreciate and enjoy 'My Village,' a collection of illustrations and pen-pictures of French peasant life. The author has made a study of nature and humanity, and has the faculty of entering into hearty sympathy with the subject that he treats."—Boston Sat. Eve. Gazette.

IN OLE VIRGINIA.

By THOMAS NELSON PAGE. With 24 full-page Illustrations by A. B. Frost, Howard Pyle, W. T. Smedley, C. S. Reinhart, A. Castaigne, and B. W. Clinedinst. 12mo, $2.50.

This handsome volume contains Mr. Page's famous stories of Southern life—"Marse Chan," "Meh Lady," "Polly," "Unc' Edinburg," "Ole Stracted," and "No Haid Pawn"—with many beautiful illustrations.

LOVE IN OLD CLOATHES,

And Other Stories. By H. C. BUNNER. With 12 full-page Illustrations by A. Castaigne, W. T. Smedley, and Orson Lowell. 12mo, $1.50.

"There are seven sketches in the volume, and not one of them without conspicuous merit."—N. Y. Times.

THAT FIRST AFFAIR,

And Other Sketches. By J. A. MITCHELL, author of "Amos Judd." Illustrated by Gibson, Frost, Richards, and the author. 12mo, $1.25.

Mr. Mitchell's gift as a story-teller lies in the direction of fancy and satire, mingled with delicate sentiment. The five stories in this volume are different in motive but of equally surprising workmanship.

VASARI'S LIVES OF THE PAINTERS.

Lives of Seventy of the most Eminent Painters, Sculptors, and Architects. Edited and Annotated in the Light of Recent Discoveries, by E. H. and E. W. BLASHFIELD and A. A. HOPKINS. Richly illustrated with 48 Photogravure Reproductions of Masterpieces of Italian Painting and Sculpture. Illustrated edition limited to 500 copies for America. 4 vols. Large 8vo, $15.00 net.

Vasari's classic work has long called for systematic editing in English, and the present editors have for three years been engaged in preparing what must long remain the definitive English edition of this work. The annotations are based on newly-discovered documents and modern research of all kinds, while an additional feature of the work is a series of critical characterizations of the various painters, sculptors, and architects.

SENTIMENTAL TOMMY.

The Story of His Boyhood. By JAMES M. BARRIE. With 11 full-page Illustrations. 12mo, $1.50.

"Those who know a prize of life when they find it, and who care for the ultimate charm of a bit of pure literature, will read and reread Mr. Barrie's masterpiece."
—HAMILTON W. MABIE.

MARGARET OGILVY.

By her son, JAMES M. BARRIE. With Portrait. 12mo, $1.25.

"These books are certain greatly to enhance his already great reputation, and to put him beyond dispute at the head of the younger men of letters in this country."—Dr. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL.

THE ROGUE'S MARCH.

A Romance. By E. W. HORNUNG. 12mo, $1.50.

"A singularly attractive romance. A stirring book it is, and one which will please all those who like stirring adventures."—New York Herald.

THE IVORY SERIES. New Volumes.

A Book of Martyrs. By CORNELIA ATWOOD PRATT.
One of the Visconti. By EVA WILDER BRODHEAD.
Each, 16mo, 75 cents.

WOMEN OF COLONIAL AND REVOLUTIONARY TIMES.

In this popular historical series a new volume has just been issued on Mercy Warren, sister of James Otis, written by Alice Brown. There are now four volumes, each of which presents a graphic portrait of a distinguished colonial woman, and a vivid picture of the time in which she lived.

Mercy Warren. By ALICE BROWN.
Eliza Pinckney. By HARRIOTT HORRY RAVENEL.
Dolly Madison. By MAUD WILDER GOODWIN.
Margaret Winthrop. By ALICE MORSE EARLE.

Each with Portrait or Facsimile, 12mo, $1.25. The set, 4 volumes in a box, $5.00.

COLONIAL DAYS IN OLD NEW YORK

By ALICE MORSE EARLE. 12mo, $1.25.

"A pleasant picture of early times. Mrs. Earle makes the past live again for us."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

HOW TO LISTEN TO MUSIC.

By HENRY E. KREHBIEL. Illustrated. 12mo, $1.25 net.

Mr. Krehbiel's book fills a genuine need, telling in plain untechnical terms how to enjoy music intelligently, explaining simply the elements of music, and analyzing clearly the various musical forms.

MRS. CLIFF'S YACHT.

By FRANK R. STOCKTON. Illustrated. 12mo, $1.50.

"The characteristics of style that have made Frank R. Stockton one of our most popular writers of fiction are exhibited at their best in his latest novel. It is one of his best works."—Boston Advertiser.

THE SENSE OF BEAUTY.

Being the Outlines of Æsthetic Theory. By GEORGE SANTAYANA, Lecturer at Harvard University. 12mo, $1.50.

PROBLEMS OF MODERN DEMOCRACY.

Political and Economic Essays. By E. L. GODKIN. 8vo, $2.00.

"The most vital issues of the time are dealt with by one who is not only a master of vigorous and polished English, but who has given strong thought and earnest study to the questions."—The Interior.

A TRAGIC IDYL.

By PAUL BOURGET. 12mo, $1.50.

"Its cleverness and brilliancy of style are its greatest qualities. It is suggestive of Daudet's 'Kings in Exile,' with greater polish of style."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

FRANCE UNDER LOUIS XIV.

(Le Grand Siècle.) Translated from the French of EMILE BOURGEOIS. With 22 Photogravures and 500 other Illustrations. Imperial 8vo, beautifully bound, $15.00.

An altogether notable work, based upon the writings of Voltaire, Saint Simon, Madame de Sévigné, La Bruyère, the Princess Palatine, etc., etc. It is distinguished alike for the historical value of its contents, the interest and charm of its style, and for the richness and profuseness of its illustrative material, which has been drawn from every source, public and private.

JUVENILES

SONGS OF CHILDHOOD.

The Field–de Koven Song Book. Verses by EUGENE FIELD. Music by REGINALD DE KOVEN and others. Large 8vo, $2.00.

Over twenty of Mr. Field's lyrics are here set to charmingly appropriate music by Reginald de Koven, the most popular of American song writers, and other well known composers.

THE COURT OF KING ARTHUR.

Stories from the Land of the Round Table. By W. H. FROST, author of "The Wagner Story Book." Illustrated by S. R. Burleigh. 12mo, $1.50.

Mr. Frost has had the happy idea of making a journey to the different places connected with the Arthurian romances by history or legend, and of relating the ever new Round Table Tales on their sites, to the same little girl, now somewhat older, to whom he told his charming Wagner stories.

THE LOG OF A PRIVATEERSMAN.

By HARRY COLLINGWOOD. With 12 full-page Illustrations by W. I. Rainey. 12mo, $1.50.

NEW BOOKS BY G. A. HENTY.

At Agincourt. A Tale of the White Hoods of Paris.

With Cochrane the Dauntless. A Tale of the Exploits of Lord Cochrane in South American Waters.

On the Irrawaddy. A Story of the first Burmese War.

Each fully illustrated, 12mo, $1.50.

"Mr. Henty's books never fail to interest."
—London Athenæum.

THROUGH SWAMP AND GLADE.

A Tale of the Seminole War. By KIRK MUNROE. Illustrated by Victor Perard. (White Conqueror Series.) 12mo, $1.25.

"The leading events as well as leading characters are true to history. Kirk Munroe is at home in such a story and his book has no dull pages."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

TO TELL THE KING THE SKY IS FALLING.

By SHEILA E. BRAINE. Illustrated by Alice B. Woodward, 12mo, $1.75.

HANS BRINKER;

or, The Silver Skates. By MARY MAPES DODGE. New Amsterdam Edition. With over 100 Illustrations by Allen B. Doggett. 12mo, $2.50.

Mrs. Dodge's ever-popular story will appeal afresh to old and new readers in this handsome new edition. The pictures are the result of a special trip to Holland, and illustrate the book most attractively.

AMERICAN BOYS' BOOK OF SPORT

Out-door Games for All Seasons. By DANIEL C. BEARD. With over 360 Illustrations by the author. 8vo, $2.50.

This is an entirely new book by Mr. Beard, containing altogether new matter of great interest to all young lovers of sport. It is a companion volume to the author's well known "American Boy's Handy Book," and will undoubtedly rival that famous work in popularity as it does in interest.

CHILDREN'S STORIES IN AMERICAN LITERATURE. 1860–1896.

By HENRIETTA CHRISTIAN WRIGHT. 12mo, $1.25.

A new volume continuing Miss Wright's former delightful books of stories for children in American literature and American history.

⁂ SCRIBNER'S BULLETIN OF HOLIDAY BOOKS, also ILLUSTRATED LIST OF BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG, will be sent to any address.

MRS. BURTON HARRISON,
ONE OF THE POPULAR WRITERS FOR 1897.

Established 1827. Comes Every Week.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION

The Companion of the Whole Family.

The readers of THE COMPANION for 1897 will enjoy the Contributions of a large number of the most famous men and women of both continents. Unusually attractive are the many brilliant features offered.

Stories for Everybody.

A new and very attractive feature in the volume for 1897 will be six groups of short stories dealing with personal experiences, unusual incidents, and humorous and pathetic events in professional life. The stories are exceptionally fresh in plot and incident, and will be read with eager interest.

Ministers' Stories.

These are delightfully written, and although deeply pathetic, they cheer by their pervading faith in the love of truth and right almost universally found in human character.

A TRUE GENTLEMAN. AARON'S WIFE.	Rev. Frederic Palmer.
A RESCUE.	Rev. Isaac O. Rankin.
A MINISTER'S EXPERIENCE.	Rev. Walter Mitchell.

Reporters' Stories.

The rush and rivalry, the excitement and perplexities, the methods and secrets of newspaperdom are described.

THE BLANKS IN THE "CLARION."	W. D. Quint.
A YOUNG SAVAGE. A LOST SENSATION.	P. Y. Black.
CAMP LOW.	Oscar K. Davis.
A GIRL WHO BECAME A REPORTER.	H. Carruth.

Doctors' Stories.

Tragedies known only to the physician are described in this exceedingly realistic and fascinating group of stories.

A STRANGE EXPERIMENT. AN ODD EXPERIENCE.	Dr. W. A. Hammond.
A WAYSIDE PATIENT.	Dr. C. W. Harwood.
DONG SUN YET.	Dr. Sarah Hughes Graves.

Professors' Stories.

The struggles, trials and gaieties of college life are pictured with the fullest humor, appreciation and sympathy.

THE ANARCHIST.	Prof. Bliss Perry.
TORAZU SAGITA.	A. W. Colton.
IN THE DEAN'S ROOMS.	W. E. Barlow.
THIRD STAGE OF DISCIPLINE.	Prof. H. A. Beers.

Lawyers' Stories.

In this group of stories some phases of legal life are described vividly and with thrilling interest.

STARRY VINT'S DEFENCE.	Homer Greene.
AN OFFICE-BOY'S ADVENTURE.	H. C. Merwin.
THE TOURTELOT CASE.	Stewart Mitchell.
THE LITTLE RIVER MYSTERY.	W. E. Maclellan.

Teachers' Stories.

These narratives breathe the very spirit of school life, and will be found packed with wholesome entertainment.

'TILDY. THE LAST DAY.	Charlotte B. Jordan.
SON'S TRIUMPH.	Mary Brewster Downs.
AN UNCONSCIOUS HERO.	Ethel Maud Colson.

THE COMPANION also announces for 1897, Four Absorbing Serials, Stories of Adventure on Land and Sea, Stories for Boys and Stories for Girls—all profusely illustrated by popular artists. Six Double Holiday Numbers. More than two thousand Articles of Miscellany—Anecdote, Humor, Travel, etc. The timely Editorials, the "Current Events," "Current Topics" and "Nature and Science" Departments give weekly much valuable information in most condensed form.

One of the most beautiful CALENDARS issued this year will be given to each New Subscriber to The Companion.

It is made up of Four Charming Pictures in color, beautifully executed. Its size is 10 by 24 inches. The subjects are delightfully attractive. This Calendar is published exclusively by The Youth's Companion and could not be sold in Art Stores for less than $1.00.

52 Weeks for $1.75. Send for Full Prospectus.

12=Color Calendar FREE.

New Subscribers who will cut out this slip and send it at once with name and address and $1.75 will receive :

FREE—The Youth's Companion every week from the time subscription is received till January 1, 1897;

FREE—Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year's Double Numbers;

FREE—The Companion's 4-page Calendar for 1897, a beautifully colored souvenir. An ornament for any mantel or centre-table or writing-desk. The most costly gift of its kind The Companion has ever offered;

And The Companion Fifty-two Weeks, a full year, to January 1, 1898.

388

See Special Offers.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION, 201 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass.

The Century Co's Christmas Suggestions

BOOKS FOR GROWN-UPS

American Highways.

BY Prof. N. S. Shaler, setting forth the gospel of good roads. Practical and suggestive. Every bicycler especially will appreciate it. 300 pages, illustrated. $1.50.

Quotations for Occasions.

A collection of 2500 clever and appropriate quotations for use on dinner menus, invitations, programs, etc., compiled by Katharine B. Wood. Rough paper, $1.50.

Electricity for Everybody.

A popular book on electricity, explaining it in an untechnical way. By Philip Atkinson. $1.50.

The Century Cook Book.

The standard cook book of the present day, containing a remarkable collection of photographs of the dishes described. The most complete work of its kind ever published. 600 pages, $2.00.

The Thumb-Nail Series.

Small Books in Dainty Leather Bindings.

By George Wharton Edwards.

"Break o' Day." Stories of the Maine coast. Illus. $1.00.

"Thumb-Nail Sketches." Quaint stories of adventure. $1.00.

By Various Authors.

"Tracings." 200 apothegms by E. Scott O'Connor. $1.00.

"Writing to Rosina." A novelette, by William Henry Bishop. $1.00.

"A Madeira Party." Stories by Dr. S. Weir Mitchell. $1.00.

Rudyard Kipling's Jungle Books.

"Mr. Kipling's best bid for immortality." "The Jungle Book" and "The Second Jungle Book" Illus. $1.50 each. The two, in uniform binding, in a box, $3.00.

New Novels.

"The Cat and the Cherub." Stories by Chester Bailey Fernald. $1.25.

"Stories of a Sanctified Town." By Lucy S. Furman. Tales of a Kentucky community. $1.25.

"Gold." A Dutch-Indian novel, by Annie Linden. $1.25.

"The Metropolitans." A satire on New York society, by Jeanie Drake $1.25.

"The Wonderful Wheel." A romance of Louisiana, by Mary Tracy Earle. $1.25.

"Sonny." Stories, by Ruth McEnery Stuart. $1.00.

The New Edition of General Grant's Memoirs.

With notes by Colonel F. D. Grant; new illustrations, new type. Two volumes, cloth, $5.00.

The New Edition of Theo. Roosevelt's "Ranch Life."

With Remington's famous illustrations. Formerly issued at $5.00. New edition, $2.50.

James Whitcomb Riley's "Poems Here at Home."

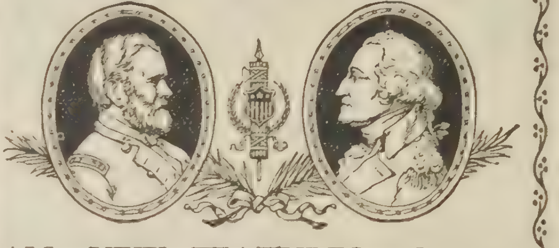
A choice collection. Illustrated by Kemble. Cloth, $1.50; vellum, $2.50.

Art Books.

Fully described in The Century Co.'s catalogue; sent free on request.

A YEAR'S SUBSCRIPTION TO ONE OR BOTH OF THESE MAGAZINES.

The Century



ALL NEW FEATURES IN 1897.

A Great Novel of the American Revolution.

"Hugh Wynne, Free Quaker, Sometime Brevet Lieut.-Colonel on the Staff of his Excellency General Washington." By Dr. S. Weir Mitchell. Illustrated by Howard Pyle.

"Campaigning with Grant,"

BY GEN. HORACE PORTER.

Personal Reminiscences of Grant the Man and Soldier, by his Aide and Secretary. In preparation for many years.

These are only two of the features of the new volume of THE CENTURY which begins with November. New subscribers ($4.00 a year), who commence with December, the Christmas issue, can have November free. The Christmas number is for sale everywhere after Nov. 28th: 35 cents.

St: Nicholas

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

"THE best of all children's magazines," is the universal verdict on St. Nicholas. In 1897 it will have one of its splendid programs, "bright, healthy, breezy, and not in the least goody-goody." Everything in St. Nicholas is illustrated. It is an influence for good in thousands of homes. Is it in yours?

How to use St. Nicholas for Christmas.

Send us $3.00 and we will send you November and December numbers free, entering a year's subscription from January. We will also send a handsome certificate which you can give at Christmas, with November and December numbers,— the numbers from January for a full year will go to the recipient of your gift,— a monthly reminder of the donor. The Christmas number is a Christmas book in itself, for only 25 cents.

THE ART BOOK OF THE YEAR.

MODERN FRENCH MASTERS

Superbly Illustrated with Engravings.

CONTAINING twenty articles on the most famous modern French painters, Gérôme, Puvis de Chavannes, Carolus-Duran, Meissonier, Rousseau, Corot, Diaz, Millet, etc., written by their American pupils and admirers, including Kenyon Cox, Will H. Low, J. Carroll Beckwith, E. H. Blashfield, and others. Edited by Professor J. C. Van Dyke. Illustrated by wood-engravings and by half tones on fine paper; royal 8vo, 300 pages, $10.00.

Sold by all booksellers, or sent, post-paid, by the publishers.

BOOKS FOR YOUNG FOLKS

The Century Book of Famous Americans.

By Elbridge S. Brooks. The story of a young people's pilgrimage to the homes of Washington, Lincoln, Grant, Jefferson, Franklin, Webster, etc. 250 pages, 250 illus., $1.50.

The Century Book for Young Americans.

By Elbridge S. Brooks. Telling in story form what every boy and girl ought to know about the government. 200 illus., $1.50.

Hero Tales from American History.

By Theodore Roosevelt and Henry Cabot Lodge. Graphic descriptions. 300 pages, illus., $1.50.

J. T. Trowbridge's New Book.

"The Prize Cup." Will interest healthy boys. Illus., $1.50.

A Story of the Time of Christ.

"The Swordmaker's Son." By W. O. Stoddard. Illus., $1.50.

A New Arabian Nights.

"Sindbad, Smith & Co." By Albert Stearns. Illus., $1.50.

A New Edition of an "Uncle Remus" Book.

"Daddy Jake." By Joel Chandler Harris. Stories of Brer B'ar, Brer Fox, etc., told by Uncle Remus. Illustrated by Kemble. New edition, $1.25.

A Story Life of Napoleon.

"A Boy of the First Empire." By Elbridge S. Brooks. $1.50.

By Mary Mapes Dodge.

"Donald and Dorothy," $1.50.
"The Land of Pluck," $1.50.
"When Life is Young," $1.25.
"Baby World," 300 illus., $1.00.

By Mrs. C. V. Jamison.

"Lady Jane," illus., $1.50.
"Toinette's Philip," illus., $1.50.

The Brownie Books.

By Palmer Cox. Children "read them to pieces." $1.50 each.

St. Nicholas Songs.

The music book of the day. 112 songs by 32 composers, beautifully illustrated. Boards, $1.25.

The Latest Novelties.

"The Shadow Show." By Peter S. Newell. $1.00.

"Gobolinks for Young and Old." By Ruth McEnery Stuart and Albert Bigelow Paine. Grotesque pictures with nonsense verses. $1.00.

"Rhymes of the States." By Garrett Newkirk. Illustrated. $1.00.

"Paper Doll Poems." Pictures and verses by Pauline King. 75 cents.

Send for Catalogue.

A copy of the beautifully illustrated thirty-two page catalogue of The Century Co.'s publications will be sent to any address, free.

The Century Co: Union Square: New York

A Great Day at Hampton

From a Special Correspondent

On Thursday afternoon of last week the new Trade School Building at Hampton Institute was dedicated with very interesting exercises. The Church Congress, which was in session at Norfolk, came over as a body and was taken to Hampton Institute, where the new trade school was dedicated. Bishop Randolph opened the services in the chapel with prayer. Professor Frissell received the guests with great courtesy, and after a brief explanation of the uses to which the sixty buildings at Hampton were put in the education of nearly one thousand students who are gathered there, introduced several of their former students, to whose account of their work in the far South and distant West the audience listened with deep interest. Dr. Frissell said that Hampton had sent out about one thousand graduates and as many undergraduates, who were working as teachers, mechanics, cultivators, and leaders in civilization among their people.

Mr. Mabie, following the graduates who had spoken, said that surely no institution was less in need of outside voices, but he would express the mission of Hampton in just one word. It had translated education into emancipation; it had emancipated two races out of weakness, and had by education brought them into manhood and power. Character and education are destiny, and carry with them the whole fate of man, and the tragedy of life is become the tragedy, not of the bad, but of the half-trained man, the man whose will is right but who is not able to hold in his hand the advantage which should be his. After a brilliant review of the power of Germany evidenced in its thinking bayonet, its commercial grasp, its literary power, all the result of scientific training, the speaker concluded by a noble tribute to General Armstrong, and to an institution which honors labor by teaching the nobility of manual training, an institution which, through industrial work, thoroughly done, had accomplished the emancipation of two races and showed another the true path to freedom and to manhood.

Taking Bishop Potter's place, Dr. Huntington, of Grace Church, said that it was not always wise or easy to follow bishops. It was not the first time he had followed Bishop Potter, and a Southern bishop had misled him by saying that he was to come to Hampton to dedicate a monument to General Armstrong. He had thought to see a statue, and he found a city. General Armstrong stood first in the rank of American founders, and had left here a civitas whose founder had achieved all that the greatest American could have desired—a well-rounded education, one of heart and head and hand. Why, he asked, does our civil power undertake only one of these? A trade-school puts into the hand a tool, and the tool in the trained hand makes all the difference in the world between civilization and barbarism. We have spoken of German soldiers, but match these with a million men with the implements of democracy in their hands, and which is worth most to a nation? Speaking of the public schools, Dr. Huntington said that because Christians cannot agree as to how it is to be done, the heart is left untrained as well as the hand. Commending the free trade-schools of New York, the speaker said that Colonel Auchmuty stood side by side with General Armstrong. The former could not bear to see American lads loafing on the corners because they are not allowed to learn trades. Unless we have free trades no free trade is possible. Hampton, with other trade-schools, opened new doors into American life. The ideal and the real had been discussed in the Congress. General Armstrong had seen the heavenly vision and had realized it in fact. Heavenly visions have their mandatory side, and there is something in each ideal to which we may not be disobedient, something which done may make real the brightest dream that can visit the child of God.

One of the buildings of the new trade-schools was dedicated with appropriate exercises, presided over by Dr. McVickar, at which Mr. Booker T. Washington was the speaker.

The students sang plantation songs, and in the soft evening glow the boat which carried the visitors back to Norfolk swept into the stream to the romantic sound of their

"Swing low, sweet chariot."

W.

Ian Maclaren as a Messenger of Peace and Good Will

Interest in the "Maclaren Life Creed" is so great that a plan is proposed for utilizing it as a means of promoting a world-wide spirit of good will and Christian fellowship. An address is to be presented "to Dr. John Watson, and through him to the English-speaking peoples of the world," previous to his departure for England, suggesting the adoption of the Life Creed "as a bond of universal union among them, symbolizing a common desire and hope that all may stand heart to heart and shoulder to shoulder against every form of evil and in favor of every effort to promote the solidarity of the human race."

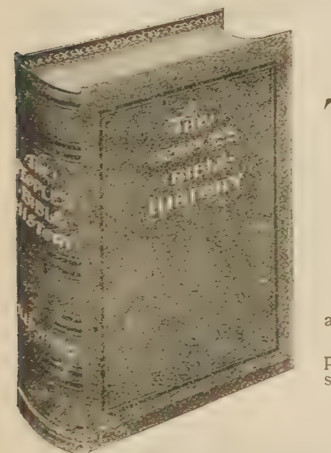
All who wish to sign this address are requested to send their names to "Brotherhood of Christian Unity, care of the Church Union, 18 Wall Street, New York." If we have been touched and uplifted by Dr. Watson's writings, let us take this opportunity to express our gratitude, which will also extend his influence. Let us get other names to send with ours. A sheet of paper has been prepared with a suitable heading for this purpose, which will be mailed to any one desiring it, if a two cent-stamp is inclosed with the order. Address as above.

THEODORE F. SEWARD.

A Brain and Nerve Food

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate

Dr. O. WORTHLY, Lancaster, N. H., says: "I have used it in cases requiring brain and nerve food as a result of overwork, attended with exhaustion and loss of strength, with impaired digestion, with good results."



..The Proof of the Truth..

THE PEOPLE'S BIBLE HISTORY

The most complete work of the kind ever attempted
The most interesting and instructive book of the age

It gives the facts as authenticated by recent discoveries relative to the production of the Bible as they have never been known until to-day.

From the beginning of the Rt. Hon. Wm. Ewart Gladstone's introduction to the finis at the end of 942 pages (popular edition) not a word lacks interest. The whole is so treated as to be a connected and consecutive narrative of the Bible History by the world's best authorities.

THE CONTRIBUTORS AND THEIR SUBJECTS:

Rt. Hon. Wm. Ewart Gladstone—Introduction.
Rev. A. H. Sayce, M.A., D.D., LL.D.—Literature of the Old Testament.
Rev. Samuel Ives Curtiss, D.D.—Manuscripts of the Old Testament.
Rev. Frederic W. Farrar, D.D., F.R.S.—From the Creation to the Dawn of Human History.
Rev. Elmer H. Capen, D.D.—From the Call of Abraham to the Bondage of Israel.
Rev. Frank W. Gunsaulus, D.D.—From the Birth of Moses to the Beginnings of Freedom.
Rev. George F. Pentecost, D.D.—From the Patriarchal Tent to the Priestly Tabernacle.
Rev. R. S. MacArthur, D.D.—From the Invasion of Canaan to the Last of the Judges.
Rev. Martyn Summerbell, D.D.—From the Rise of the Monarchy to its Decline.
Rev. Frank M. Bristol, D.D.—From the Division of the Empire to the Last of the Kings.
Rev. W. T. Moore, LL.D.—From the Captivity to the Return of the Exiles.
Rev. Edward Everett Hale, D.D.—From the Close of the Old Era to the Beginning of the New.
Rev. Joseph Agar Beet, D.D.—The Literature of the New Testament.
Rev. Casper Rene Gregory, PH.D., D.TH., LL.D.—The Manuscripts of the New Testament.
Rev. William Cleaver Wilkinson, D.D.—From the Birth in Bethlehem to the Crucifixion on Calvary.
Rev. Samuel Hart, D.D.—From the Descent from the Cross to the Ascent to the Throne.
Rev. J. Monro Gibson, D.D.—From the Outpouring of the Spirit to the Death of St. Paul.
Rev. George C. Lorimer, LL.D.—From the Fall of Jerusalem to the Triumph of Christianity.

For the Bible student or the lover of history, or for the merely casual reader, there is nothing so thoroughly interesting, authoritative, and convincing as this book.

The Editor of The Guardian, London, England:

Among the writers is Rev. Frank W. Gunsaulus, of Chicago, whose thoughts on the burning bush have much of the originality and force of which such brilliant examples are to be found in the sermons of Bishop Phillips Brooks. . . . Much use, of course, is made here and elsewhere of the modern instances and historic parallels in which Stanley also revelled. . . . "Pilgrims with Mayflower compacts in their cabins owe to Pharaoh their glorious exile. . . . In all comparative study of crowned heads, Pharaoh appears to be most like a seventeenth century Charles I., or an eighteenth century Marie Antoinette."

Every editor of prominence has reviewed this book and pronounced it as perfect. The clergy is unanimous in praise.

THE POPULAR EDITION:

There are 942 pages, 7x10 inches, and 57 full-page illustrations; 7 maps and 784,000 words.

Bound in Cloth, - $4.50
" half levant, 5.00
" full levant, gilt edges, handmade, 6.00

THE QUARTO EDITION:

1,260 pages, 200 full-page illustrations, 7 maps.

In one volume, full levant, gilt edges, - $15.00
In two volumes, full levant, tufted, gilded, - 20.00

A limited number of select, intelligent, and industrious men and women of approved character may be favored with pleasant, permanent, and profitable positions in some one of the departments of this grand good work.

For Xmas THE BEST PRESENT FOR VALUE, INTEREST, AND REMEMBRANCE IS The People's Bible History

The book is for sale through agents and by subscriptions only. Send for 48-page illustrated prospectus free

Address: HENRY O. SHEPARD CO. ❧ ❧ ❧ 212 and 214 Monroe Street, Chicago

Stone & Kimball's Announcement

By WILLIAM CANTON, the "Poet-Laureate of Childhood"

W. V.: HER BOOK. Illustrated by BROCK. Decorative cover by, J. H. TWACHTMAN. 16mo, $1.25.

THE INVISIBLE PLAYMATE. Decorative cover by J. H. TWACHTMAN. 16mo, $1.00.

By GILBERT PARKER

A ROMANY OF THE SNOWS. A continuation of "An Adventurer of the North," and the latest existing records of Pretty Pierre. 12mo, $1.25.

AN ADVENTURER OF THE NORTH. Uniform with preceding. 12mo, $1.25.

PIERRE AND HIS PEOPLE. New edition. Uniform with preceding. 12mo, $1.25.

WHEN VALMOND CAME TO PONTIAC. New edition, uniform with preceding. 12mo, $1.50.

A LOVER'S DIARY. Frontispiece by WILL H. LOW. 12mo, $1.25.

By CLINTON ROSS

THE SCARLET COAT. A Tale of the Siege of Yorktown. 16mo, $1.25.

THE PUPPET. A Tale of Adventure. 16mo, $1.25.

By LOUIS EVAN SHIPMAN

URBAN DIALOGUES. Illustrated by C. D. Gibson. 12mo, $1.25.

By CHARLES CHARRINGTON

LADY BRAMBER'S GHOST. 16mo, $1.00.

A STURDY BEGGAR. 16mo, $1.25.

A NEW BOOK FOR BOYS

By ROBERT OVERTON

FRIEND OR FORTUNE. Illustrated by F. C. YOHN. 12mo, $1.25.

A NEW STORY

By JOHN STRANGE WINTER

GRIP. A Story of the Army in France and of Life in the Galleys. 16mo, $1.25.

By SHAN F. BULLOCK

RING O' RUSHES. A Book of Irish Tales. 16mo, $1.25.

By MARIA LOUISE POOL

BOSS AND OTHER DOGS. 16mo, $1.25.

By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS

WITH THE BAND. A Book of Ballads. 16mo, $1.25.

By L. COPE CORNFORD

CAPTAIN JACOBUS. Illustrated by HERBERT DENMAN. 16mo, $1.25.

By CAROLYN WELLS

AT THE SIGN OF THE SPHINX. A Book of Charades. 16mo, $1.25.

ANONYMOUS

JAMES, or VIRTUE REWARDED. 12mo, $1.50.

ALL EXPENSES PAID. Small 16mo, $1.00.

By JOHN D. BARRY

MADEMOISELLE BLANCHE. 16mo, $1.50.

STONE & KIMBALL call the attention of the book-loving public to the first Holiday appearance of their complete set of the works of

EDGAR ALLAN POE

Edited by EDMUND CLARENCE STEDMAN and GEORGE E. WOODBERRY, and illustrated in photogravure by A. E. STERNER. 10 vols., $15.00 per set, net. Bound in half crushed levant, $40.00 per set, net. Large paper edition, $50.00 per set, net. (Only a few remain.)

STONE & KIMBALL, New York

Dodd, Mead & Company's New Books

SUITABLE ILLUSTRATED BOOKS FOR HOLIDAY PRESENTS

Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush. By IAN MACLAREN. Illustrated Holiday Edition. With 75 reproductions of photographs. In decorated cloth binding with gilt top, $2.00.

Love's Demesne. A Garland of Love-Poems from many sources, gathered by GEORGE H. ELLWANGER. In two volumes. $2.50.

Peg Woffington. By CHARLES READE. Cloth, gilt edges, $2.00. With illustrations reproduced in photogravure, cover design, and title-page, all by George Wharton Edwards.

A Window in Thrums. By J. M. BARRIE. Crown 8vo, in handsome binding. $2.00. Illustrated with about seventy-five photographs.

Richelieu. A Drama. By E. BULWER LYTTON. With illustrations. Cover in full gold, gilt edges, $2.00.

18th Century Vignettes. By AUSTIN DOBSON. Third Series. 12mo, cloth, with portraits, $2.00.

Legends of the Virgin and Christ. By H. A. GUERBER. With illustrations from the old masters. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.50.

The Days of Auld Lang Syne. By IAN MACLAREN. Illustrated Holiday Edition. With 75 reproductions of photographs taken in Drumtochty by Clifton Johnson. In decorated cloth binding with gilt top, $2.00.

A Book of Christmas Verse. With illustrations by Walter Crane. Edited by H. C. Beeching, M.D. Cloth, full gilt, 12mo, $2.00.

Dragons and Cherry Blossoms. By Mrs. ROBERT C. MORRIS. With numerous illustrations by Thomas F. Moessner. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

SUGGESTIONS FROM SANTA CLAUS, FOR YOUNGER READERS

Gypsy's Sowing and Reaping. By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS WARD. With illustrations by Mary Fairman Clark. Large 12mo, $1.50.

Witch Winnie in Holland. By ELIZABETH W. CHAMPNEY. With illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

A Little Girl in Old New York. By AMANDA M. DOUGLAS. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

The Mistress of Sherburne. By AMANDA M. DOUGLAS. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

We Ten. By BARBARA YECHTON. 12mo, cloth, illustrated, $1.50.

In Honor's Cause. By GEORGE MANVILLE FENN. With many illustrations. Large 12mo, $1.50.

Wallypug of Why. A Fanciful Story. By C. E. FARROW. With 65 illustrations by Harry and Dorothy Furniss. 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

A FEW WORKS IN BELLES LETTRES

Paris in the Terror. The Diary of a Citizen of Paris during the "Terror." By EDMOND BIRE. Translated and Edited by John De Villiers. In two volumes. 8vo, with portrait, $7.50.

Essays on Books and Culture. By HAMILTON WRIGHT MABIE, author of "My Study Fire," "Essays on Nature and Culture," etc., etc. 16mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

The Old Testament and Modern Life. By the Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE, author of "Tennyson, his Life and Work," "A Primer of English Literature," etc. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

Charlotte Brontë and Her Circle. By CLEMENT K. SHORTER. With portraits. Large 12mo, cloth, about 500 pages, $2.50.

The Story of My Life. By AUGUSTUS J. C. HARE. Illustrated with 145 woodcuts and 18 photogravures. 8vo, cloth, 2 vols. $7.50.

Memoirs of Signor Arditi. An Autobiography. With portraits and facsimiles of autographs. Cloth, $3.50.

My Long Life. An Autobiography. By MARY COWDEN CLARKE. Illustrated. Small 8vo, $2.00.

A VALUABLE PRESENT. For the Holidays. An annual subscription to THE BOOKMAN. THE BOOKMAN will be sent to any address in the United States, for one year (twelve numbers), for $2.00. All subscriptions must be accompanied by remittance. Now is the time to subscribe.

The above books are for sale by all booksellers, or will be sent, mail prepaid, on receipt of price by

DODD, MEAD & COMPANY, Publishers - Fifth Ave. and Twenty-first Street, New York

THE LIVING AGE.

Founded by E. Littell in 1844.
A Weekly Magazine
. . of . . FOREIGN PERIODICAL LITERATURE

Giving yearly 3,500 double column octavo pages of matter (making four large volumes) unequalled in quality and quantity.

It is issued Every Saturday and contains

ARTICLES OF STANDARD AND POPULAR INTEREST

THE LIVING AGE embraces the productions of The Ablest Living Writers in all departments of Literature, including Fiction and Poetry, Art, Science and Politics, History, Biography and Discovery; giving an amount of reading unapproached by any other periodical in the world, of the most valuable Literary and Scientific matter of the day.

To still further enhance its value and efficiency, extend its scope and increase its usefulness, the publishers have arranged for the addition of

Several NEW FEATURES for 1897

THESE INCLUDE

1st. The publication of occasional TRANSLATIONS of noteworthy articles from the FRENCH, GERMAN, SPANISH AND ITALIAN REVIEWS and MAGAZINES

2d. The addition of a
MONTHLY SUPPLEMENT
containing three departments, viz.
READINGS FROM AMERICAN MAGAZINES.
READINGS FROM NEW BOOKS.
A LIST OF BOOKS OF THE MONTH.

The number for Nov. 14th, No. 2732, contains the opening chapters of a

New Serial Story by Ivan Tourgenieff, translated especially for THE LIVING AGE.

The same issue contains articles by Gladstone, Castelar, Prof. Flinders Petrie, and other eminent writers;
Translations from the French and Spanish,
with Essays and Reviews from the latest British periodicals.

Also a Thirty-two Page Supplement as described above.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY at $6.00 a year, free of Postage. Single numbers 15 cts.

TO NEW SUBSCRIBERS for the year 1897, remitting before Jan. 1, the weekly numbers of 1896 issued after the receipt of their subscriptions will be sent gratis.

The Best Home and Foreign Literature at Club Prices.
For $7.75 the LIVING AGE and LESLIE'S WEEKLY.

For $8.50 THE LIVING AGE and Harper's Monthly; or for $9.00 THE LIVING AGE and Century; or for $8.70 Atlantic Monthly, Harper's Bazaar or Harper's Weekly; or for $8.00 THE LIVING AGE and any $3.00 Magazine.

THE LIVING AGE COMPANY,
P. O. Box 5206, Boston.

LOTHROP
PUBLISHING COMPANY'S

New Books for Boys and Girls

The best authors—stirring stories—beautiful illustrations—welcome holiday gifts—pure in tone—high in motive—absorbing from cover to cover.

ALDEN ("Pansy").—Making Fate	$1.50
BEAL.—The Boys of Clovernook	1.50
BROOKS.—True Story of Abraham Lincoln	1.50
CHILDREN'S HISTORY BOOK	1.50
COURSEN.—What the Dragon Fly Told the Children	1.50
HINGST and RUSKAY.—Rhymes and Songs for My Little Ones	1.50
EMILIE POULSSON.—Through the Farmyard Gate	1.25
SOPHIE SWETT.—The Ponkaty Branch Road	1.25
MARGARET SIDNEY.—The Gingham Bag.	1.25
WILSON and REEVE.—Bible Boys and Girls	1.00
KATE TANNATT WOODS.—Mopsy	1.25

For sale by all booksellers. Send for Holiday Bulletin, free, by mail.

LOTHROP PUBLISHING COMPANY
92 Pearl Street, Boston

KING NOANETT

A Story of Old Virginia and the Massachusetts Bay

A NEW HISTORICAL NOVEL

By F. J. STIMSON (J. S. of Dale)

"We are not afraid to predict that 'King Noanett' will take its place in the hearts of the people with such books as 'Lorna Doone' and 'The Little Minister.' A most noble book."—JAMES MACARTHUR in the September Bookman.

"It is marked in conception and execution alike by a trait which without reserve we may name beauty. The quality of charm which pervades the romantic tales of the Old World is just what distinguishes 'King Noanett.' The real spirit of the book, the temper which gives it inevitable romantic charm, comes from no documents at all, but straight from nature. The beauty of this book in its conception is like the beauty of our woods and our fields, of our fields and our streams. It is native. That is why we love it. Subtly rhythmical cadences which belong to the essence of lyric prose. In substance and in style alike, then, we may welcome 'King Noanett' as a thing of beauty."—Prof. BARRETT WENDELL, of Harvard University in the Boston Transcript.

"So far as American fiction is concerned, 'King Noanett' is far and away the book of the year. Certainly nothing fresher or more original has found its way into our literature for many a year. The volume possesses a distinct historical value."—Literary Editor, the Boston Transcript.

"A stirring and delightful romance."—Congregationalist.

"'King Noanett' is a book designed for all ages."—N. Y. Tribune.

"It is interesting. It is spirited. It has movement and life. The young Irish cavalier is a delightful acquaintance. 'King Noanett' possesses positive merits."—Literary World.

"Mr. Stimson writes as good a story as Du Maurier."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Price, bound in cloth, $2.00; in vellum, $10.00.

FAIRY TALES By MABEL FULLER BLODGETT
With twelve full-page illustrations by Ethel Reed. $2.00

THE FORGE IN THE FOREST: being the narrative of the Acadian Ranger, Jean de Mer, Seigneur de Briart, and how he crossed the Black Abbé; and of his adventures in a strange fellowship. A novel by CHARLES G. D. ROBERTS, with seven full-page illustrations, by Henry Sandham, R.C.A. $1.50.

WIVES IN EXILE. A Comedy in Romance. By WILLIAM SHARP. $1.50.

LAMSON, WOLFFE & CO.
BOSTON LONDON NEW YORK

IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS

Rustic Life in France. Translated from the French of ANDRÉ THEURIET. By HELEN B. DOLE. Illustrations by LÉON LHERMITTE. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, boxed. $2.50.

One of the most beautiful books ever produced in the United States, and will appeal to all lovers of the truly artistic, whether in literature or bookmaking.

Saul. By ROBERT BROWNING. Holiday Edition, with 20 illustrations by FRANK O. SMALL. 8vo, gilt top. $1.50.

It is a masterpiece of verse, and the illustrations add greatly to the enjoyment of its exquisite beauty. The volume is exquisitely printed and richly bound, and makes an admirable gift-book for the lover of Browning.

Shakespeare's Heroes on the Stage. By C. E. L. WINGATE, author of "Shakespeare's Heroines on the Stage." With numerous portraits. 12mo, cloth, gilt top. $2.00.

Like its predecessor, abounds with piquant anecdotes and reproductions of rare engravings.

An Iceland Fisherman. By PIERRE LOTI. Translated by Mrs. HELEN B. DOLE. Daintily illustrated and bound. 16mo, cloth, gilt top. (Faïence Edition.) $1.00.

Is now universally recognized as a classic of modern literature.

Fadette. By GEORGE SAND. Translated by Mrs. J. M. LANCASTER. Daintily illustrated and bound. 16mo, cloth, gilt top. (Faïence Edition.) $1.00.

This story is still considered George Sand's masterpiece. Its simplicity and beauty of style, its purity and depth of feeling, its poetic grace of description, its perfection of plot, have kept its popularity undiminished for more than half a century.

Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám. 16mo, cloth, gilt top. (Faïence Edition.) $1.00.

The present edition contains an excellent sketch of the translator's life; it reproduces the text of the edition of 1859, the original of which is now worth its weight in gold, and also the fifth and last edition, published posthumously, but with the author's final corrections. There is also appended as a special feature the same scholar's version of Jamí's "Salámán and Absál."

Send for our Illustrated Announcement List.

Thomas Y. Crowell & Co.
New York and Boston

THE R.N.Y.

The Rural New-Yorker is a National Weekly for the farmer, gardener and fruit-grower. It is 47 years old, and has long been recognized as the leading American authority on all the more important questions appertaining to the cultivation of economic and ornamental plants, fertilizing problems, farm methods, etc. The best writers in the country. It aims to instruct every member of the household. 1,000 pages, 500 illustrations—ONE dollar a year. Trial subscription of five weeks for 10 cents. Specimen copies free.

THE RURAL NEW-YORKER,
407 Pearl Street, New York City.

SELECT HOLIDAY BOOKS

Masterpieces of Michelangelo and Milton

By ALEXANDER S. TWOMBLY. 8vo, 172 pp., elegantly bound, $1.50. 17 fine reproductions of rare masterpieces.

Lovers of Art and Letters will be charmed with this superb volume, which is a unique combination of literary and artistic excellence.

Syria from the Saddle

By ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE. 12mo, 318 pp., $1.50. 80 beautiful illustrations. A spirited description of the Holy Land of to-day, with all its inherited traditions.

"It is not often that a keen, open-eyed traveler, with a rich appreciation of the past and present features of each [illegible] a volume so thoroughly adapted to [illegible] Evening Gazette, Boston.

Ezekiel Gilman Robinson

An Autobiography, with a supplement by H. L. WAYLAND, D.D., and eleven critical estimates. Edited by E. H. Johnson, D.D. 8vo, cloth, 378 pp., [illegible]

"As a memorial of a man so versatile, and so variously admired by unlike men, this book is more successful than an ordinary biography could be."—Standard.

Baccalaureate Sermons

Delivered at Brown University from 1872 to 1889. By President E. G. ROBINSON, LL.D. 12mo, 251 pp., cloth, $1.50.

[illegible] Christian character was never more impressively shown than in these eloquent and soulful discourses.

An Introduction to the Life of Jesus

By ALFRED WILLIAMS ANTHONY, Cobb Divinity School. 12mo, 206 pp., $1.00.

"An admirable book for students of the New Testament, lay and clerical. It is interesting from the start."—The Outlook.

Poems of Home and Country

By Rev. S. F. SMITH, D.D., author of "America." Royal 8vo, illus., cloth, gilt top, $1.50. Edition de Luxe, $7.50.

An invaluable souvenir of the loved author of our National Hymn.

The Vacant Chair and Other Poems

By HENRY S. WASHBURN. 16mo, illustrated, cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

"Its entire contents are flushed with the true song-spirit."—The Independent.

The Wise Men of Ancient Israel and Their Proverbs

By CHARLES FOSTER KENT, Ph.D., Brown University. 12mo, 208 pp., cloth, $1.25.

"The book will prove almost invaluable to the student of the Old Testament, in its ready adaptiveness to sustained study and investigation."—Indiana Baptist.

For sale by leading booksellers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers.

Silver, Burdett & Company
Boston New York Chicago

LIBRARIES

LIBRARY CATALOGUE MAILED FREE.
LISTS PRICED GRATIS.

THE BAKER & TAYLOR CO.
Wholesale Books, 5 & 7 East 16th St., New York

A SUMPTUOUS ART WORK

MEISSONIER

By
VALLERY C. O. GRÉARD HIS LIFE AND HIS ART

With Extracts from his Note-Books and Opinions and Impressions on Art and Artists, collected by his Wife. Translated from the French by Lady Mary Loyd and Miss Florence Simmonds.

Illustrations 40 Full-Page Plates, partly in photogravure and partly in color, and over 200 Illustrations in the text, printed in black and tint, reproducing All Meissonier's Finest Works.

The works of Meissonier have commanded widespread popular appreciation. His military subjects have appealed to that inexhaustible interest in everything pertaining to the great Napoleon, while his genre pieces charm by their extraordinary delicacy and elaboration.

This magnificently illustrated volume also reveals Meissonier in a new light, as an art critic and theorizer, and shows the artistic principles which formed the basis of his practical activity. M. Gréard's treatise, therefore, will prove an addition of permanent value to the standard works on art.

Binding, etc. The Work is in one large Volume, royal octavo, bound in Illuminated Cloth, uncut edges (in box), price, $12.00; three-quarters crushed levant, gilt top (in box), $18.00. ILLUSTRATED CIRCULAR ON APPLICATION.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, prepaid, on receipt of the price, by the publishers,

A. C. ARMSTRONG & SON, 51 E. 10th St. (Near Broadway), New York

IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS

History of France. By VICTOR DURUY. Translated from the French by Mrs. M. CAREY. With a continuation to the year 1896 by J. FRANKLIN JAMESON, Professor of History in Brown University. Illustrated with photographs, portraits, early prints, etc. Photogravure frontispieces. 2 vols. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $3.00; half calf, gilt top, $6.00.

Considered to be by all odds the best in any language; and brought down to the present time by Professor Jameson of Brown University. The illustrations consist of valuable portraits and reproductions of old prints.

Life of Sir Walter Scott. By J. G. LOCKHART. With prefatory letter by JAMES R. HOPE SCOTT. Illustrated with portrait and photographs. Photogravure frontispieces. 2 vols. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $3.00; white back, gilt top, $3.00; half calf, gilt top, $6.00.

In many respects this is superior to the unabridged Life. Lockhart was enabled to correct some errors that had slipped into the first biography; and the condensation, which he did with a heroic hand, brought the whole into a more artistic and readable form. The volumes are beautifully illustrated.

Memoirs of Napoleon Bonaparte. By BOURRIENNE, his private secretary. 4 vols. in 2. Illustrated with portraits, colored map, etc. Photogravure frontispieces. 2 vols. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $3.00; half calf, gilt top, $6.00.

Hitherto these have been obtainable only in four volumes. None of the features which made the more expensive edition notable have been omitted.

Pope's Complete Poetical Works. Edited, with introduction and notes, by ADOLPHUS WILLIAM WARD, M.A., Litt.D. The Globe Edition, revised and enlarged. Illustrated with portraits, early prints, and photographs. Photogravure frontispieces. 2 vols. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $3.00; white back, gilt top, $3.00; half calf, gilt top, $6.00.

This edition, with its reprint of the first edition of "The Rape of the Lock" and "The Dunciad," and its illustrations, portraits, and facsimile of pages of Pope's manuscript, cannot be excelled.

SEND FOR OUR ILLUSTRATED ANNOUNCEMENT LIST

THOMAS Y. CROWELL & CO., New York and Boston

MANUSCRIPTS WANTED.

ATTENTION, CHRISTIAN WRITERS.

We are constantly purchasing manuscripts in the form of stories, short articles, and true incidents from the lives of Christian workers, for use in our papers for young people. A manuscript for our use must be of high literary merit, attractive, forceful, lovingly helpful Articles must be on such a theme and of such a nature as to be helpful in the widest and best sense to young readers. Our aim is to help the boy and girl into better living.

We require a large number of manuscripts to supply our needs. We are rejecting hundreds each week because they lack force, are wanting in attractiveness, in purity and loftiness of Christian thought, or simplicity of expression, and for general unworthiness. What can you write that will help us to maintain our high standard?

Our children, in our Christian homes, and outside of them, should have the best literature that can be provided. Though distributed largely through the Sunday-school, our papers are of a much higher grade of excellence than can be claimed by the ordinary Sunday-school paper. We pay for the work of the best writers and thinkers. We have our own artists, and our papers are printed and illustrated equally well with any secular young people's papers of the present day.

Can you write entertainingly? Have you been endowed with the gift of expressing thought helpfully? If so, do you care to give your best thoughts to us? We pay cash for all manuscripts found available. We can furnish you a large audience. Our papers have a wide circulation, that of YOUNG PEOPLE'S WEEKLY alone being over 200,000. Touch the hearts of the young to-day, and you solve for the future the question of how to reach the masses.

Specimen copies of our papers, and book entitled "Hints to Our Writers" sent upon application and stamp for mailing. ONLY GOOD MANUSCRIPTS WANTED. Address:

DAVID C. COOK PUBLISHING COMPANY, EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT, 36 WASHINGTON STREET, CHICAGO.

NOVELLO, EWER & CO.
CHRISTMAS MUSIC

JUST PUBLISHED

HAIL TO THE CHRIST!

CAROL ANTHEM

By JOSEPH BARNBY. Price 12 cents.

Sing, O Heavens, and Be Joyful, O Earth....... 6c.
By A. R. Gaul.
Lo! God, Our God, Has Come.................. 12c.
Battison Haynes.
While Shepherds Watched Their Flocks....... 12c.
George J. Elvey.
Christians, Awake.............................. 12c.
Joseph Barnby
Unto Us a Child is Born....................... 15c.
Frank Adlam.

267 CAROLS—NEW AND OLD

Prices from 5c. to 12c.

CANTATAS

The Holy Child............Thomas Adams. 50c.
Christmas Eve........ ....Neil W. Gade. 40c.
The First Christmas Morn.....Henry Leslie. $1.00

New Services, Anthems, Cantatas, Carols

Sent on approval on receipt of application.

Catalogues and lists free.

NOVELLO, EWER & CO.
21 E. 17th St., New York

"Quo Vadis"

A Narrative of the Time of Nero

By HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ

Author of "With Fire and Sword," "The Deluge," etc. Translated by Jeremiah Curtin. Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

4th Edition Now Ready

Of intense interest to the whole Christian civilization A tremendous subject, and right grandly does the author rise to it. . . . A climax (the scene in the Arena) beside which the famous chariot race in "Ben-Hur" seems tame.—CHICAGO TRIBUNE.

* * * * * * *

It is a historical novel of the first order, and in all respects a surpassing work of fiction. Very few novels of our time deserve to be named in the same breath with it.—NEW YORK HERALD.

* * * * * * *

The torrential sweep of its immensity becomes instantly absorbing. It is one of the greatest books of our day.—THE BOOKMAN.

* * * * * * *

With him we view appalled, Rome, grand and awful, in her last throes.—BOSTON COURIER.

* * * * * * *

In the delineation of character, and in tracing the psychological developments of actual, living, breathing human beings, the author of "Quo Vadis" shows an almost inimitable power.—PHILADELPHIA CHURCH STANDARD.

The End of the Beginning

A ROMANCE OF NEW ENGLAND. 16mo. Buckram, gilt top, $1.25.

Simple, genuine, steeped in New England feeling.—The Book Buyer.

There is a distinctly original flavor in the style.—The Outlook.

It has distinction in every line: it is a story of real life: and it is a story that lingers in the mind.—Chicago Times-Herald.

A very fascinating book. The author's language is polished and forceful, epigrammatic and at the same time natural, and the book is full of good things worth quoting. —New York Sun.

Its readers will be legion. A story of much thought.—Boston Courier.

Grimm's Life of Michael Angelo

A new holiday edition of this famous art work, with forty photogravure plates. By HERMAN GRIMM. Translated from the German by Fanny Elizabeth Bunnett. New edition, with additions. Illustrated with a steel portrait of Michael Angelo, and 40 photogravure plates from famous paintings and sculptures. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, extra, gilt top, $6.00; half crushed Levant morocco, extra, gilt top, $12.00.

LITTLE, BROWN & CO.
PUBLISHERS
254 Washington Street, Boston

R. H. Russell & Son's New Publications

A NEW BOOK

Pictures of People.	By CHARLES DANA GIBSON.	$ 5.00
EDITION DE LUXE of above, numbered and signed by Mr. GIBSON,		$10.00
In Vanity Fair.	Drawings by A. B. WENZELL. Large folio, 12x18 in.	$ 5.00
Oxford Characters.	Lithographs on stone by WILL ROTHENSTEIN.	$15.00
Posters in Miniature.	Cover and Introduction by EDWARD PENFIELD.	$ 1.50
The Mantel-Piece Minstrels.	32mo. By JOHN KENDRICK BANGS.	$ .75
The Delft Cat.	And other stories by ROBERT HOWARD RUSSELL.	$ .75
Kemble's Coons.	Drawings by E. W. KEMBLE. Large 4to, 9½x12 in.	$ 2.00
Fables for the Times.	By H. W. PHILLIPS and T. S. SULLIVANT.	$ 1.25
Poster Calendar for 1897.	10x14 in. Designed by EDWARD PENFIELD.	$ .50
IMPERIAL JAPAN EDITION, numbered and signed by Mr. PENFIELD,		$ 2.00

Descriptive circulars of the above sent on application. For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent postpaid to any address on receipt of price by the publishers,

R. H. RUSSELL & SON, New York

IMPORTANT NEW RELIGIOUS BOOKS

WITH OPEN FACE

Or, Jesus Mirrored in Matthew, Mark, and Luke. By A. B. BRUCE, D.D. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

"The author's rare ability as a writer, his independence of thought and careful inspection of the subject, always command both admiration and attention. This volume is a series of 'popular' sketches of the spirit and teaching of our Lord, the 'overflow' in the preparation of a work on the first three Gospels for professional students. It presents the distinctive traits of Christ as seen in each of the three Gospels—the Man, the Christ, the Lord, the prophetic picture of Matthew, the realistic picture of Mark, the idealized picture of Luke."—The Presbyterian.

GOD, CREATOR, AND LORD OF ALL

By SAMUEL HARRIS, D.D., LL.D., Professor of Systematic Theology, Yale University. 2 Vols., 8vo. $5.00, net.

"Two noble volumes. There are four principal divisions: God the only absolute Spirit, God the Creator, God the Lord of all in Providential Government, and God the Lord of all in Moral Government. Dr. Harris's style is absorbingly interesting. He possesses a remarkable power of lighting up the most profound speculations and the most abstruse themes."—Boston Advertiser.

JESUS CHRIST BEFORE HIS MINISTRY

By EDMOND STAPFER, Professor in the Faculty of Protestant Theology at Paris. Translated from the French by Louise Seymour Houghton. 12mo, $1.25.

M. Edmond Stapfer considers in this volume the earlier portion of Christ's life. Professor Stapfer's standpoint is a wholly personal one, differing entirely from that of Strauss and Renan, and yet unlike theologians, taking no account of the formally miraculous. It is a spiritual biography, based solely on the Gospel record, following reverently and sympathetically the interior developments of the mind and heart of Jesus, and the gradual awakening of his Messianic consciousness. It will be followed by two other volumes, completing the life of Christ.

INTERNATIONAL THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY

Edited by Prof. C. A. BRIGGS, D.D., and Prof. S. D. F. SALMOND, D.D.

"One of the most valuable collections of theological works in print."—N. Y. Examiner.

History of Christian Doctrine. By Prof. GEORGE P. FISHER, Yale University. Crown 8vo, $2.50 net. Just Issued.

Christian Ethics. By NEWMAN SMYTH, D.D., New Haven. Crown 8vo, $2.50 net.

Apologetics; or, Christianity Defensively Stated. By Prof. A. B. BRUCE, University of Glasgow. Crown 8vo, $2.50 net.

An Introduction to the Literature of the Old Testament. By Prof. S. R. DRIVER, Oxford. Crown 8vo, $2.50 net.

INTERNATIONAL CRITICAL COMMENTARY

Edited by Prof. C. A. BRIGGS, D.D., Prof. S. R. DRIVER, and ALFRED PLUMMER, D.D.

"We believe this series to be of epoch-making importance."—New York Evangelist

NOW READY: St. Luke. By ALFRED PLUMMER, D.D., Master University College, Durham. 8vo, $3.00 net.

St. Mark. By Prof. E. P. GOULD, Philadelphia. Cr. 8vo, $2.50 net.

Deuteronomy. By Prof. S. R. DRIVER, D.D., Oxford. Crown 8vo, $3.00 net.

Judges. By Prof. George F. MOORE, Andover. Crown 8vo, $3.00 net.

Romans. By Prof. W. SANDAY and Rev. A. C. HEADLAM, Oxford. Crown 8vo, $3.00 net.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 153-157 Fifth Ave., N. Y.

$300.00 in CASH

A FREE Pattern (The New Bell Skirt) To Every One.

HOW many words do you think you can correctly spell with the letters in the word "FASHIONS"? JUST TRY. Thus: As, Is, In, On, Son, Sons, Fashion, Fashions, etc.

Our Offer.—We will pay $100 for the largest list (foreign words do not count), $50 for the second largest, $25 for the third, $10 each for the next five, $5 each for the next ten, and $1 each for the next twenty-five. That is to say we will divide among forty-three contestants the aggregate sum of $300, according to merit. Don't you think you could be one of the forty-three? TRY IT.

Our Purpose.—The above rewards for mental effort are given free and without consideration for the purpose of attracting attention to MODES, by May Manton, the most popular up-to-date Fashion Magazine in the world. Its 36 pages, replete with beautiful illustrations of the latest styles in ladies', misses' and children's garments, make it a real necessity in every household; the Designs and Fashion Hints, being by May Manton, render it invaluable as an absolutely reliable Fashion Guide.

Our Conditions.—You must send with your list of words 25 cents (stamps or silver) for a Three Months' Trial Subscription to MODES.

Our Extra Inducement.—Every person sending 25 cents and a list of 15 words or more, will, in addition to three months' subscription, receive by return mail a pattern of the NEW BELL SKIRT, No. 6906 (illustrated above), in any size from 22 to 30 inches waist measure. The regular retail price of the pattern is 30 cents.

Our Aim.—The present monthly circulation of MODES is 50,000. We aim to make it 500,000.

This contest will close January 15th next so the names of successful spellers may be published in the following issue of MODES, but SEND IN YOUR LIST AT ONCE. For our responsibility we refer you to any Mercantile Agency. Address:

MODES FASHION MAGAZINE,
Dept. 232, 130 WHITE STREET. NEW YORK.

NOW READY

THE TRIUMPH OF DEATH

By GABRIELE D'ANNUNZIO

Translated by Arthur Hornblow

With Etched Portrait

PRESS OPINIONS

"The writer of the greatest promise to-day in Italy, and perhaps one of the most unique figures in contemporary literature, is Gabriele D'Annunzio, the poet-novelist.

"'A pagan of the time of Nero' is the comparison which M. de Vogüé, the most lenient of critics, has found for him, and it is well applied; nowhere since the time of the Cæsars can one find the same daring crudeness side by side with the purest gems of poetic thought. . . ."—The Bookman.

"'The Triumph of Death,' which, the French critic M. de Vogüé says, has a right to be known as one of the master books of our time, is the third novel of the series known as the 'Romances of the Rose,' and it is even more audacious in its theories, keener in its analyses, more pessimistic in its conclusions, and more terrifying in its realism than any of the volumes that have preceded it. The appearance of the book in English is likely to create a sensation among American readers. In this novel D'Annunzio works out the same idea that Tolstoi has already used in 'The Kreutzer Sonata' and other works, i. e., that sensuality leads to crime. The young Italian writer, thanks to his keener analytical skill, has succeeded in demonstrating this where the great Russian philosopher failed. D'Annunzio uses no melodramatic devices to bring about the catastrophe. The conclusion is logical and inevitable, and the only one consistent with the temperaments of his two leading characters, George and Hippolyte. The story is the verification of the law that a love which is purely earthly can find complete satisfaction only in death."—New York Journal.

12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.50

GEO. H. RICHMOND & CO. 12 East 15th St.
New York

A PREJUDICE

Is a bad thing, like a cataract on the eye. If you do not understand what Socialism is, it would be well to inform yourself. Read the AMERICAN FABIAN.
50 cents a year. 973 Lexington Avenue, N. Y.

XMAS. DIALOGUES, Pieces to Speak and how to get up Fascinating Sunday School Entertainment—all 10c.
J. & P. B. MYERS, 85 John St., N. Y.

BIBLE STUDY UNION LESSONS

FOR 1897.

THE BIBLE STUDY UNION (or BLAKESLEE) LESSONS and the International Lessons for 1897 are both on the Acts and Epistles.

The imperative and growing demand for better methods of Bible Study, and the marked success of our lessons, have led us to prepare two New Courses for 1897, viz.:—

A Most Attractive Biographical Course:

THE THREE GREAT APOSTLES, PETER, PAUL, and JOHN.

Published in three Grades—Junior, Intermediate, and Progressive—with a Manual, making a Uniform Lesson for the Main School.

An Exceedingly Interesting Bible Class Course:

APOSTOLIC TEACHINGS.

A Series of Great Topics for Discussion.

Based on the same Scripture as the Course on The Three Great Apostles, and used in harmony with it. Published in the Senior Grade, with a Manual.

WEEKLY NOTES on these Lessons will appear in The Evangelist and Christian Work, of New York, The Watchman, of Boston, and other papers

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Are you satisfied to allow your school to study this portion of Scripture in the same old way that they have many times before, or will you secure for them the far greater help and inspiration that will surely result from using these new Lessons?

For Free Specimen Lessons, etc., address,
THE BIBLE STUDY PUBLISHING CO., 21 Bromfield St., BOSTON, MASS

Superior Books.

We firmly believe that, as the following books are the best work of some of our leading authors, attractively illustrated and published, they will prove to be the most popular and helpful books of the year for young people.

Three Young Continentals.

By EVERETT T. TOMLINSON, author of "Three Colonial Boys," etc. 364 pp. Illustrated, cloth, $1.50.

"Such books are among the best educators of our youth, both in history and patriotism."—The Outlook.

"The book is far more interesting and instructive for young persons than regular history, as it personifies the events which historians dryly record."—Lutheran Observer.

Malvern.

A neighborhood story, by ELLEN DOUGLAS DELAND, author of "Oakleigh." Illustrated by ALICE BARBER STEPHENS. 341 pp. Cloth, $1.50.

"The story deals with the lives and fortunes, the cares, trials, and pleasures, of the children of a country village, and is an interesting study for the old as well as young."—New York Bookseller.

The Land of the Kangaroo.

By Col. THOMAS W. KNOX, author of "The Boy Travelers." 318 pp. Illustrated, $1.50.

"This book was the last book of the lamented Colonel Knox, and in his own peculiar style recounts his adventures on the island continent of Australia. It combines instruction with entertainment, and will undoubtedly quickly take a foremost place among boys' books."

The Orcutt Girls.

By CHARLOTTE M. VAILE, illustrated by FRANK T. MERRILL. 316 pp. Cloth, $1.50.

"A strong, helpful story of girl life at a village academy."—The Outlook.

"Such a book as this does useful service in presenting so successful a portrayal of life in an old-fashioned academy."—The Congregationalist.

"A wholesome, inspiring story that will benefit every young girl who reads it."—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Marjorie Books.

Edited by Miss LUCY WHEELOCK. 6 Vols. Over 200 illustrations. The set, $1.50.

A very attractive set of books for the little folks, full of pictures and good stories.

The Fast Mail.

By WILLIAM DRYSDALE, author of "The Young Reporter," etc. 328 pp. Illustrated, $1.50.

"The author has carefully studied the subject, and supplies a great deal of interesting and instructing information regarding the details of the work of each employee on the railroad. He also takes occasion to impress the lesson that any young man can get ahead and be successful only as he is energetic, industrious, upright, and thoroughly honorable."—Boston Transcript.

Seraph, the Little Violiniste.

By Mrs. C. V. JAMISON, author of "Lady Jane." 300 pp. Illustrated, $1.50.

"A tender, sympathetic story of child life and negro devotion."—The Outlook.

"The picturesqueness of Mrs. Jamison's story is remarkable, and the reader unconsciously becomes Seraph's friend, and sympathizes in all her trials and triumphs."—Albany Argus.

A Medal of Honor Man.

By CHARLES LEDYARD NORTON, author of "Jack Benson's Log," etc. 280 pp. Illustrated, $1.25.

"In this, the second volume of the 'Fighting for the Flag Series,' Jack Benson so distinguished himself while cruising among the blocade runners that he is promoted to the office of midshipman, and awarded a medal of honor."—Lutheran Observer.

Above the Range.

An Indian story for girls, by THEODORA R. JENNESS. 332 pp. Cloth, $1.25.

"A realistic descriptive story of Indian children far away in the Dakotas; one of whom, a fair-haired, white little maiden, had passed for a Sioux, finally discovers her parents."—The Bookseller.

"The story is a decided departure from the ordinary girls' book, and the quaintness of the characters described will be sure to make it very popular."—The Journal.

The Moonstone Ring.

By JENNY CHAPPELL. 118 pp. With 6 illustrations, $ .75.

A home story with the true ring to it. The happenings of the story are somewhat out of the usual run of events.

Send for free copy of our illustrated descriptive catalogue.

W. A. WILDE & CO. - Boston, Mass.

NEW BOOKS

BEULAH-LAND; or, Words of Good Cheer. By T. L. Cuyler, D.D. 12mo. $1.

"Dr. Cuyler's bow abides in strength; in his Indian summer he is as cheery, active, and vigorous as in his palmiest day." EVANGELIST.

THE DOCTOR'S FAMILY. By Mary E. Ireland. 114 pp. 12mo. 75 cts.

GRANDPA'S DESK; or, Who Wins? By Howe Benning. 96 pp. 4to. 75 cts.

SWEETHEART. By Ernest Gilmore. Six full-page engravings. 4to. 75 cts.

A LITTLE MAIDEN'S VICTORY. By Alida W. Graves. 174 pp. 12mo. 75 cts.

THE HOUSE ON THE BLUFF. A Western flood story. By Julia MacNair Wright. [illegible]

"Well told, handsomely illustrated, with beautiful lessons in practical life." INTER-OCEAN.

THE LITTLE PILGRIM LIBRARY. Profusely illust. 6 vols., in box, $1.50; 25 cts. each.

PATHS OF SUNSHINE. A Scripture text and a poetic gem for every day in the year. A kind of "Daily Food" for the young. 35 cts.

A HARMONY OF THE LIFE OF ST. PAUL, according to the Acts and Epistles. By Rev. Frank J. Goodwin. 8vo. $1.25.

"Will prove very valuable to S. S. teachers, especially next year." S. S. TIMES.

"Altogether a most meaty, condensed, and satisfactory piece of work." INDEPENDENT.

STALKER'S LIFE OF ST. PAUL. 12mo. 60 cts.

No better help for the Lessons of 1897.

ISLAM; or, The Religion of the Turk: By Rev. E. M. Wherry, D.D. 35 cts. A missionary help.

WORKING FOR JESUS; or, Individual Effort for the Salvation of Souls. By the Rev. J. A. R. Dickson. New and Enlarged Edition. 50 cts.

"Full of wise suggestions." C. PRESBYTERIAN.

BIBLE READER'S GUIDE. By the Rev. F. S. Schenck, D.D. $1.25.

"The Bible class, the teachers' class and the individual student will alike get help from this systematic course, prepared so carefully." CHRISTIAN OBSERVER.

 Any [illegible] standard [illegible] paid, on receipt of the price.*

Send for our Illustrated Catalogue.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY

10 EAST 23d STREET, NEW YORK

BOSTON, 54 Bromfield St. | PHILADELPHIA, 1512 Chestnut St.
ROCHESTER, 93 State St. | CHICAGO, 169 Wabash Ave.
CINCINNATI, 420 Elm St. | SAN FRANCISCO, 637 Market St.

Some Recent Standard Books

A History of Anti-pedobaptism. By Prof. A. H. Newman, of McMaster University. [illegible]

A history of dissent, from the beginning of its appearance to 1609, the close of the Reformation period. All the primitive sects are considered and especial attention is given to the opposition that sprang up in Germany [illegible] to original sources and has produced a calm, impartial, and valuable historical work.

Messages of To-day to the Men of To-morrow. By Geo. C. Lorimer, D. D. About 400 pages, 12mo. $1.50.

A series of papers by the eloquent pastor of Tremont Temple, especially adapted to young men, and covering many realms of [illegible]. A book deserving a place by the side of Henry Ward Beecher's Lectures to Young Men, and up to date in every way. Every young man desiring a sympathetic and ringing presentation of present day truths and duties will find it here.

Quotations of the New Testament from the Old. By Franklin Johnson, D. D. 425 pages, [illegible]

The Interior: The argument is strong and the volume the sanest, soundest, and most wholesome treatise on this important subject that has yet appeared, not only in English but in any language.

The Argument for Christianity. By Geo. C. Lorimer, D. D. 480 pages, 12mo. $1.50. One of the very best books on "Evidences" in existence.

Am. Baptist Publication Society

1632 Chestnut St., Philadelphia

The Pathfinder [illegible] comprehensive [illegible] opinions. Economizes time and money. $1 a year; trial 13 weeks, 15 cents. Address Pathfinder, Washington, D. C.

READ IN MORE THAN 100,000 HOMES. A VALUABLE MEDIUM FOR ADVERTISERS.

THE HOUSEWIFE

The Most Practical and Most Helpful Household Publication in America.

THE HOUSEWIFE will, in 1897, continue its successful mission of teaching "Young housekeepers who do not know enough," and "Older ones who do not know too much," the best ways of doing every thing that is right and proper for them to do in the upbuilding of the home, which is practically the upbuilding of the Nation.

Leading Features and Departments of The Housewife:

ORIGINAL STORIES, OCCASIONAL SERIALS,
POEMS WORTH KEEPING,
THE LITERARY WORLD,
HELPS FOR MOTHERS,
HINTS FOR THE NURSERY,
HOW TO CARE FOR THE SICK,
HYGIENIC ADVICE,
HINTS FOR THE TOILET,
FRESH FASHIONS,
WOMAN'S WIT,
HOME CULTURE,
FADS IN FANCY WORK,
TESTED RECIPES,
HOME AMUSEMENTS,
SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS,
BEST WAYS ABOUT THE HOUSE,
THE SERVANT PROBLEM,
CHILDREN'S STORIES,
BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Among the past, present and future contributors to THE HOUSEWIFE may be found the following names:

MARY E. WILKINS,
ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS,
MARIA PARLOA,
MARION HARLAND,
KATE UPSON CLARK,
MARY C. HUNGERFORD,
ROSE HAWTHORNE LATHROP,
HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD,
BESSIE CHANDLER,
LAURA E. RICHARDS,
CLARA DOTY BATES,
AMANDA M. DOUGLAS,
SUSAN HALE,
KATE PUTNAM OSGOOD,
SALLY JOY WHITE,
VIRGINIA F. TOWNSEND,
CARRIE MAY ASHTON,
EMMA C. MONROE,
MRS. M. P. HANDY,
MARY KYLE DALLAS,
MRS. JOHN SHERWOOD, JULIET CORSON,
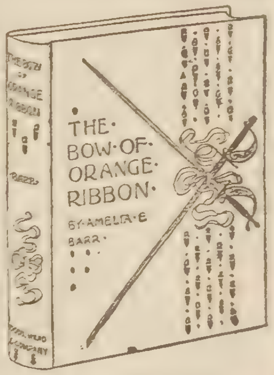
MARY A. DENISON,
HELEN M. WINSLOW,
MARY F. BUTTS,
HELEN CAMPBELL,
ABBY M. GANNETT,
EVA LOVETT CARSON,
DORA REED GOODALE,
[illegible] P. HALE,
DINAH STURGIS,
LUCY C. LILLIE,
EMMA C. HEWITT,
ALICE CHITTENDEN,
ABBY MORTON DIAZ,
ELIZA R. PARKER,
AGNES C. STODDARD,
HELEN T. CLARKE,
[illegible],
MARGRET HOLMES BATES,
MARY LOWE DICKINSON,
ROSE HARTWICK THORPE,
ALICE WELLINGTON ROLLINS,
FLORENCE B. HALLOWELL,
ELIZA CHESTER ATWOOD,
CHRISTINE TERHUNE HERRICK,
ELAINE GOODALE EASTMAN,
CORA STEWART WHEELER.

In order to more thoroughly introduce THE HOUSEWIFE, we will send it on trial from now until January, 1898, together with an attractive book, for only SIXTY CENTS. These books are all by famous authors and are handsomely bound in attractive cloth covers, stamped in silver or ink, and some contain nearly 400 pages, 16mo. The list of books is as follows:



THE BOW OF ORANGE RIBBON
BY AMELIA E BARR

An Original Belle. By E. P. ROE.
A Border Shepherdess. By AMELIA E. BARR.
Samantha at Saratoga. By "JOSIAH ALLEN'S WIFE."
The Stories of Three Burglars. By FRANK R. STOCKTON.
Opening a Chestnut Burr. By E. P. ROE.
Barriers Burned Away. By E. P. ROE.
The Bow of Orange Ribbon. By AMELIA E. BARR.
Jan Vedder's Wife. By AMELIA E. BARR.
Elsie Dinsmore. By MARTHA FINLEY.
A Young Girl's Wooing. By E. P. ROE.
Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush. By IAN MACLAREN.

Until quite recently these books have been obtainable only in higher-priced editions. Any one book and a subscription as specified above for only Sixty Cents, or any two books with the subscription for One Dollar. Remit by P. O. Order, or Express Money Order; stamps taken if either cannot be procured. Satisfaction guaranteed. Address

THE A. D. PORTER CO., Publishers,
24 and 26 Reade St. (P. O. Box 1198), NEW YORK.

NEW AND HANDSOME EDITION OF

HENRY KINGSLEY'S NOVELS

EDITED BY CLEMENT K. SHORTER

Newly composed in type specially cast, well printed on good paper, and neatly and handsomely bound. With Frontispieces by well-known artists, including Herbert Railton, R. Caton Woodville, Lancelot Speed, A. Forestier, and others. Crown 8vo, cloth, per volume, $1.25. Also in handsome three-quarter morocco, with gilt top (in sets only in this binding), $32.50.

1.—The Recollections of Geoffrey Hamlyn.
2.—Ravenshoe.
3.—The Hillyars and Burtons.
4.—Silcote of Silcotes.
5.—Stretton.
6.—Austin Elliot, and the Harveys.
7.—Mdlle. Mathilde.
8.—Old Margaret, and Other Stories.
9.—Valentin, and Number Seventeen.
10.—Oakshott Castle, and the Grange Garden.
11.—Reginald Hetheredge and Leighton Court.
12.—The Boy in Grey, and Other Stories.

"They rank among the best works of English fiction."—Boston Transcript.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, carriage paid, on receipt of price by the publishers,

WARD, LOCK & CO., Ltd., 15 E. 12th St., N. Y.

Dr. Storrs' Masterly Oration

"The Puritan Spirit"

has been issued in an attractive form, with an excellent portrait, and will be mailed for 35 cents to any address. It is a fine example of his best style. Send for one.

CONG'L S. S. & PUB. SOCIETY

Cong'l House, Boston | 175 Wabash Ave, Chicago

A FROG comes under the head of NATURAL HISTORY

Send two cent stamp for Best List of Books in Botany, Insects, Birds, Fishes and all kinds of nature study. Headquarters for all Natural History Books.

BRADLEE WHIDDEN 18 Arch St., Boston, Mass.

300 ORDERS in 3 Weeks: "$5.00 to [illegible] every day of the year;" "150 orders in 3½ days." Outfit [illegible]. Money refunded. JAS. H. EARLE, Publisher, Boston, Mass.

HOLIDAY SUGGESTIONS

THE BEDFORD HANDY VOLUME SHAKESPEARE

In 12 pocket volumes, daintily printed and rubricated. In cloth, in a cloth case, $7.50. Also kept in various handsome bindings and cases; in Spanish morocco, $15.00; real Russia and Turkey, in satin-lined cases, etc., $32.50 and $35.00 respectively.

Also an edition of the above without the rubricated borders, printed on laid paper, with larger margins. Cloth, gilt tops, in cloth case, $8.00, and in three-quarter calf, antique, in cloth case, $22.50.

Also the "Lansdowne" Red Line Edition of Shakespeare. Printed on the choicest India paper, in 6 pocket volumes, perfectly legible and complete, with the doubtful plays, sonnets, glossary, and life sketch. Cloth, in a cloth case, per set, $8.00. Spanish morocco, in a morocco case, $15.00. Also bound and cased, in choice smooth calf, or Turkey morocco, $22.50.

NOW COMPLETE

THE ROYAL NATURAL HISTORY

Edited by Professor Richard Lydekker, B. A., F. R. S., F. G. S., F. Z. S., etc., assisted by the leading scientists of the day. The preface is by P. L. Sclater, M. A., Ph.D., F. R. S., Secretary of the Zoölogical Society of London. Profusely illustrated, and with 72 page colored plates. 6 vols. Handsomely bound in cloth, $27.00 per set. Ditto, half-morocco, gilt tops, $37.50. Ditto, in twelve sections (making thin vols. for ready reference), cloth, $30.00 per set, net.

⁂ Now obtainable in volume form, or in parts for binding. Send for descriptive prospectus.

ABBEYS, CASTLES, AND ANCIENT HALLS OF ENGLAND AND WALES

Their legendary lore and popular history. By JOHN TIMBS and ALEXANDER GUNN. Embellished with 12 full-page, most interesting photogravures from the newest and best views of the subject procurable. Choicely printed on laid paper, 3 vols., large crown 8vo, gilt tops, $7.50.

CHARLES KNIGHT'S POPULAR HISTORY OF ENGLAND

With upward of 1,000 illustrations in the text, and 190 steel engraved portraits. From the earliest times to the Queen's Jubilee. 9 vols., Imperial 8vo, cloth, gilt tops, $20.00, or three-quarter morocco, elegant, $45.00.

A New Romance by the Author of "Where Duty Lies," "Her Benny," etc.

FOR SUCH IS LIFE

By SILAS K. HOCKING. With illustrations. 12mo, cloth, beveled, $1.50.

Few writers can command the sales this author's works attain to (over a million copies having been sold); and this story will be found to sustain his enviable reputation for unflagging interest and pureness of motives and language.

THE LEGENDS OF KING ARTHUR AND HIS KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE

A simple prose version of the Arthurian legends for old and young. By JAMES T. KNOWLES. Eighth edition, in square 8vo, art cloth, $1.50.

"Something that appeals to all ages * * * an excellent companion to the Idylls of the King."—Public Opinion.

YOUNG TOM BOWLING

A story of the Boys of the British Navy. By J. C. HUTCHESON. With twenty-two full-page and other illustrations. Square crown 8vo, cloth, gilt, $1.75.

FOR THE REFERENCE LIBRARY

WOOD'S DICTIONARY OF QUOTATIONS

From Ancient and Modern English and Foreign Sources. Alphabetically arranged. 30,000 references, with an exhaustive Subject Index. Now ready. In one volume, demy 8vo, cloth, $2.50; half-calf, gilt top, $4.50.

Send for full Prospectus.

"An exceedingly valuable store of wise sayings."—The Beacon, Boston.
"The best thoughts of the maxim makers."—The Spectator, London.
"Of marked excellence for the reference library."—Inter-Ocean, Chicago.

A New Story of Adventure.

THE ORCHID SEEKERS

A story of Adventure in Borneo. By ASHMORE RUSSAN and FREDERICK BOYLE. With sixteen full-page illustrations. Square crown 8vo, cloth, stamped in gold and colors, $1.75.

While possessing every element of the thrilling narrative so dearly beloved by boys and their elders, this book contains the additional attraction that it is a record to a certain extent of actual experience, and is based on practical knowledge of this interesting subject and country.

A New Story by the Author of "Boris, the Bear Hunter," "The Emperor's Englishman," etc.

LOST IN AFRICAN JUNGLES

By FRED. WHISHAW, with illustrations. Square crown 8vo, handsome binding design, cloth, $1.50.

A New Book of Stories for Young Children.

ON THE SHELF

By HARVEY GOBEL. With fourteen illustrations. Square crown 8vo, novel cloth binding, in gold and colors, $1.00.

A charming series of short stories for children, many of them most touchingly narrated. They are sure to interest children of eight to twelve.

THE FUR TRADERS OF THE WEST; OR,

THE DOONES OF FOWEY. Stories of early days, after the style of the Leatherstocking Tales. By ERNEST R. SUFFLING. With 21 page illustrations. Square crown 8vo, cloth, gilt, $1.50.

The Red Nursery Series.

THE LITTLE RUNAWAYS

By HARRIET M. CAPES, author of "Two Little Brothers," etc. Profusely illustrated. Strikingly bound in colored lithograph board covers, varnished. 12mo size. 50 cents.

Uniform in size and price with above.

VERY FUNNY STORIES TOLD IN RHYME

Full of comical illustrations in black and white. 12mo. 50 cents.

These little verses are just the thing to amuse children—really funny without vulgarity.

THE MAGIC LANTERN STRUWWEL-PETER

(Slovenly Peter.) With additions. With designs in colored scenes and eight movable disks, producing thirty-two colored pictures, besides other illustrations in monotint. Large 4to size, varnished board cover, $1.00.

Of all booksellers, or free by mail on receipt of published price by

FREDERICK WARNE & CO., 3 Cooper Union, New York

The Prophets of the Christian Faith

By the

Rev. LYMAN ABBOTT, Rev. FRANCIS BROWN, Rev. GEORGE MATHESON, Rev. MARCUS DODS, Rev. A. C. McGIFFERT, Very Rev. W. H. FREMANTLE, Prof. ADOLF HARNACK, Rev. A. M. FAIRBAIRN, Rev. T. T. MUNGER, Rev. A. V. G. ALLEN, and Very Rev. F. W. FARRAR.

Cloth. 16mo. Price, $1.25.

A volume of Essays, first published as articles in THE OUTLOOK, on

What is a Prophet?
Isaiah as a Preacher
The Apostle Paul
Clement of Alexandria
St. Augustine as a Prophet
John Wycliffe
Martin Luther
John Wesley
Jonathan Edwards
Horace Bushnell
Frederick Denison Maurice
Can We be Prophets?

Making as a whole a collection of religious biographies which cannot fail to interest or to stimulate the spiritual life of the reader.

"The Prophets of the Christian Faith" will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of $1.25, by either THE OUTLOOK COMPANY, 13 Astor Place, New York, or the publishers of the book, THE MACMILLAN COMPANY, 66 Fifth Avenue, New York.

A Hymn and Tune Book for ALL OCCASIONS

"Many Voices"

By the editors of "Carmina Sanctorum," with Rev. Dr. Talmage. 539 Hymns, 417 Tunes, 332 pages; Cloth. Price, 75 cts.

"Not till we received a copy of 'Many Voices' did we in our search for a hymn book find a hymnal that was as complete and happy in its combination of the new and old hymns. In it we have found just what we want for all departments of our church work." REV. JAMES S. ROOT, Pres. Church, Rochester, N. Y.

"An exceedingly happy collection of old and new at a remarkably low price." Observer, N.Y.

SOME RECENT ADOPTIONS.—First Cong., Litchfield, Ct. Windsor Ave. Cong., Hartford, Ct. First Cong., Berea, Ohio. Union Chapel, Cottage City, Mass. Second Cong., Beloit, Wis. Stranger's Church, Memphis, Tenn. Emanuel Presb., Rochester, N. Y. First Presb., Elizabeth, N. J.

Returnable copies sent for examination free to pastors and committees.

A.S.BARNES & CO.,156 Fifth Ave.,N.Y.

Here's Enjoyment!!!

A few splendid books that everybody will enjoy

Send postage stamps in payment

1. Some Modern Substitutes for Christianity briefly considered (Theosophy, Spiritualism, Christian Science, etc.) By G. W. Shinn. 25c.
2. Heaven Every-Day; or, Common Sense Christianity. By T. F. Seward. (A very stimulating book) .... 50c.
3. Life of Edison: The Telegraph Boy who became a Great Inventor. By E. C. Kenyon. (For a Boy of 12 to 18.) .... 50c.
4. Women in the Mission Field. By A. R. Buckland. (Suitable for Missionary and Endeavor Meetings.) .... 50c.
5. Why I am a Christian. (The best summary of the whole subject.) W. W. Newton, D.D. 10c.

ALL FIVE FOR $1.50

Mention THE OUTLOOK

OUR NEW PORTRAIT CATALOGUE FREE!

THOS. WHITTAKER 2 & 3 Bible House New York

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED. Our INVISIBLE TUBE Cushions help when all else fails, as glasses help eyes. NO PAIN. Whispers heard. Send to F. Hiscox Co., 853 B'way, N. Y., for Book and Proofs FREE

Christmas Music

THE DUTCH DOLL By H. Butterworth and J. R. Murray. A fascinating and easily prepared Christmas Merriment; also adapted for representation at any time during the Holidays. The idea is unique and has proven immensely successful. Price 30 cents per copy.

THY LIGHT IS COME By B. A. Stone. A new and exceptionally interteresting Christmas Service of songs and responsive readings. Price 5 cents a single copy.

CHRISTMAS SELECTIONS of various years. Price 5c. per copy.

THE STAR OF LIGHT. A Christmas Cantata for adults. The last work of this kind by the late Dr. Geo. F. Root. Price 40 cents.

SOME SUCCESSFUL CANTATAS FOR X-MAS.

The Palace of Santa Claus, Dorothy's Dream, Santa Claus' Mission, A Jolly Christmas, Santa Claus & Co., A Christmas Vision, Santa Claus' Mistake, The New Santa Claus, Etc. Price of each Cantata 30 cents per single copy.

EXAMINE THESE ALSO.

THE CALENDAR OF THE DAYS A very pleasing entertainment suitable for the Holiday season. Prepared by Kate W. Hamilton. Price 25 cents.

BETHLEHEM By Frederic Weatherly and Geo. F. Root. This is a superb Christmas Cantata for adults only. 50 cents a copy.

ANTHEMS Especially designed for Christmas use will be in the Supplement to the Musical Visitor for December. Price of "Musical Visitor" 15 cents.

A CATALOGUE of Christmas Music of every description for use in the Church, Sunday School or Home Circle, will be sent to any address on application.

THE JOHN CHURCH CO.
CINCINNATI. NEW YORK. CHICAGO

Webster's International Dictionary

Invaluable in Office, School, and Home.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

A thorough revision of the Unabridged, the purpose of which has been not display nor the provision of material for boastful and showy advertisement, but the due, judicious, scholarly, thorough perfecting of a work which in all the stages of its growth has obtained in an equal degree the favor and confidence of scholars and of the general public.

The Choicest of Gifts for Christmas.

IN VARIOUS STYLES OF BINDING.

☞ Specimen pages sent on application to

G. & C. MERRIAM CO., Publishers,
Springfield, Mass., U.S.A.

Peloubet's
"Select Notes"
for 1897.

"The World's Best Commentary on the International Sunday-school Lessons."—Sunday School Times.

Price, Cloth, $1.25.

For Sale Everywhere.
Send for Sample Pages.

W. A. Wilde & Co., Boston.

XMAS

BRICK FIRE-PLACE PAPER.

Printed in imitation of Red Bricks to cover Christmas Fire-place. Has beveled bricks for over Fire-place opening. Just the thing for Sunday School Entertainments! One package, enough for one fire-place, 70c., mailed with full directions.

J. & P. B. MYERS, Inventors, 85 John St., New York.

"The World's Best"

It has ever been the aim of the Publishers of Peloubet's Quarterlies to make them, from every standpoint, superior to all other lesson helps. That they have succeeded was evinced by their enormous circulation, greatly increased during the past year by their marked reduction in price. The 1897 series comprise all of the old favorites of

Peloubet's Quarterlies

as listed and priced below.

	Price per Year.	Price per Quarter
The Senior Quarterly	16 cents.	4 cents.
The Scholars' (for both oral and written answers)	16 ,,	4 ,,
The Intermediate	16 ,,	4 ,,
The Junior, or Children's	12 ,,	3 ,,
The Little Ones' Quarterly	12 ,,	3 ,,

They will be edited as heretofore by

Rev. F. N. Peloubet, D. D. Rev. A. F. Schauffler, D. D.
Mrs. M. G. Kennedy. Miss Lucy Wheelock.

In order to more fully supply the needs of Sunday Schools, we have prepared for 1897 a new Home Department Quarterly

which will be found to be exactly what has long been needed for the scholars of Home Departments. It will be published in the Senior Grade. Sunday-School superintendents and teachers desiring to examine any of these Quarterlies are requested to send for free samples, and decide for themselves regarding their distinctive merits, kindly specifying which ones and grades are desired.

For Teachers.

We publish Teachers' Quarterlies in four grades, containing explanatory and illustrative notes for their sole use. Price, 40 cents a year, 10 cents a copy.

W. A. WILDE & CO., Boston, Mass.

New Book. MAKERS of the AMERICAN REPUBLIC

By DAVID GREGG, D.D.

Historical Studies of Colonial Times; pen pictures of the Virginia Colonists, the Pilgrims, the Hollanders, the Puritans, the Quakers, the Scotch, and the Huguenots, with chapters on the influence of the Christian Church as a moral uplift in the formation and development of the Nation. 405 pages, $1.50.

MOTHER, HOME, AND HEAVEN. A Gift Book Edited by T. L. Cuyler, D.D. New Edition, $2.75.

CURIOSITIES OF THE BIBLE. 610 p., $2.00.

PATRIOTIC AND SECULAR. "Thoughts for the Occasion." Dates, Facts, and Beautiful Thoughts for Our Fifteen Patriotic Holidays. 576 p., $1.75.

ANNIVERSARY AND RELIGIOUS Occasions. A Companion Volume, Suggestive Thoughts for Timely Services. Agents Wanted. 516 p., $1.75.

E. B. TREAT, Publisher, New York

Christmas Music

HAIL THE KING!—A new service of Scripture and Song by Rev. ROBERT LOWRY. 5 cents.

Christmas Annual No. 27—Seven new, bright Carols by favorite composers. 4 cents.

Recitations for Christmas Time, No. 7—Eight pages admirable selections. 4 cents.

The Capture of Santa Claus—Dr. W. H. DOANE's recent Christmas Cantata. 30 cents.

Christmas Chimes for Little Voices—A very popular service by Mrs. W. F. CRAFTS and H. P. MAIN. Kindergarten features a special attraction. 6 cts.

Send 30c. for a copy of the new book Sacred Songs No. 1
By Sankey, McGranahan, and Stebbins

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
215 Wabash Ave., Chicago 76 East 9th St., New York

Phrenological Examinations

By Prof. NELSON SIZER and Miss JESSIE A. FOWLER, will aid young men and young women in selecting lite pursuit, in which their abilities can be used to the best advantage. Parents will be shown how to understand and train children, and deal with the delicate, tender, and precocious, so as to secure the best results. For further particulars address FOWLER & WELLS CO.
27 East 21st St., N. Y.

A New Method of Bible Study
LESSONS ON LUKE

Originally prepared for and used by the Sunday school of Center Church, New Haven, Conn. Thoroughly revised for Sunday-schools and Bible classes- Suggestive for teachers using other lessons. Send stamp for sample copy. Sample set, 25 cents. Address P. O. Box 1,626, New Haven, Conn.

"A FAIR FACE MAY PROVE A FOUL BARGAIN." MARRY
A PLAIN GIRL IF SHE USES SAPOLIO

Thanksgiving Under Difficulties

The Springfield "Republican," with its customary good judgment, comments as follows on the Thanksgiving proclamation of Governor Stone, of Missouri, who was one of the ablest and most devoted leaders of Mr. Bryan's campaign:

"The Eastern Governors have had no trouble in writing Thanksgiving proclamations, and most of them have put more heart and soul into them than ever before. It is with the free-silver Governors that the pinch comes. Note this from Governor Stone's proclamation in Missouri:

"The ways of Providence are not always entirely clear to mortal eyes, but in his own way and in his own time the Lord works out his ends. It is sufficient for us to know that God is always good and merciful. There are few conditions that could not be worse, and, no matter what causes may exist for discontent, there are always abundant reasons for gratitude and thanksgiving. The occurrences of the year have not been unmixed with evil, but it is safe to say that Missouri has as little reason to complain of the bad things, and as much reason to rejoice for the good things that have fallen to the common lot, as any other State in the Union.

"That is gracefully and reverentially put, it must be said, and a model under the circumstances."

It is related that the late Archbishop Benson, of Canterbury, and Cardinal Manning used to meet frequently at the Athenæum Club, and were good friends, though Manning thought that Benson was not rugged enough in his policy. A correspondent of the Archbishop, who was also a friend of the Cardinal, received from Lambeth Palace in 1886 a letter in which the Anglican Primate said of the Roman Cardinal: "You are not mistaken in thinking that I highly regard his person and his life, and value the goodness of Cardinal Manning's heart toward me," with more to the same purpose. The correspondent showed the letter at the time to Cardinal Manning, who read it with evident pleasure. "And I, too," he said, as he put it down, "have a great liking for my dear sister of Canterbury."

Arnold Constable & Co.

RICH FURS

Fur Capes, Collarettes, Pelerines, Boleros, and Muffs.

SABLE, ERMINE, OTTER, FOX, MOUFFLON

Fur-lined Coats, Carriage Robes, Trimming Furs.

BEAR SKINS

Broadway & 19th st.

NEW YORK

PROF. A. LOISETTE'S

Assimilative MEMORY System

The last, most complete and perfect edition

Mind-Wandering Cured. Speaking Without Notes.

Handsomely bound, with portrait and autograph. Price $2.50. Prospectus with opinions of Educators, Scientific, Professional, and Business Men all over the world FREE. Address A. LOISETTE, 237 Fifth Ave., N. Y. Not sold elsewhere.

THE

NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW

ALWAYS CONTAINS

The Right Topics,
By the Right Men,
At the Right Time

THE TOPICS are always those which are uppermost in the public mind—in religion, morals, politics, science, literature, business, finance, industrial economy, social and municipal affairs, etc.—in short, all subjects on which Americans require and desire to be informed. NO MAGAZINE FOLLOWS SO CLOSELY FROM MONTH TO MONTH THE COURSE OF PUBLIC INTEREST. All subjects are treated of impartially on both sides.

THE CONTRIBUTORS to the REVIEW are the men and women to whom the world looks for the most authoritative statements on the subjects of the day. No other periodical can point to such a succession of distinguished writers.

THE TIME when these subjects are treated of by these contributors is the very time when the subjects are in the public mind—not a month or two after people have ceased to think of them. The promptness with which the REVIEW furnishes its readers with the most authoritative information upon the topics of the day is one of its most valuable features.

VERDICT OF THE PRESS

Ahead of any magazine this country has ever seen in the importance of the topics it discusses and the eminence of its contributors.—Albany Argus.

No other magazine in the world so fully and fairly presents the opinions of the leading writers and thinkers on all questions of public interest.—Boston Journal.

In its discussions of current topics by distinguished writers it has no rival in the country.—Dubuque Herald.

Always abreast of the world.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

Not only the oldest but the best of our Reviews.—Rochester Post-Express.

Cannot be ignored by the reader who keeps along with current discussion.—Indianapolis Journal.

Continues to grow in interest. Its discussions of topics of present concern are marked by ability of the highest order, the most eminent representatives on both sides are chosen to expound their theories.—St. Paul (Minn.) Globe.

There is no other magazine that approaches it.—New York Sun.

This review is alive and can almost be described as a Preview.—The Christian Advocate, New York.

50 Cents a Copy. $5.00 a Year.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW, 291 Fifth Ave., New York

High Class Holiday Books

HENRY T. COATES & CO.

PHILADELPHIA

CONSTANTINOPLE. By EDMONDO DE AMICIS. Translated from the Italian by Maria H. Lansdale. Illustrated with 50 photogravures. With index and maps. Two volumes, crown 8vo.
Cloth, gilt tops, in cloth box (with slip covers) $5.00
Half calf, gilt tops 10.00
Large-paper edition, limited to 150 numbered copies. Proofs on India Paper, net $10.00

VENICE. Her History, Art, Industries, and Modern Life. Translated from the French by F. J. SITWELL. Illustrated with 28 photogravures. With index and map. One volume, crown 8vo.
Cloth, gilt top $3.00
Full polished calf, gilt edges 6.00

HOLLAND. By EDMONDO DE AMICIS. Translated from the Italian by Helen Zimmern. Illustrated with 44 photogravure illustrations and a map. Bound in two volumes, small 8vo, gilt tops.
Cloth, ornamental, in cloth box (with slip covers) $5.00
Half calf, gilt top 10.00

SPAIN AND THE SPANIARDS. By EDMONDO DE AMICIS. Translated from the Italian by Stanley Rhoads Yarnall, M.A. Illustrated with 45 photogravure illustrations and a map. With an index. Bound in two volumes, small 8vo, gilt tops.
Cloth, ornamental, in cloth box (with slip covers) $5.00
Half calf, gilt tops 10.00

HYPERION. A Romance. By HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW. Illustrated with 30 photogravures. One volume, small 8vo.
Half white and red cloth, and full gilt back. $3.50
Full polished calf, gilt edges 8.00

LORNA DOONE. A Romance of Exmoor. By R. D. BLACKMORE. Illustrated with 51 photogravure illustrations, reproduced from illustrations taken expressly for this edition. Bound in two volumes, small 8vo, with gilt tops, back and side. Cloth, ornamental, in cloth box (with slip covers) $6.00
Half calf, gilt tops 12.00
Large-paper edition, in 3 vols., limited to 250 copies. Proofs on India paper. Bound in white vellum style (with red slip covers), net $15.00

ROMOLA. Florentine Edition. By GEORGE ELIOT. Beautifully illustrated with 60 photogravures of views in Florence, sculpture, paintings, etc., with a portrait of George Eliot. In two volumes, small 8vo, gilt tops.
With slip covers in cloth box $6.00
Half-crushed levant, gilt tops 12.00

THE FRENCH REVOLUTION. By THOMAS CARLYLE. Beautifully illustrated with 60 photogravures. Bound in three volumes, small 8vo, with gilt tops, ornamental gilt side in fleur-de-lis design.
Cloth, in cloth box $8.00
Half calf, gilt tops 15.00
Large-paper edition, limited to 250 copies. Proofs on India paper. Bound in white vellum style (with red slip covers), net $15.00

QUEENS OF SOCIETY. By GRACE and PHILIP WHARTON. New Library Edition. Beautifully illustrated with 18 photogravures. Tastefully bound in two volumes.
Cloth extra $5.00
Half calf, gilt tops 8.00

WITS AND BEAUX OF SOCIETY. By GRACE and PHILIP WHARTON. New Library Edition. Beautifully illustrated with 20 photogravures. Two volumes, small 8vo.
Cloth, extra $5.00
Half calf, gilt tops 8.00

Ask for the "COATES" Editions

SENT POST OR EXPRESS PAID ON RECEIPT OF PRICE

(Trade Mark Registered.)

GLUTEN FLOUR

For Dyspepsia, Constipation, Diabetes and Obesity.

Unlike all other Flours, because it contains no bran and little starch—which cause acidity and flatulence. Nutritious and palatable in highest degree. Unrivalled in America or Europe.

PAMPHLET AND SAMPLE FREE.

Write to FARWELL & RHINES, Watertown, N.Y.

Health Baths

Right in your own home you can enjoy dry steam, vapor oxygen and perfumed baths by using the Improved Turko-Russian Folding Bath Cabinet.

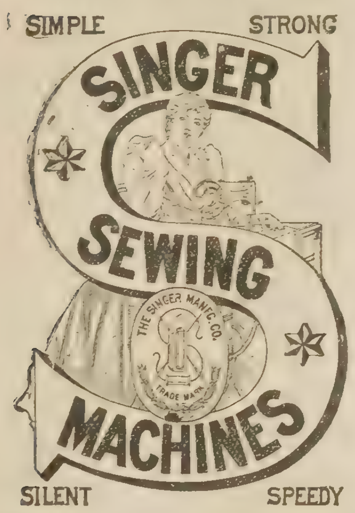
A perfect speedy cure for colds, rheumatism, etc. Helpful in every way. Send for circular free.

Mayor, Lane & Co., 132 White St., New York.

BEST INVESTMENT ON EARTH!!



They earn more money, in proportion to cost, than any other product of human ingenuity.

The SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

Van Camp's Boston Baked Pork and Beans

Prepared with tomato sauce. Ever ready, palatable hot or cold.

Choicest beans, juicy meat. Three sizes.

Send 6c for sample can.

VAN CAMP PACKING CO.,
Indianapolis, Ind.

Send for booklet; postal card will do.

WHY

WE SELL

Superior Phætons at much lower prices than any other firm in the world is explained in our Art Catalogue. Send for it!

The above cut illustrates "The Colombo," one of our popular styles. A low priced Phæton, with beauty, grace and strength. Can be fitted (if desired) with ball-bearing axles and rubber tires.

Columbus PHÆTON CO., Columbus, O.

MILLER LAMPS ARE

Beautiful, Delightful to use, Safe.

No other so Good. See them. Buy them for house, store, club, church, etc., and for GIFTS—Wedding and Holiday.

If not for sale by dealers buy at our store or order by mail from illustrated catalogue we send free.

MILLER Bicycle Lanterns are THE BEST.

Our Fine Brass and Onyx Tables are Beautiful.

EDWARD MILLER & CO. Manufacturers. Established 1844.

28 and 30 West Broadway, New York.

☞ For cool weather buy a "Miller" oil heater.

About People

—Our attention is called to the illustration of heredity by the Harvard senior class elections. The Class Poet is the son of Mr. Joseph H. Choate, and the Ivy Orator the son of Mr. Carl Schurz.

—The Governor-elect of Wisconsin, Major Edward Schofield, is the son of a Pennsylvania farmer. At the age of fourteen he became a printer's "devil" in a country newspaper office, later becoming a typesetter. He served through the war with great gallantry. He is now one of the most successful lumbermen of the Northwest.

—It is announced that Miss Mary French Field, the daughter of the late Eugene Field, will deliver a series of readings in New York City. The sudden death of Mr. Field has placed upon his daughter the responsibilities of a breadwinner. Some of her father's poems were taught to the daughter as recitations before they were written out for the public.

—The late Archbishop of Canterbury was an excellent equestrian. He seldom allowed a day to pass without a smart canter around Hyde Park. He never used either whip or spur. A mare, called Serena, was his favorite mount. The Archbishop paid $3,000 for her, and he taught her many tricks which he was fond of showing off to his friends. As soon as she saw the Archbishop waiting, she would trot entirely alone from the stables to the entrance of Lambeth College. Before the prelate mounted she would invariably nose all around his pockets in search of sugar. Dr. Benson was not the only bishop famous as a rider. The present Archbishop of Canterbury is a conspicuous figure in Rotten Row, and the late Bishop Wilberforce was killed while cantering over the Epsom downs.

—We learn from the "Westminster Gazette" that the new Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Temple, long Bishop of London, after coming out of the House of Lords one evening, hired a cab and was driven home to Fulham. He tendered the cabman the exact fare, two shillings. The cabman, hoping the Bishop would prove a good "fare," expostulated with his Lordship and asked for another shilling. The Bishop, however, firmly refused to be drawn. Thereupon cabby became abusive, and as a Parthian shot to his Lordship, who had turned on his heels to enter the palace, said: "You call yourself the head of St. Paul's Cathedral! D'ye think St. Paul, if he were alive and were living here with ten thousand a year, would try and 'do' a poor cabby by giving him only two shillings for a drive from Westminster to Fulham?" "No," said Dr. Temple; "if St. Paul were alive he would live at Lambeth Palace, where the fare from Westminster is only a shilling." Cabby collapsed.

—Regarding the kindness of heart of the late George W. Childs, the Washington "Post" tells the following story. Mr. Childs was leaving the "Ledger" office one night very late when he heard an alarm of fire, and an old man came running down the stairs. Mr. Childs asked him his business. "I'm going to report that fire," said the old man. "How long have you been a reporter on this paper?" asked Mr. Childs. "Fourteen years," said the old man. "Well," said Mr. Childs, "you go back to the city editor and tell him I say to send somebody who is younger." The old man obeyed. He was told afterward that he need not report for duty again. Mr. Childs had pensioned him. A year or so after that the man who told me the story happened to enter Mr. Childs's office just as the pensioner was leaving. The great editor was laughing. The pensioner, he said, had come in with a great deal of worry on his mind to ask a serious question. "Don't you get your money regularly?" asked Mr. Childs. "Oh, yes," answered the man, "but it has worried me a lot lately, sir; it has worried me a lot to know what's going to become of me when you die."

The Luxury of Travel

"The man who has never been West over the picturesque New York Central has a sensation in store for him that he cannot afford to forego. Nature has done almost as much for him in what he sees as mechanical skill has done in placing him in a magnificent hotel on wheels, and whirling him toward his destination on the very wings of the wind." Hardware.

Millions of Jars of Liebig Company's Extract of Beef are sold all 'round the world every year; and for over thirty years it has been known by good cooks everywhere as the standard for quality. Note the signature of Liebig on the jars.

J. v. Liebig

The Christmas Present for everybody

Beautiful to see;
Useful for its service

Desirable and valued as a present by all. Guaranteed to give satisfaction or money refunded. Ask your stationer for it—

Waterman's Ideal Fountain Pen

or send to us for the Handsomest Fountain Pen Catalogue ever published. Just issued.

L. E. Waterman Co.
155 and 157 Broadway, New York

Mention The Outlook

New Things Photographic

all come to our store. Some sell slowly, others quickly, but visitors can here see everything old and new and buy at lowest market prices for cash.

The Scovill & Adams Co., of New York
Nos. 60 and 62 East 11th St.
(Five doors from B'way)

Send 35 cents for a sample number of The Photographic Times, containing about 100 handsome photographic illustrations.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR 25 CTS.
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.
CONSUMPTION

The Business World

The Financial Week The most important circumstance in the financial world last week was the report of bank clearings, a report almost as gratifying as the phenomenal one of the week before. The increase throughout the United States was nearly 4 per cent. more than the great total of the previous week, about one-tenth more than in the corresponding week of 1895, one-fifth more than the same week of November, 1894, over one-fourth more than in 1893, and one-tenth more than in 1892. The continued flow of money into the banks helped last week's loan market, and money both on call and on time gradually grew easier. For the week the average rate for call money was about 3½ per cent., and time-loans are now quoted at 4 per cent. for thirty to ninety days. Commercial paper may be had on the basis of 4 1-5 to 5 per cent. for double names, ninety days to four months. Last week's statement of the New York City banks showed a gain in surplus reserve approximating $6,000,000, with over $4,000,000 specie and $7,000,000 legal tenders gained. Deposits had been increased by $22,000,000; loans by $9,500,000. The Bank of England's minimum rate of discount remains unchanged at 4 per cent. The foreign exchange market was characterized by a decline during the early days of the week followed by an advance, leaving rates practically unchanged. The continued firmness of foreign exchange has occasioned some questioning. The ante-election hoarding of gold caused a premium which stimulated imports of the metal to a point in excess of trade requirements. It was supposed that as soon as the election was over the return of gold which London fully expected and counted on would take place. That return has not taken place, and the foreign exchange market has grown stronger, if anything. The reason for the non-return of gold is, of course, the continuance of foreign commerce in our favor. The net gold reserve of the United States Treasury has now reached the sum of $126,000,000, and the stock of gold coin and gold bullion held has attained a larger total than has been held at any time since May, 1892. Last week's stock and bond market was characterized by inactivity. Total sales amounted to hardly two-thirds of the previous week's statement. The general list of prices is lower. Government bonds, however, are ¼ to ½ of 1 per cent. higher.

The Commercial Week According to the record kept by the "Journal of Commerce" there have been since election 383 resumptions of industries, while 291 establishments have increased their force. This has had a natural influence upon trade, but there has not been such a great boom in business as was predicted by some. It is to be hoped that present indications point to a steady, if slow, increase in both volume and prices. Last week saw the demand for commodities somewhat checked—in part by rumors of prospective tariff revision—and there were lower prices for wheat, corn, oats, cotton, sugar, petroleum, and coffee. Iron and steel remained practically unchanged, but the pool formed during the week may have some influence on rates. There were higher prices for flour, lumber, wool, and tobacco. Exports of wheat were not so large as those of the previous week. At San Francisco last week the British steamer Etrickdale was chartered to load wheat for Sydney, Australia. She will carry 5,000 tons. This is the first steamer in the history of the port of San Francisco to load a full cargo of wheat for Australia. One firm has now arranged for two cargoes of wheat by sailing-vessels for Australia. Wheat is also going from San Francisco to South Africa. According to "Bradstreet's," there were 308 business failures last week throughout the country, being 50 more than in the week previous, but 15 fewer than in the corresponding week one year ago, 13 more than in the like week in 1894, but 50 less than in the third week of November, 1893. As we go to press a telegram from Amsterdam, N. Y., gives the following interesting item:

> Owing to the carpet market being overloaded, the Sanford carpet mills in this city will shut down on Wednesday night. The firm does not say for how long a time the mills will remain closed, but probably until January 4. About two thousand hands are employed in the mills.

Secretary Morton's Report The annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture informs us that there will have been covered back into the Treasury since March, 1893, over $2,000,000. Mr. Morton attributes this great economy, effected without any loss of efficiency, to the improvement in the personnel of the force under civil service rules. The Secretary urges the extension of Government inspection to all animals intended for food, whether for consumption in the United States or abroad, and he maintains that the cost of this inspection should be paid by the packers. It is of interest to know that the total consumption of meat in Great Britain for last year was 1,100,000 tons. Three-quarters of this was produced at home. Of live meat arriving in the United Kingdom during the first half of the present year, the United States supplied three-quarters of the cattle and nearly half of the sheep. Our packers do not participate in the profits of swine-flesh consumption in Great Britain, because they do not cure such meats to suit the British demand; on the other hand, Canadian and Danish packers are increasing their shipments every year. Our bacon averages about two cents a pound below the Continental and Irish bacon, and about three cents below English. A gratifying statement is that the shipment of our horses to England is steadily on the increase. Coming now to the famous controversy over seeds distributed gratuitously by our Government, Mr. Morton states that during the present fiscal year such seeds weighed 230 tons, and occupied 30 mail cars in transit, while the cost of carrying them was over $70,000. Enough seed was sent out gratuitously to plant 115 square miles of garden, and each Congressman received enough to plant 163½ acres.

Farm Mortgages Secretary Morton asserts that the farms of the West and South are not more heavily burdened with mortgages than those of the East and Northeast. He declares that States along the North Atlantic are equally heavily encumbered with farm mortgages, and New Jersey carries a debt of this kind greater in proportion to its farm valuations than any State in the Union. Referring to the stress of competition which the American farmer is compelled to endure, Mr. Morton calls attention to nearly 2,000,000 farms of eighty acres each given away by the Government under the Homestead Act of 1866 during the last thirty years, and to the amount donated by the Timber Culture Law, equivalent to over 550,000 more farms of the same size. It is impossible, he says, for farmers in the old States to sell their products profitably in competition with those of the newer States grown upon lands which cost their owners nothing. Referring to the impression that greater rates of interest are charged for money loaned upon farms than for that loaned upon other kinds of real estate, Secretary Morton states that the rate of interest charged upon mortgages upon residential property other than farms averages 84-100 of one per cent. less than the rate of interest charged upon farm loans. In seventeen States the average rate on the latter is less than that demanded on other residential property. In two States the rates are the same upon urban and rural real estate. If the Western farmer pays a higher interest than the Eastern, so also does the Western merchant, common carrier, or manufacturer. Mr. Morton says:

> The farmers of the United States hold 72 out of each 100 farms—occupied by their owners—absolutely free from mortgages or other encumbrances. The debts secured by liens upon lands used for tillage and the production of crops aggregate, after throwing out the mortgage indebtedness of railroads and other corporations, less than one-sixth of the total indebtedness of the citizens of the United States secured upon real estate.
>
> Out of each thousand farms in the United States only 282 are mortgaged, and three-fourths of the money represented by the mortgages upon the 282 farms was for the purchase of those farms or for money borrowed to improve those farms.

FINANCIAL

AMERICAN FIRE
INSURANCE COMPANY
Office, Company's Building,
308 & 310 Walnut St.,
Philadelphia
A.D. 1810.

Guaranty Trust Co.
of New York
Formerly New York Guaranty and Indemnity Co.
Mutual Life Building
65 CEDAR STREET, N. Y.
Capital, - - - $2,000,000
Surplus, - - - $2,000,000

ACTS AS TRUSTEE FOR CORPORATIONS, FIRMS, AND INDIVIDUALS, AS GUARDIAN, EXECUTOR, AND ADMINISTRATOR. TAKES ENTIRE CHARGE OF REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATES.

INTEREST ALLOWED ON DEPOSITS
subject to check or on certificate.

WALTER G. OAKMAN, President.
ADRIAN ISELIN, Jr., Vice-President.
GEORGE R. TURNBULL, 2d Vice-President.
HENRY A. MURRAY, Treas. and Sec.
J. NELSON BORLAND, Assist. Treas. and Sec.

DIRECTORS
Samuel D. Babcock, Charles R. Henderson,
George F. Baker, Adrian Iselin, Jr.,
George S. Bowdoin, Augustus D. Juilliard,
August Belmont, James N. Jarvie,
Frederic Cromwell, Richard A. McCurdy,
Walter R. Gillette, Alexander E. Orr,
Robert Goelet, Walter G. Oakman,
G. G. Haven, Henry H. Rogers,
Oliver Harriman, H. McK. Twombly,
R. Somers Hayes, Frederick W. Vanderbilt,
William C. Whitney.

HOLDERS OF MORTGAGES
OWNERS OF REAL ESTATE
IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON
(Especially those holding securities negotiated by The Solicitors' Loan and Trust Company, The Lombard Investment Company, and The New England Loan & Trust Company.) We have special facilities for the collection of Mortgages and for the care and sale of Real Estate.
WRITE FOR INFORMATION CONCERNING YOUR SECURITIES
DAKIN & WALKER 300-301 Vanderbilt Building
Tacoma, Washington

CHEQUE BANK CHEQUES
ALL OVER
THE WORLD
Cheque Bank Cheques
are available. Use them if you want to send money anywhere.
Circular on application.
Agency of
THE U. S. CHEQUE BANK, LD.,
Frederick W. Perry, Manager
40 and 42 Wall St., N. Y.

CRIPPLE CREEK GOLD MINES
Send stamp for illustrated prospectus of the Santa Rosa Gold Mining Co., a beautiful work free.
F. H. PETTINGELL, Colorado Springs, Colo.

Don't Travel,— Telephone
16,000 Telephone Stations in New York City.
New York City Telephone Service from $75 a year.
NEW YORK TELEPHONE CO.
18 Cortlandt St.
115 W. 38th St.

The Value of Our Weather Bureau

Twenty-five years ago mariners on the Great Lakes depended upon their own weather lore to warn them of coming storms; then, although the number of boats plying those inland seas was much less than it is now, every severe storm that swept across them left death and destruction in its wake, and for days afterwards the dead were cast up by the now pacified waters, and the shores of the lakes were lined with wreckage. Happily, this is not now the case; the Weather Bureau is ever watching the changes in atmospheric conditions and giving mariners ample warning of coming storms; the angry waters and the howling winds vent their fury the one upon the other, while the great mass of lake shipping, so long the prey of the winds and the waves, rides safely at anchor in convenient harbors. Few seamen are so foolhardy as to leave port in the face of warnings of severe storms. Means for placing the warnings in their hands several hours before the storm bursts have been adopted, whether they be in port or midlake. Similar measures for the protection of shipping along the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific seaboards are in force. During the season of navigation on the Great Lakes, usually lasting from April 1 to December 15, many storms dangerous to shipping occur, and the value of property saved each year as a result of Weather Bureau warnings is enormous. I recall one severe storm that ravaged the lakes in September, 1894, when I was in charge of the Western district, with headquarters at Chicago, whence all warnings to the upper lakes are issued. This storm was forecast well in advance, and 250 vessels were reported as being held in port as a result of the warning. Not a single boat was wrecked nor a life lost. It is not claimed that 250 vessels were saved from destruction, but it is claimed that these craft, with their valuable cargoes, were placed in positions of safety, and that undoubtedly many of them would have been lost had they ventured out of port. I cite this instance to illustrate the value of Weather Bureau warnings to the great shipping interests of our country.

The truck-growers of the South and fruit-growers of California would lose thousands of dollars each year without notifications of frosts; while the plains of Kansas, Nebraska, Indian Territory, and Texas would be strewn with the carcasses of hundreds of cattle were it not for the forecasts of "blizzards" and "northers" sent to the cattlemen sufficiently in advance to enable them to round up their stock in places of shelter. Again, the immense flood-waves that move down our great rivers would probably damage the homes of hundreds of families, as well as merchandise and other movable property stored in cellars and lower floors, were it not for the warnings sent to those whose interests are affected by floods in the river.

The work of the Bureau in connection with that most important industry, farming, is one of its most valuable features. The function of the Bureau with which the farmers are intimately concerned and connected is known as the Climate and Crop Service. In the rural districts and smaller towns of each State the voluntary observers, besides reading thermometers and measuring rainfall each day and forwarding the results to the State headquarters—always a weather bureau station—send at the end of each week during the crop-growing season information as to the condition of the crops in their vicinities, together with statements as to how they compare with the week previous. Each State has from one hundred and fifty to six hundred such reporters making individual statements, and from these reports the directors at the State centers prepare telegrams and send them to the Central Office at Washington. From these different telegraphic reports a general summary of crop conditions throughout the country is made and disseminated by bulletin and by the press to those most interested. Farmers, dealers, shippers, and boards of trade are directly and pecuniarily benefited by the information thus conveyed.—Willis L. Moore, Chief of the U. S. Weather Bureau, in the Home Magazine.

"The Only Dentifrice of International Reputation."
Sozodont

Refined, intelligent persons in every civilized country of the globe have used SOZODONT for nearly forty years in preference to all other dentifrices. This fact commends it to everybody.

Sample by mail for three cents. Address P. O. Box 247, New York City. HALL & RUCKEL, Proprietors, New York and London.

HOME . . PORTRAITURE,

Views of the snowy landscape, with its leafless trees and fields of glistening ice, and flashlight pictures of congenial friends gathered about the warm fireside in the long winter evenings, all add to the charms of amateur photography.

It's easy, too, with our Film cartridge cameras. They load in daylight, have fine achromatic lenses, improved rotary shutters, set of three stops, and are beautifully finished. Booklet Free.

KEEP THEM IN MIND FOR CHRISTMAS.

Pocket Kodaks, Bullets, Bulls-Eyes. $5.00 to $15.00.

EASTMAN KODAK CO.
Rochester, N. Y.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER
ANTI-DYSPEPTIC AND TABLE WATER

DR. GEORGE A. FOOTE, Warrington, N. C., ex-President of the Medical Society of North Carolina: "A thorough acquaintance with the mineral waters, both of this country and Europe, justifies me in saying that BUFFALO LITHIA WATER Spring No. 1, as an anti-dyspeptic and table water, is the best of which I have any knowledge."

Sold by Druggists. Pamphlet free. Proprietor, Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.

$1 LINCOLN FOUNTAIN PEN $1

Solid Gold Pen—Hard Rubber Engraved Holder—Simple Construction—Always Ready—Never blots—No better working pen made—A regular $2.50 pen.
To introduce, mailed complete, boxed, with filler, for $1.00. Your money back—if you want it. Agents Wanted.
LINCOLN FOUNTAIN PEN CO., ROOM 5, 108 FULTON ST., NEW YORK

The HANDY BINDER for The Outlook, made to hold compactly and conveniently twenty-six numbers, will be sent by mail on receipt of sixty cents.
THE OUTLOOK CO., New York

Bits of Fun

"There is always room at the top." "So I have noticed when staying at a hotel."—Town Topics.

"I may not be very wealthy, but I can afford my own carriage and pair," said the fond father, as he wheeled his twins along the sidewalk.—Yale Record.

An Aberdonian who, making a morning call, was asked if he "wud tak' a dram." soberly declined. "'Twas too airly the day," he said; "besides, I've had a gill already."—Town and Country Journal.

"Of course," the King of Dahomey was at pains to further explain, "the Amazons are peculiar. Yes, the other day they stopped fighting right in the midst of a battle, because they had read somewhere that long engagements are no longer the rule."—Pearson's Weekly.

A pupil teacher from the board school at H., under examination in religious knowledge, was asked: "Can you explain the apparent discrepancies between Saint Stephen's speech and the Old Testament history?" Pause, puzzled look, then triumphant reply: "He used the Revised Version."—Christian Life.

It is said that a celebrated London barrister and magistrate, Sergeant Arabin, once told a prisoner before him at the Central Criminal Court that "if there was a clearer case of a man robbing his master, that case was this case." After passing sentence on this man, the sergeant said to him: "I, therefore, give you the opportunity of redeeming a character irredeemably lost!"—Exchange.

The latest story of German "thrift" is told at the expense of the proprietor of a circulating library, who charged for the wear and tear suffered by his books at the hands of his patrons. One volume came back to his scrutiny. "See here," he exclaimed, "there is a hole on page nineteen of my beautiful book. And, see here," he went on, turning over the leaf, "there's another on page twenty."—San Francisco Argonaut.

English as She is Spoke.—"Gosh!" said the man who was trying to read a newspaper in the trolley-car. "The English language is spoken by 125,000,000 persons." "It's mighty funny it can't be spoken in my family, then," said the man with a lapful of bundles. "My wife talks baby talk, my ten-year-old boy runs to hog Latin, and my eighteen-year-old daughter is devoted to Chimmie Fadden." Then the man with the bundles sighed and looked sadder.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

There is a Boston society woman who cannot remember names, neither can her daughter. One day they met a Mrs. Howe, and afterwards the daughter remarked: "Howe invented the sewing-machine, didn't he? Well, just think of machines and we'll be sure to get her name." The two ladies went to a tea a few days afterwards, and Mrs. Howe was there. Up sailed the mother with her sweetest smile, and exclaimed: "My dear Mrs. Singer, how delighted I am to see you again!" Soon afterwards the daughter appeared, and, with equal charm of manner, exclaimed: "My dear Mrs. Willcox, how are you?"—Springfield Republican.

A priest who was notorious for his frequent absence from his parish one day called upon Archbishop Ryan to ask for a vacation. His health required it, he said. "Do the physicians say that you need a change of air?" asked the prelate. "They do, your grace." "Then how would it do for you to try the air of your parish for a month or two?" At another time the Archbishop rebuked a priest for wearing a disreputable-looking silk hat. "But I would not give up that hat for twenty new ones," said the priest. "It belonged to my father, who fell in the rising of '48." "Ah," was the Archbishop's retort, "and evidently he fell on the hat."—Exchange.

False Economy

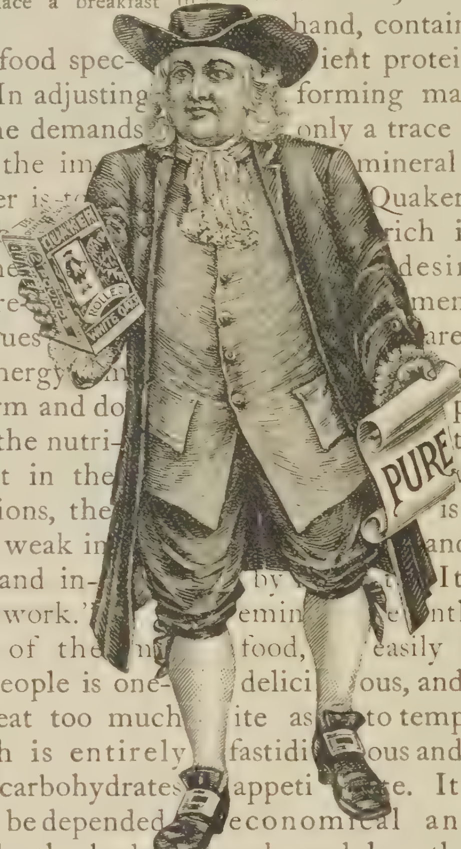
Is practiced by people who buy inferior articles of food. The Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Infant Health is the title of a valuable pamphlet for mothers. Sent free by New York Condensed Milk Co., N. Y.

Can't You Eat Breakfast?

Count that day lost whose lately risen sun
Views in thy place a breakfast ill begun.

A leading food specialist says: "In adjusting the diet to the demands of the body, the important matter is to provide enough protein for the building and repair of the tissues and enough energy [illegible] to keep it warm and do its work. If the nutriments are not in the right proportions, the body will be weak in its structure and inefficient in its work."

The diet of the majority of people is one-sided. We eat too much meat, which is entirely lacking in carbohydrates, which have to be depended upon to supply the body with heat and power. Meat, too, contains none of the necessary mineral substances. Wheat bread, on the other hand, contains insufficient protein or tissue forming material and only a trace of fat and mineral substance. Quaker Oats is rich in all the desired elements, which are so properly proportioned that the whole body is energized and built up by [illegible]. It is preeminently a health food, easily digested, delicious, and so exquisite as to tempt the most fastidious and rebellious appetite. It is, withal, economical and easy to cook and has that natural nutty flavor. If you can't eat breakfast try Quaker Oats.



Quaker Oats

SOLD ONLY IN 2 LB. PACKAGES.

WRIGHT'S
GENUINE HEALTH
NONE ARE GENUINE WITHOUT ONE OF THESE TRADE MARKS
Stamped on every Garment TO SECURE THE BEST INSIST on having only these Marks BRANDED
FOR WARMTH, COMFORT, DURABILITY, NON-IRRITATING & SANITARY QUALITIES
THESE GARMENTS ARE UNSURPASSED
BEWARE OF IMITATIONS
WRIGHT'S HEALTH UNDERWEAR
WRIGHT'S INTERSTICE UNDERWEAR
UNDERWEAR

CARMEL SOAP
MADE OF PURE OLIVE-OIL.
FOR NURSERY, TOILET, AND BATH.
CARMEL

A mission society at Haifa, Mt. Carmel, Palestine, make for their support and send to this country, CARMEL SOAP. It is made from the sweet olive oil so plentiful in that country, and is an absolutely safe soap for toilet and nursery, at moderate price. Sold by druggists and grocers.
Imported by A. Klipstein & Co., New York.

SAVE ½ YUUR FUEL

By using our (stove pipe) RADIATOR.
With its 120 Cross Tubes,
ONE stove or furnace does the work of TWO. Drop postal for proofs from prominent men.

TO INTRODUCE OUR RADIATOR,
the first order from each neighborhood filled at WHOLESALE price, and secures an agency. Write at once.

ROCHESTER RADIATOR COMPANY,
39 Furnace St., ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Trust

By Lizette Woodworth Reese

I am Thy grass, O Lord!
  I grow up sweet and tall,
But for a day; beneath Thy sword
  To lie at evenfall.

Yet have I not enough
  In that brief day of mine?
The wind, the bees, the wholesome stuff
  The sun pours out like wine.

Behold, this is my crown:
  Love will not let me be;
Love holds me here; love cuts me down;
  And it is well with me.

Love, love, keep it but so;
  Thy purpose is full plain:
I die, that after I may grow
  As tall, as sweet again.

—Selected.

The Wonderful British Post-office

The success of Great Britain's postal savings-bank system is familiar to most people, but it is not so well known that each of the 12,000 local post-offices which do a savings-bank business is also an office of life insurance and for the sale of annuities. The savings-bank system permits deposits of from one shilling to £50 a year. Interest is paid at the rate of 2½ per cent. When a depositor's total account exceeds £200 no more deposits can be made, but the depositor can reduce his account by buying consols through the post-office, investing any sum from one shilling upwards at the current price of the day. The post-office will also sell stock obtained through it, charging a commission of ninepence for the purchase or sale of stock in amounts below £25. Thousands of working people thus become owners of Government stock, while savings-banks under private management do not endeavor to compete with the Government bank. Life insurance can be obtained in amounts of from £5 to £100. The £5 insurance is for children between the ages of 8 and 14 years. The policies can be made payable at death, on the attainment of the age of 55, 60, or 65, and on the expiration of periods of 10, 15, and up to 40 years. A man or woman of 24 or 25 can be insured for £10 by a payment throughout life of four shillings and fourpence a year, or a penny a week, by an annual payment to the age of 60 of four shillings and tenpence, or by a single payment of £4 9s. The insurance premiums can be paid by deposits in the savings-banks of sums not less than one shilling. A policy-holder whose annual payment is four shillings and fourpence can put a penny stamp on a blank each week and hand in the blank at the local post-office when it has been filled up. Or the premiums can be paid out of his savings-bank deposits, if he has any, when they become due. Insurances up to £25 are made without a medical examination, but in case of death within the year only the amount of the first premium will be paid; in the case of death before the third premium is due, half the amount insured will be paid. If death occurs by accident, the full amount is paid. As a postmaster receives no commission on life insurance, the business is not pushed as it is by private companies. The annuities paid by the Government are both immediate and deferred. A man of 30 can secure an annuity of £10 by the payment of £204 10s. 10d.; if he is 50, by the payment of £149 19s. 2d. A boy of 10 can purchase an annuity of £1 payable at 50 for £5 11s. 9d., or four shillings and fourpence paid annually between 10 and 50. Nobody buys annuities of so small an amount as £1, but the payment of a penny a week affords a basis of calculation, and the literature issued by the Government to advertise the system is put in this form for convenience' sake.—Buffalo Courier.

Travel Up to Date

The New York Central offers unequaled advantages for through travel between the East and West. It is the only Trunk Line entering the city of New York; its Grand Central Station is in the very center of the metropolis, in the midst of the hotel, residence, and theater district; it is the only line protected its entire length by Block Signals: it has the fastest trains in the world; the finest equipment; scenery including the Hudson River, Mohawk Valley, and Niagara Falls.

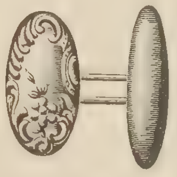
Holiday Gifts in Gold and Silver

Send for our beautiful 1897 Catalogue, containing hundreds of illustrations of the latest productions in Gold and Silver Jewelry, Diamonds, Watches, Silverware, Novelties, etc. We are now perfectly equipped in our mail order department. Any article promptly sent on receipt of price, and at our risk.

J.H.Johnston&Co.
17 Union Square
New York

ESTABLISHED 1844

Silver Necessaire Set, complete, $6.50, including Ribbon. Separately, prices are as follows: Scissors, $1.00; Glove Mender, $1.00; Thimble-case, $1.75; Needle-case, $1.00; Emery, 40c.; Wax, 40c. These pieces are illustrated one-half size.



Solid 14-K Gold Links, $5.00.

Shakespeare Silver Page-cutter and Book-mark. 75c.

6 new 14-K Gold Scarf or Lace Pins, $1.00 each.
No. 1, Variegated Gold Wreath. No. 2, Roman Knot. No. 3, Set with Pearls.
No. 4, Chased Knot. No. 5, Knot with Pearl. No. 6, Set with Pearls.

WINTON BICYCLES

"The Winton is a Winner."

Trusty, High Grade Wheels—
The Flush-Joint Beauties.

6th Season. 12 stylish models; 4 heights of frames; 11 valuable special features. Send for catalogue "K."

THE WINTON BICYCLE CO.,
141 Perkins Ave., Cleveland, O.
N. Y. Office, 123 Chambers Street.

A NEW QUARTERLY

FOR THE

HOME DEPARTMENT

In recognition of the need for a special Quarterly for Home Departments, we have had prepared with great care a Home Department Quarterly, which is based on the International Lessons, and is so constructed as to eminently satisfy the peculiar needs of these scholars.

Price, 4 cents each; 16 cents a year.

W. A. WILDE & CO., - Boston.

Quick as Thought

No time lost with WHITMAN'S
INSTANTANEOUS
CHOCOLATE.

Taste, flavor and quality the best. Put up in pound and half-pound tins.

Stephen F. Whitman & Son,
Sole Mfrs. Philadelphia.

KNICKERBOCKER.

No more round shoulders. Shoulder Brace and Suspender combined. Easily adjusted. Worn with comfort. Sizes for men, women, boys and girls. Sold by druggists, appliance stores, general stores, &c. By mail $1 per pair ($1.50 silk. Send chest measure around body under arms. Circulars free. Address

KNICKERBOCKER BRACE CO., EASTON, PENN., U. S. A.

Books Received

For Week ending November 13

ALLYN & BACON, BOSTON

Shakespeare, William. As You Like It. Edited by S. Thurber. 20 cts.

AMERICAN BOOK CO., NEW YORK

Fisher, George Park, D.D. A Brief History of the Nations and of Their Progress in Civilization. $1.50.

AMERICAN PUBLISHERS CORPORATION, NEW YORK

Stevenson, Edward Irenæus. A Matter of Temperament. $1.

ARNOLD & CO., PHILADELPHIA

King, Charles H. Cakes, Cake Decorations, and Desserts. $1.50.

EDWARD ARNOLD, NEW YORK

Oxenden, Maud. Interludes.
Rochefort, Henri. The Adventures of My Life. Arranged by the Author and Ernest W. Smith. 2 Vols. $7.50.
Upward, Allen. One of God's Dilemmas.

CHARLES H. BANES, PHILADELPHIA

Saunders, Marshall. For the Other Boy's Sake, and Other Stories. $1.

THE CENTURY CO., NEW YORK

Wood, Katharine B. Quotations for Occasions. $1.50.
Stuart, Ruth McEnery. Sonny. $1.
Fernald, Chester B. The Cat and the Cherub, and Other Stories. $1.50.
Furman, Lucy S. Stories of a Sanctified Town. $1.25.

HENRY T. COATES & CO., PHILADELPHIA

Castlemon, Harry. The Young Game-Warden.

THOMAS Y. CROWELL & CO., NEW YORK

Pratt, Mrs. Ella F. Happy Children. $1.50.
Pope, Alexander. Poetical Works. (Illustrated.) Edited by A. W. Ward. 2 Vols. $3.
Oxley, J. Macdonald. The Romance of Commerce. $1.25.
Hawthorne, Nathaniel. A Wonder Book for Girls and Boys. 75 cts.
Brown, Anna R. Culture and Reform. 35 cts.
Miller, J. R., D.D. A Gentle Heart. 35 cts.
Eliot, Charles W. The Happy Life. 35 cts.
Ray, Anna Chapin. Dick. $1.25.

DODD, MEAD & CO., NEW YORK

Fenn, George Manville. In Honour's Cause. $1.50.
Kernahan, Coulson. The Child, the Wise Man, and the Devil. 50 cts.
Pemberton, Max. A Puritan's Wife. $1.25.
Dawson, W. J. The Story of Hannah. $1.50.

R. F. FENNO & CO., NEW YORK

Russell, W. Clark. "What Cheer?" $1.25.

GINN & CO., BOSTON

Williams, Rufus P. Laboratory Manual of Inorganic Chemistry.

ARTHUR GRAY & CO., NEW YORK

Tobacco in Song and Story. Compiled by John Bain, Jr.

HARPER & BROS., NEW YORK

Bigelow, Poultney. History of the German Struggle for Liberty. 2 Vols. $5.
Burgin, G. B. Gascoigne's "Ghost." $1.
Pool, Maria Louise. In the First Person. $1.25.
Norris, W. E. Clarissa Furiosa. $1.50.
Mitchell, Langdon E. Love in the Backwoods. $1.25.
Underhill, Zoe D. The Dwarfs' Tailor and Other Fairy Tales. $1.75.
Ralph, Julian. Alone in China and Other Stories. $2.

H. L. HASTINGS, BOSTON

A Greek-English Lexicon to the New Testament. Revised by T. S. Green.

D. C. HEATH & CO., NEW YORK

Wilson, Annie E. Compendium of United States History and Literature. 40 cts.
Baumbach, Rudolf. Der Schwiegersohn. Annotated by Dr. Wilhelm Bernhardt. 30 cts.
Benedix, Roderich. Plautus und Terenz. Edited by Benjamin W. Wells. 25 cts.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., NEW YORK

Stowe, Harriet Beecher. Dred and Other Anti-Slavery Tales. (Riverside Edition.) 2 Vols. $3.
Stowe, Harriet Beecher. Stories, Sketches, and Studies. $1.50.
Fields, Annie. Authors and Friends. $1.50.
Whitney, Mrs. A. D. T. Friendly Letters to Girl Friends. $1.25.
Bellamy, William. A Second Century of Charades. $1.
Wilson, Woodrow. Mere Literature and Other Essays. $1.50.
Lowell, A. Lawrence. Governments and Parties in Continental Europe. 2 Vols. $5.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT CO., PHILADELPHIA

Meade, L. T. Catalina: Art Student. $1.25.

LOTHROP PUBLISHING CO., BOSTON

Sidney, Margaret. The Gingham Bag. $1.25.

THE MACMILLAN CO., NEW YORK

Winter, William. Gray Days and Gold.
Banks, Right Hon. Sir Joseph. Journal. Edited by Sir Joseph D. Hooker. $7.
Balzac, Honoré de. The Peasantry (Les Paysans). Translated by Ellen Marriage. Preface by George Saintsbury. $1.50.
Molesworth, Mrs. The Oriel Window. Illustrated by L. Leslie Brooke. $1.
Cameos from English History. By the author of "The Heir of Redclyffe." $1.25.
Sherwood, Margaret. A Puritan Bohemia. 75 cts.
Boldrewood, Rolf. The Sealskin Cloak. $1.25.

A. C. M'CLURG & CO., CHICAGO

Buchan, John. Musa Piscatrix. $1.50.
Case, Robert H. English Epithalamies. $1.75.

THE OPEN COURT PUBLISHING CO., CHICAGO

Carus, Paul. Karma.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, NEW YORK

Taylor, Henry Osborn. Ancient Ideals. 2 Vols. $5.
Fuller, Anna. A Literary Courtship, and A Venetian June. 2 Vols. (Boxed.) $2.50.
Grier, Sydney C. An Uncrowned King. $1.50.
Bowen, Herbert W. International Law. $1.25.

THE REFORM BUREAU, WASHINGTON, D.C.

Crafts, Rev. W. F. Before the Lost Arts, and Other Lectures. 60 cts.

FLEMING H. REVELL CO., NEW YORK

Whyte, Alexander, D. D. Bible Characters. Adam to Achan. $1.25.
Knight, William. The Arch of Titus and The Spoils of The Temple. $1.

R. H. RUSSELL & SON, NEW YORK

In Vanity Fair. Drawings by A. B. Wenzell. $5.
Gibson, C. D. Pictures of People. $5.
Phillips, H. W. Fables for the Times. Illustrated by T. R. Sullivant. $1.25.
Posters in Miniature. With Introduction by Edward Penfield. $1.50.
Poster Calendar. 1897. Designed by Edward Penfield. 50 cts.
Bangs, John Kendrick. The Mantel-Piece Minstrels and Other Stories. 75 cts.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, NEW YORK

Barrie, J. M. The Little Minister. Vol. I. (Thistle Edition.)
Barrie, J. M. A Window in Thrums; An Edinburgh Eleven. (Thistle Edition.)

SILVER, BURDETT & CO., BOSTON

Heilprin, Angelo. The Earth and Its Story.

FREDERICK A. STOKES CO., NEW YORK

Besant, Sir Walter. The City of Refuge.

STONE & KIMBALL, NEW YORK

Ross, Clinton. The Scarlet Coat.
Parker, Gilbert. A Romany of the Snows.
Bullock, Shan F. Ring o' Rushes.
James; or, Virtue Rewarded.

JOHN D. WATTLES & CO., PHILADELPHIA

Du Bois, Patterson. The Point of Contact in Teaching. 60 cts.

"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" are a simple and convenient remedy for Bronchial Affections and Coughs. Carry them in your pocket.

No lamp is a good one without its particular chimney.

The Index tells what Number to get; sent free.

"Pearl top" or "pearl glass."

Geo A Macbeth Co

Pittsburgh Pa

Somatose is a Perfect Food, Tonic and Restorative. It contains the nourishing elements of meat. Prepared for invalids and dyspeptics and those needing nourishment and a restored appetite. May be taken dry, or in water, milk, &c.

At druggists, in 2 oz., ¼, ½ and 1 lb. tins.

Also the following combinations, Somatose-Biscuit, Somatose-Cocoa, Somatose-Chocolate - each containing 10 per cent. Somatose. Very convenient and palatable preparations.

Pamphlets mailed by Schieffelin & Co., New York, agents for Farbenfabriken vorm. Friedr. Bayer & Co., Elberfeld.

$3,400.00 CASH AND PRIZES GIVEN FREE EACH MONTH FOR Sunlight SOAP WRAPPERS

As follows:

4 First Prizes, each of $100 Cash - - - $ 400.00
20 Second " " " $100 PIERCE SPECIAL Bicycles* 2,000.00
40 Third " " " $ 25 Gold Watches - 1,000.00

Cash and Prizes given each month - $3,400.00
12

Total given during 12 mos. 1897, $40,800.00

HOW TO OBTAIN THEM.

Competitors to save as many SUNLIGHT SOAP Wrappers as they can collect. Cut off the top portion of each wrapper, that portion containing the heading "SUNLIGHT SOAP." These (called "Coupons") are to be sent, postage fully paid, enclosed with a sheet of paper stating Competitor's full name and address and the number of Coupons sent in, to Lever Bros., Ltd., New York, marked on outside Wrapper (top left hand corner) with NUMBER of the DISTRICT Competitor lives in.

No. of District	NAME OF DISTRICT.
1	New York City, Brooklyn, Long and Staten Islands, New Jersey.
2	New York State (outside of N. Y. City, Brooklyn, Long and Staten Islands).
3	Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia and District of Columbia.
4	The New England States.

*The Bicycles are the celebrated Pierce Special, 1897 Pattern, m'f'd by Geo. N. Pierce & Co., of Buffalo, Boston and New York. Fitted with Hartford Tires, First Class Nickle Lamp, New Departure Bell, Standard Cyclometer, and Hunt Lace Saddle.

RULES.

1. Every month during 1897 in each of the 4 districts prizes will be awarded as follows:

The 1 Competitor who sends in the Largest Number of coupons from the district in which he or she resides will receive $100 Cash.

The 5 Competitors who send in the Next Largest Numbers of coupons from the district in which they reside will Each receive at winner's option a lady's or gentleman's Pierce Special bicycle, price $100,00.

The 10 Competitors who send in the Next Largest Numbers of coupons from the district in which they reside will Each receive at winner's option a lady's or gentleman's Gold Watch, price $25.

2. The Competitions will Close the Last Day of Each Month during 1897. Coupons received too late for one month's competition will be put into the next.

3. Competitors who obtain wrappers from unsold soap in dealer's stock will be disqualified. Employees of Lever Brothers, Ltd., and their families, are debarred from competing.

4. A printed list of Winners in Competitor's district will be forwarded to Competitors in about 21 days after each competition closes.

5. Lever Brothers, Ltd., will endeavor to award the prizes fairly to the best of their ability and judgment, but it is understood that all who compete agree to accept the award of Lever Brothers, Ltd., as final.

LEVER BROS., Ltd., New York.

Trigestia

A combination of Pepsin, Bismuth, and Nux Vomica, cures Dyspepsia and Indigestion because of its triple effect—that of the actual solvent action of the Pepsin on all articles of food, the prevention of fermentation and formation of gases by the Bismuth, and the stimulant effect of the Nux Vomica (which is undoubtedly the best known tonic for nervous dyspepsia) on the secretion of the digestive fluids.

Price, 25 and 50 Cents per Bottle, postpaid

A. J. DITMAN, Chemist, 2 Barclay Street, NEW YORK

IF YOUR BABY has indigestion and colic it may be due to improper feeding. Do not dose the child with medicine while still continuing the improper feeding. The better way is to remove the cause (improper food) and then there will be no colic and no need of medicine. Mellin's Food is very nourishing and easily digested. Mellin's Food prevents indigestion and colic.

WE REGARD Mellin's Food very highly, having a baby boy eight months old who has never used any food but this and is a good natured, healthy child. Has never been troubled with babies' enemy, colic.
Mrs. A. B. Knight,
Manlius, N. Y.

MELLIN'S FOOD Makes Milk Like Mothers' Milk

Write to us (a postal will do) and we will send you a sample of Mellin's Food free of charge.

Doliber-Goodale Company, Boston, Mass.

Absolutely Pure—
Delicious—Nutritious

THE BREAKFAST COCOA
Made by
WALTER BAKER & CO. LIMITED
Established Dorchester, Mass., 1780

Costs less than one cent a cup. No chemicals.
Always ask for Walter Baker & Co.'s
BREAKFAST COCOA
Made at Dorchester, Mass.

It bears their Trade-Mark, "La Belle Chocolatière," on every can.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

"OXFORD" EDITIONS FOR CHRISTMAS GIFTS
JUST PUBLISHED
The Treasury of American Sacred Song

With Notes Explanatory and Biographical. Selected and Edited by W. GARRETT HORDER, Editor of "The Poet's Bible," etc. Beautifully printed on Oxford paper. 12mo, half vellum, $3.00.

Dainty Christmas Gifts
Oxford Miniature Poets
Burns—Byron—Wordsworth

Complete editions in 3, 4, and 5 Volumes. The Daintiest and Most Exquisite specimens of book-making ever produced.

Size, 4½x3½, and only 3 inches in thickness

By the use of the "Oxford" India Paper the dimensions have been reduced very much below those of any book containing the same amount of letterpress matter.

At prices from $4.00 to $12.50

Also in One Volume, beautifully printed on Fine White and the famous Oxford India Papers, from $1.50 upwards. Also in One and Six Volumes uniform with above, Shakespeare, Scott.

* The Oxford India Paper has made a revolution in printing editions of Poets. It has made it possible to read that which it is easy to carry about.*

OXFORD "THUMB" EDITIONS
OF THE
IMITATION OF CHRIST,
CHRISTIAN YEAR, Etc.

Remarkable specimens of typography, clearly and beautifully printed on Oxford India Paper, from 60 cents upwards; also complete line 32mo and 18mo editions, from 35 cents upwards.

An Epoch in Bible-Making

JUST PUBLISHED! Eighteen New Copyright Editions of the GENUINE OXFORD TEACHERS' BIBLES

With New Helps, Maps, and 124 full-page Plates. The Best Biblical Compilation of the age, and the most modern of all Teachers' Bibles, placing the Student, Preacher, and Teacher in possession of recent discoveries in Bible Lands. THE BEST IN ALL RESPECTS. New and specially prepared copyright helps and illustrations are valuable features of these new editions. At prices from $1.25 to $20.00.

BIBLE ILLUSTRATIONS

One hundred and twenty-four full-page Plates, with descriptive letter-press illustrating Biblical Versions and Antiquities, being an Appendix to the "Oxford" Bible for Teachers. Long Primer, 8vo, cloth, red edges, $1.00.

"OXFORD"
REVISED APOCRYPHAS

"The Completion of the Revised Version." At prices from 75 cents upwards.

Just Published
"OXFORD" HELPS TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE

Comprising all the additional matter that is contained in the new edition of the genuine "Oxford" Teachers' Bible. Including 124 full-page Plates. Bound in one volume. At prices from 60 cents to $1.50.

For sale by all Booksellers. Send for Catalogue.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
AMERICAN BRANCH
HENRY FROWDE, 91 & 93 Fifth Ave., New York

THE BIBLE AND THE CHILD

CLOTH. 16mo. PRICE, $1.00.

A series of Essays on
THE HIGHER CRITICISM AND THE TEACHING OF THE YOUNG

By the Very Rev. F. W. FARRAR, Dean of Canterbury; the Rev. ROBERT F. HORTON; ARTHUR S. PEAKE, M.A.; the Very Rev. W. H. FREMANTLE, Dean of Ripon; the Rev. FRANK C. PORTER, Yale Divinity School; Professor WALTER F. ADENEY.

With others on
THE BIBLE AS LITERATURE
By the Rev. WASHINGTON GLADDEN; and
THE BIBLE AS REARRANGED BY MODERN CRITICISM
By the Rev. LYMAN ABBOTT, D.D., Plymouth Church, Brooklyn.

Readers of THE OUTLOOK will remember these papers, first issued in its columns, and will welcome their publication in a convenient and attractive book form. The work will prove of vital interest to many who seek the right way of presenting the Bible to the young in the light of the HIGHER CRITICISM.

"The Bible and the Child" will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of one dollar, by either THE OUTLOOK COMPANY, 13 Astor Place, New York, or the publishers of the book, THE MACMILLAN COMPANY, 66 Fifth Avenue, New York.

The Witherbee Memorial Building at Mineville, N. Y., and its Work

By Professor J. F. Kemp

School of Mines, Columbia University

As a rule, mining towns are ephemeral. This character is inseparable from the business, because most mines have comparatively short life-periods, when measured in years. A mining enterprise starts with a certain amount of coal or ore, which it is to extract from the ground. When the supply is exhausted there remain but a hole and a quantity of more or less useless machinery. Mining towns, moreover, are usually situated in wild and somewhat inaccessible parts of the country. Their surroundings are commonly mountainous, because areas of violent geological disturbance favor the formation of ore bodies. As a natural result, owners of mines seldom feel any special or permanent interest in the community from which they derive their wealth. They and their families generally reside in some distant city, where opportunities for social or other enjoyment are more abundant. The mines are managed by representatives, and the miners usually have slight intercourse with their real employers.

All this makes it the more gratifying to record in the columns of The Outlook an instance in which the owners of large and exceptionally permanent property have been moved to keep up their interest in their employees and to give freely of their means for the social and educational improvement of the families dependent on the mining operations.

As settlements pushed into the Adirondack wilderness in the early years of the present century, great bodies of iron ore were discovered on the east side, near Lake Champlain. The largest of these, as developments have since shown, are in the village of Mineville, six miles northwest of Port Henry. Ore was noted here as early as 1810, and some small pits were opened during the next forty years. But not until 1849, when the control and management of one large group passed into the hands of the firm, S. H. and J. G. Witherbee, did the local industry really prove serious. From that time on it developed in enormous degree, and especially in the twenty-five years immediately following the war, it reached its high tide of success. From 1,000 to 1,500 men found employment in the various mines, and nearly half a million tons of ore, as a maximum, were annually produced.

In the course of time the two Messrs. Witherbee passed away, and their ownership in the mines descended to their children. About five years ago the immediate heirs, Mr. F. S. Witherbee and Mrs. Black, of New York; Mr. Walter C. Witherbee, of Port Henry; Mrs. Francis, of Brooklyn, and the late Mrs. Wallace C. Foote, of Port Henry, determined to erect a memorial building to the two founders of the original firm. The purpose of the building was to promote the social enjoyment and general welfare of the families which form the community of Mineville. Accordingly, near the mines, and on a site at once convenient and commanding, the Witherbee Memorial Building was erected. From the porch one looks for six miles down the broad valley of Moriah township to Lake Champlain, lying 1,200 feet below. On the lake shore, in full view, are the historic ruins of Fort Frederick, and far beyond, the serrated line of the Green Mountains. South, west, and north, the foothills of the Adirondacks close in about the valley.

As one enters the main doorway of the Memorial Building a spacious corridor meets the eye, from which an assembly hall opens out to the rear. The hall is able to seat four hundred, and is attractive and well adapted for the entertainments that are given in it at intervals. On the right of the entrance is a large and comfortable reading-room, where the daily and weekly papers, the magazines, and technical journals are displayed in great completeness, while in an adjoining room is the nucleus of a library, with a well-selected series of books. Still beyond is a dining-room, and near it, as well as upstairs, are the living-rooms and guest-rooms of the family having the building in charge. Several of the teachers connected with the work of the building likewise have apartments. The library-room is used during the day for the kindergarten, but it cannot contain all the little scholars, and so additional rooms are provided on the floor above. The kindergarten is the especial protégé of Mrs. Walter Witherbee. It is taught by Miss Wilson, of New York, and two assistants. Even with the recent great depression in the iron business, and with the cessation of mining, eighty children were cared for in this department last year, and during the same period a day nursery was added. Once a month the mothers are also entertained, and from time to time Mrs. Walter Witherbee herself meets with them, adding to the regular exercises the greater gift of her sympathy and encouragement.

On the floor below the reading-room and kindergarten a cooking-school is maintained by Mrs. F. S. Witherbee. It is taught and managed by Mrs. R. T. Saville, of Mineville, who prepared for the work by a thorough inspection of similar schools in and around New York. The equipment in china, cutlery, linen, and utensils is excellent. Each class at each session cooks and serves a meal according to a series of menus and receipts, which are distributed daily. Every effort is made to place home-making on the high plane that it should occupy. Last year there were three classes, consisting in all of seventy girls. During the year the oldest class cooked and served a dinner to their patroness and her friends, and, by way of concluding the session, the cooking-school entertained with refreshments three hundred invited guests.

In the rear of the cooking-school two large rooms are devoted to the uses of the primary and high schools of Mineville, the village itself engaging and supporting the teachers. On the same floor are bath-rooms with bath-tubs and shower-baths, reminding one strongly of our better gymnasiums. A pleasant room also contains a billiard-table and a pool-table, which have exerted a strong anti-saloon influence.

In connection with the building a boys' club was organized last year, and was instructed in military drill. A sewing-class of girls meets once a week. Twice a week through the summer refreshments have been served by the young ladies of the building at merely nominal rates, and these have served to bring together the families of the town in a very pleasant social way.

The building is in immediate charge of the Rev. Mr. Bryant, who, with his family, resides in it, and who, by his tactful furtherance of the purposes of the Memorial, contributes in a very vital way to its success. The general oversight of the entire enterprise is in the hands of Mr. Lewis Francis, a grandson of Mr. S. H. Witherbee.

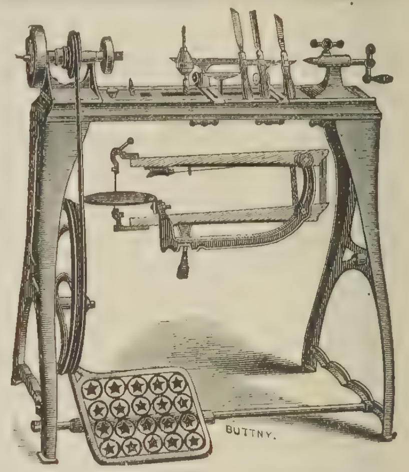
The purpose of the Witherbee Memorial was to bring within the reach of the people employed in the mines, and of their families, means of social and intellectual enjoyment not otherwise available. It really is a club-house and philanthropic center. It is entirely free in all its departments to all who will properly use it, and it is worthy of the cordial good wishes of all who feel interested in the general advancement of their fellows. So far as it can it refutes the oft-made charge that employers care naught for the welfare of their employees, and it furnishes an example deserving of imitation by many mine-owners and manufacturers.

The Overhead Check

In a valuable article "A Lover of Horses" enumerates the cruelties heaped upon the horse, and adds: "But all these things put together do not hurt like the check-rein; that portion of the spine in the neck (constantly irritated by the check) is, in a horse as in a man, very sensitive. If a man's neck be forced into any constrained position and held there, the keenest suffering quickly follows. If a horse's head be fastened down a foot below its natural place, he will suffer, but not a tenth part as much as if fastened a foot above it. The great strain is felt at the top of the neck, and another common effect of the check is stiff shoulders and weak knees." He tells us that for years he has observed in New York City that car and omnibus horses, although hard-worked and on hardest pavements, very rarely become stiff forward, because their heads are free, while even in the country livery horses wearing tight check-reins are almost sure to become stiff.—New York Tribune.

Women and Political Education

The Women's Auxiliary of the Civil Service Reform Association and the League for Political Education announce a series of addresses on Civil Service Reform, to be given at the Berkeley Lyceum Theater, 23 West Forty-fourth Street, on successive Wednesday afternoons, from November 11 to December 30, inclusive, at 4:30 P.M. Admission to each meeting, twenty-five cents.



If you cannot get a Bicycle, you can get a Scroll Saws which is better. The one means pleasure, the other business. The one a continuous outgo, the other a continuous income. The Bicycle sends the boy abroad, the Saw keeps him at home. They are both alike good exercise. If a boy wants a Scroll Saw, it is a sign that he can use it to advantage. We have the names of many thousands who have turned these saws to great profit during the past fifteen years. Give an ingenious boy the tools and he will see to all the rest. We sell the best foot-power saw (called the No. 1 Rogers) with Drilling attachment, Blower, Tools, and Designs, for $3.50. The Goodell Lathe, as seen in the above cut, costs $12, with Scroll Saw Attachment, and all necessary tools and designs. We are now the headquarters for all things in the scroll-sawing line, including Foot and Hand Machines, Star Saw Blades, Designs of every kind, Wood, Clock Movements, etc., etc. Send money for what you want, or buy from hardware dealers.

Circulars with full particulars sent to any address on receipt of a two-cent postage stamp.

MILLER'S FALLS COMPANY

93 Reade Street, New York

NOW READY

The Christmas Scribner

9 SHORT STORIES

Richard Harding Davis writes of an incident in connection with the Jameson raid. Kenneth Grahame, whose stories of childhood have delighted a host of readers, gives us a "circus" story with very original illustrations by Oliver Herford, printed in colors. Other stories by J. F. Stimson (J. S. of Dale), T. R. Sullivan, Clinton Ross, W. H. Shelton, James Barnes, Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer, and Nathaniel Stevenson.

The leading article is a most appreciative account of the work of late President of the Royal Academy, with many beautiful illustrations.

SIR JOHN MILLAIS

THREE ILLUSTRATED POEMS

are notable features of the number. The illustrations are by The Misses Cowles, Will H. Low, and Henry McCarter.

Special Cover Design printed in gold and colors.

PRICE, 25 CENTS

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

153 Fifth Ave., New York

Winter Foot Comfort

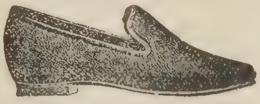
For Everybody

is offered in the 50 odd styles for Men, Women and Children in All-Felt and Felt-and-Leather Combination of the celebrated

Alfred Dolge Felt Slippers and Shoes

No. 356.
WOMEN'S FUR-TRIMMED ROMEO
Made of Dolge Felt. Colors—drab, red, and black. Price, $2.50.

No. 241
MEN'S ROMEO
Made of black Dolge Felt, seamless, with leather sole and heel. All sizes. Price, $2.25



No. 141
MEN'S SLIPPER
Made of Dolge Felt with leather sole and heel. Price, $2.00.

No. 151
WOMEN'S SLIPPER
In red and black. Price, $1.50. Sent by mail, prepaid.

Orders filled promptly by mail, prepaid, but—

Christmas Orders should reach us early

GUARANTEED GOOD BY THIS TRADE MARK

Felt is for many reasons the only suitable foot covering for winter. This fact and its explanation are fully given in an illustrated booklet, which we send free. This season a number of the styles of the Alfred Dolge Felt Goods add to their known comfort and warmth a shapeliness and style which make them especially suited for the Women's and the Men's Romeos being especially suited for this purpose.

"On a Felt Footing"

Christmas Gifts

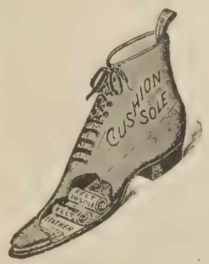
Concerning shoes, those who have worn them say that in every way the Dolge Cushion Sole Shoes for Women and Men are the finest articles of their kind obtainable.

No. 722
"MOTHER'S COMFORT"
Made of Dolge Felt, fur-trimmed, soft, warm noiseless. Price, $2.50.

No. 351
WOMEN'S FELT LACE SHOE
with leather sole and heel, a very popular shoe. Price, $2.25.



No. 910
MEN'S STORM-PROOF CUSHION SOLE LACE SHOE
A fine calf-skin shoe wool, lined with triple felt innersole. Price, $6.00.

No. 1065
WOMEN'S CUSHION SOLE SHOE
A charming, smart-looking walking-boot, leather, wool lined, with felt innersoles. Price, $5.00.

DANIEL GREEN & CO.,
Nos. 119 & 121 West 23d Street, New York City.

Good Deeds

The will of Mrs. Maria Louisa Vanderbilt, the widow of the late William H. Vanderbilt, contains a notable bequest—that of $250,000 to St. Bartholomew's Church, New York City, the money to be used especially in the mission of that church in East Forty-second Street, which Mrs. Vanderbilt had annually and liberally supported. The main building was erected as a gift from her and from her son Cornelius.

The King of Italy does not always get the credit for his good deeds, but all Italy has lately been ringing with his praises. In his own name and in that of the Queen, the King placed at the disposal of a commission to distribute among the families of the dead and wounded in the African war the sum of 400,000 lire ($80,000). In addition to this, the King has given $20,000 to the Red Cross Society.

The late John Maxson Brown, of Manasquan, N. J., who has just died in his eighty-ninth year, had saved hundreds of persons from drowning. Most of this splendid work was done at times when there was no life-saving station on the New Jersey coast. Our older readers may remember the terrible wreckings of the New Eva, the Cornelius Grinnell, the Catherine Jackson, the New York, and other ships on that coast. Mr. Brown's house near Manasquan had become a pilgrimage place, and he was often visited by those whom he had saved.

According to a dispatch from Washington last week King Oscar of Sweden has done a gracious act in memory of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel D. Youmans, of New York City, who were killed while driving along a mountain road near Bergen, Norway. The State Department has received photographs and a description of the monument erected on the spot from the United States Consul at Bergen. The monument is a roughly hewn shaft resting upon a massive base, with a Norwegian inscription, which, translated, is: "Mr. and Mrs. Daniel D. Youmans, of New York. Met their death here by an accident on the 4th of July, 1896. God's grace be with them." On the reverse side is: "Oscar the Second erected this memorial."

Over-coats

For Men and Boys

These coats are made in the height of fashion. The material is blue Kersey, the finish is excellent, the fit perfect and the quality is unsurpassed at much higher prices. Boys' sizes, 6 to 18 years, only $5.50.

Men's sizes, only

$7.50.

The color is fast—will not fade. No merchant tailor could possibly make such coats to order for less than double the prices.

Money refunded, if desired.

Illustrated catalogue of clothing mailed to any address upon request.

Strawbridge & Clothier
Philadelphia

. . . TAKE A COMBINATION BOX OF THE . . .

LARKIN SOAPS On Thirty Days Trial. From Factory to Family.

And get a "Chautauqua" Desk Free. Most Popular Ever Made.

Number in use exceeds any other one article of furniture. Has gladdened half a million hearts. Solid Oak throughout, hand-rubbed finish. Very handsome carvings. It stands 5 ft. high, is 2½ ft. wide, writing bed 24 in. deep. Drop leaf closes and locks. A brass rod for curtain.

. . . OR A . . .

"Chautauqua" Rocker and Reclining Chair

It can be adjusted to any position, and changed at will by the occupant while reclining. A synonym of luxurious ease and comfort. It is built of oak, polished antique finish, with beautifully-grained three-ply veneer back. The seat, head and foot rests are upholstered with silk plush in crimson, old red, tobacco brown, old gold, blue or olive, as desired. It is very strong and perfectly simple in construction. It is fully guaranteed. Our soaps are sold entirely on their merits with a guarantee of purity. Thousands of families use them, and have for many years, in every locality, many in your vicinity.

OUR GREAT COMBINATION BOX.

100 BARS "SWEET HOME" SOAP . . . Enough to last an average family one full year. For all laundry and household purposes it has no superior.	$5.00	1-4 DOZ. LARKIN'S TAR SOAP . . . Infallible preventive of dandruff. Unequalled for washing ladies' hair.	.30
10 BARS WHITE WOOLEN SOAP . . . . A perfect soap for flannels.	.70	1-4 DOZ. SULPHUR SOAP	.30
12 PKGS. BORAXINE SOAP POWDER (full lbs.) An unequalled laundry luxury.	1.20	1 BOTTLE, 1 OZ., MODJESKA PERFUME . . Delicate, refined, popular, lasting.	.30
1-4 DOZ. MODJESKA COMPLEXION SOAP . Exquisite for ladies and children. A matchless beautifier.	.60	1 JAR, 2 OZS., MODJESKA COLD CREAM . Soothing. Cures chapped skin.	.25
1-4 DOZ. OLD ENGLISH CASTILE SOAP .	.30	1 BOTTLE MODJESKA TOOTH POWDER . Preserves the teeth, hardens the gums, sweetens the breath.	.25
1-4 DOZ. CREME OATMEAL TOILET SOAP .	.25	1 PACKET SPANISH ROSE SACHET . .	.20
1-4 DOZ. ELITE GLYCERINE TOILET SOAP .	.25	1 STICK NAPOLEON SHAVING SOAP . .	.10
		THE CONTENTS, BOUGHT AT RETAIL, COST	$10.00
		PREMIUM WORTH AT RETAIL . . .	$10.00
All for $10.00.		(You get the Premium you select Gratis.)	$20.00

Subscribers to this Paper may use the Goods 30 Days before Bill is Due.

After trial you—the consumer—pay the usual retail value of the Soaps only. All middlemen's profits accrue to you in a valuable premium. The manufacturer alone adds Value; every middleman adds Cost. The Larkin plan saves you half the cost—saves you half the regular retail prices. Thousands of readers of this paper know these facts.

If after thirty days' trial you find all the Soaps, etc., of unexcelled quality and the Premium entirely satisfactory and as represented, remit $10.00; if not, notify us goods are subject to our order, we make no charge for what you have used.

Many people prefer to send cash with order—it is not asked—but if you remit in advance, you will receive in addition to all extras named, a nice present for the lady of the house, and shipment day after order is received. Your money will be refunded without argument or comment if the Box or Premium does not prove all expected. We guarantee the safe delivery of all goods.

Booklet Handsomely Illustrating other Premiums sent on request.

Estab. 1875. Incor. 1892. THE LARKIN SOAP MFG. CO., Buffalo, N. Y.

The Independent, New York, says: The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co. make our readers a wonderful offer. Not only do they give you a box of excellent laundry soap and toilet articles of great value, but they also give each purchaser a valuable premium, and we personally know they carry out what they promise.

From the Northwestern Christian Advocate: For the Soaps manufactured by the Larkin Soap Mfg. Co. we have heard many expressions of satisfaction and commendation. Knowing what we do we recommend the Company with confidence.

ALL THE YEAR

we have been urging Asthma and Hay Fever Sufferers to begin the constitutional treatment that brings not only relief, but a Cure that Stays. Hundreds have done so, and here's a letter from one of them:

DEAR DOCTOR HAYES: BREWSTER, N. Y., SEPT. 14, 1896.

I am satisfied your treatment has been very helpful and beyond my expectations. The catarrhal symptoms have been much lighter and not of as long duration, and as for Asthma, the effect of the medicines is marvellous. To go to bed and sleep all night is for me, at this season of the year, something I have not been able to do for 30 years. Now I sleep all night and in the morning I am free from the cough that is so weakening and depressing. When I compare myself with others about here who have Hay-Fever and are not taking your treatment, I am away ahead of them. Perhaps I am too enthusiastic, but when one has had this terrible disease for over 30 years as I have, and had given up all hope of a cure, how can one help being enthused. I have one regret—having known of your treatment so long that I should be so incredulous as not to be willing to try it till this year. Yours truly BENJ. D. EVERETT.

ASTHMA SUFFERERS

write at once for particulars and escape your winter of distress. Hay Fever sufferers make a note of this and write in the spring, or now. Two thousand other references if you ask for them. Address

DR. HAYES, Buffalo, N. Y.

FOREIGN WINTER RESORTS SEASON OF 1897

The Recreation Department is now ready to furnish for the season of 1897 information and printed matter describing any of the Foreign Winter Resorts to OUTLOOK readers planning to spend the winter traveling abroad. This includes all foreign countries; the resorts of the Mediterrranean and the Islands of the Atlantic and Pacific, as well as the Holy Land, India, Egypt, Africa, Japan, China, etc. We are glad to furnish without charge information pertaining to routes of travel in and places at which to stay in these foreign winter resorts to any reader of THE OUTLOOK writing and stating what the proposed trip is to be. As the information is gathered at great expense by The Outlook Company, we are pleased to have these facilities freely used by intending travelers. Do not hesitate to write, addressing THE RECREATION DEPARTMENT OF THE OUTLOOK COMPANY, 13 Astor Place, New York.

PENNSYLVANIA
RAILROAD COMPANY

Personally Conducted Tours

Matchless in Every Feature

CALIFORNIA

Three tours to California and the Pacific Coast will leave New York and Philadelphia January 27, February 24, and March 27, 1897. Five weeks in California on the first tour, and four weeks on the second. Passengers on the third tour will return on regular trains within nine months. Stop will be made at New Orleans for Mardi-Gras festivities on the second tour.

FLORIDA

Jacksonville tours, allowing two weeks in Florida, will leave New York and Philadelphia January 26, February 9 and 23, and March 9, 1897. Rate, covering expenses en route in both directions, $50 from New York, and $48 from Philadelphia.

WASHINGTON

Tours, each covering a period of three days, will leave New York and Philadelphia December 29, 1896, January 21, February 11, March 11, April 1 and 22, and May 13, 1897. Rates, including transportation and two days' accommodation at the best Washington hotels, $14.50 from New York, and $11.50 from Philadelphia.

OLD POINT COMFORT TOURS
returning direct, or via RICHMOND AND WASHINGTON

will leave New York and Philadelphia December 26, 1896, January 28, February 20, March 18, and April 15, 1897.

For detailed itineraries and other information apply at ticket agencies or address Geo. W. Boyd, Asst. Gen'l Pass. Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

The Theory of Success

The New York Central management evidently proceeds on the theory that the more care there is taken of a traveler, the more he will travel—witness its "Limited" trains, block signals, free attendants, and the comfort and luxury surrounding one from beginning to end of a journey on "America's Greatest Railroad."

HICKS' NEWSPAPER

ADVERTISING AGENCY, W. HICKS, Proprietor, makes a specialty of preparing and placing Resort Hotel advertisements in the best newspapers at lowest rates.

TRAVELERS' R. R. GUIDE Formerly Appletons'.

R. R. Maps and Time-Tables. Conveniently Indexed. Monthly—25 cents. 24 Park Place, N. Y.

EUROPE

Holy Land and Egypt

Our first party this season leaves New York on January 5th, by Hamburg American Express Steamship "COLUMBIA" to Alexandria direct, extension Nile Tour to First Cataract; first-class throughout.

ALL EXPENSES INCLUDED $525 AND UPWARDS

Later departures February 13th, March 6th.

Special BIBLE STUDENTS' PILGRIMAGE
Dr. Jesse L. Hurlbut, D.D., February 13th.

THOS. COOK & SON
261 and 1225 BROADWAY, New York

Europe

Raymond & Whitcomb Tours

Tours to the Old World, sailing from New York January 23, March 27, and May 4, by the North German Lloyd Line, May 15 by the French Line, and May 19 by the White Star Line. Northern Africa, including Algeria and Tunis, the Island of Sicily, Italy, the Riviera, Austria-Hungary, Germany, EUROPE Switzerland, Belgium, France, England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, etc. Visits to the most famous cities, art centers, and points of picturesque interest. Parties limited in numbers.

Special vestibuled trains will leave New York frequently for

CALIFORNIA

Choice of routes and entire freedom of movement. Dining-cars are used and the service is intended for those who wish to travel comfortably and leisurely.

Other tours to Mexico, Florida, Nassau, Jamica, Round the World, etc.

Send for circulars, mentioning the tour desired.

RAYMOND & WHITCOMB
31 East Fourteenth St., Lincoln Building, Union Square, New York

GRAND WINTER CRUISE
TO
Bermuda, West Indies, Venezuela, and Mexico
BY THE AMERICAN S.S. OHIO

Sailing from New York Feb. 6, 1897

For Bermuda, St. Thomas, St. Kitts, Guadeloupe, Dominica, Martinique, St. Lucia, Barbados, Trinidad, Port of Spain, La Brea, La Guayra (Caracas), Curacoa, St. Domingo, Jamaica, Progreso, Vera Cruz (Mexico), Havana. Duration, 45 days. Price of passage, $270 and upward. Send or illustrated pamphlet.

INTERNATIONAL NAVIGATION COMPANY
6 BOWLING GREEN, NEW YORK

EGYPT

De Potter's First-Class Excursions to Egypt, Palestine, Syria, Turkey, Greece, Mediterranean, Italy, France, etc., sail in January and February. Also to JAPAN, CALIFORNIA, etc. Inclusive cost. Unequaled advantages. Programmes Free. Also, Spring and Summer Tours. Steamship and Circular Railway Tickets. Est. 1879. JAPAN

A. DE POTTER,
1466 Broadway, New York.

A SELECT PARTY for the Mediterranean Countries

Leaves NEW YORK January 5, 1897. Strictly First Class. Twelfth Season. For particulars address Mrs. M. A. CROSLEY, 502 Bedford Av., Brooklyn, N.Y

European Winter Resort
INNSBRUCK, TYROL, AUSTRIA

1,900 feet above the sea, with dry, bracing climate; center for Sleighing Excursions; fine University, Hospital, etc.

HOTEL TIROL (Open all the year.) Large, airy, sunny rooms, well furnished; superior cuisine; modern conveniences. Best references. Reduced rates in winter. Illustrated pamphlets on application. CARL LANDSEE, Prop'r.

MELROSE, SCOTLAND
The Abbey Hotel ABBEY GATE AND George and Abbotsford Hotel

HIGH STREET.—The only First-class Hotels in Melrose, both overlooking the ruins, and only two minutes' walk from Railway Station. Hotel 'Buses attend all Trains. G. HAMILTON, Proprietor.

Europe

Stratford-on-Avon, England Golden Lion Hotel

This favorite Inn was known in Shakespeare's time as "Ye Peacocke Inn," 1613. JOHN FRY, Prop.

CANNES
HOTEL BRISTOL

Most salubrious part of the town. Large garden. Patronized by several Royal families: H.R.H. THE PRINCESS CLEMENTINE D'ORLÉANS, THE PRINCE and PRINCESS FERDINAND DE BULGARIE, PRINCESS STÉPHANIE D'AUTRICHE, ARCHIDUC and ARCHIDUCHESS RÉINIER D'AUTRICHE, PRINCE and PRINCESS DE SAXE COBOURG GOTHA, etc., etc. Sanitary arrangemenfs perfect; made by English engineers. Modern comfort: electric light; lift baths; billiard; tennis-ground. C. GUILLON, Proprietor.

MARSEILLES, FRANCE
GRAND HOTEL NOAILLES AND METROPOLE

Largest, finest, and best. Electric light throughout. American home. C. RATHGEB, Prop. (Swiss).

VILLA WESTFALIA WIESBADEN, GERMANY

Furnished Rooms with or without board, "Pension," from M.3.50 ($.85) per day. American references.

Hôtel de la Grande-Bretagne et de la Gare
Corinthe (Gréeçe)

First-class Hotel, near the station, Bain dans l'Hôtel.
Proprietor, P. PELOPIDÉS.

GENOA, ITALY
GRAND HOTEL DE GÊNES

Electric light. Lift. Frequented by American visitors.
G. & R. BONERA, Prop'rs.

NAPLES
Hotel Royal des Etrangers

The most comfortable and fashionable hotel in Naples. Electric light in every room. F. TORDI, Manager.

A FRENCH PROTESTANT LADY, knowing English perfectly, would take two young ladies to finish their education with her daughter. Large Chateau, 16 rooms; greenhouse and garden near the sea. Refined, beautiful home. Terms, including French, $500 per annum each. Painting, drawing, or music by special professors extra but moderate. References, American or English Consul, Calais; Mrs. Chas. Chamberlin, New Rochelle, N.Y. Madame DISNEY, Chateau Green, Calais, France.

TRAVEL

For the Winter go to BERMUDA

48 hours by Elegant Steamships weekly. Frost unknown. Malaria impossible.

For Winter Tours go to WEST INDIES

30 days' trip, fifteen days in the tropics. For further particulars apply to A. E. OUTERBRIDGE & CO., Agents for Quebec S. S. Co., L't'd, 39 Broadway, or THOS. COOK & SON 261 Broadway, N. Y

MALLORY STEAMSHIP LINES —Delightful Ocean Trips to the Ports of Texas, Georgia, Florida.—Tourists' Tickets to all Winter Resorts in Texas, Colorado, California, Mexico, Georgia, Florida, &c. Our 64-page "Satchel Handbook" mailed free. C.H. Mallory & Co., Pier 20, E.R., N.Y

Travel

A Trip to Jamaica

the Queen of West Indian Islands, by the ATLAS LINE offers exceptional advantages to persons seeking a vacation of limited duration for health and rest. The trip from New York to Jamaica and return can be made in 17 days. Send for illustrated booklet.

PIM, FORWOOD & KELLOCK,
General Agents, 24 State St., New York.

Mexico "The Egypt of the New World." Select party leaves Feb. 2, 1897, by special train. Second party Feb. 6, via Gulf of Mexico Steamer. No Sunday railroad travel. Send for program S. CHAS. H. GATES, Toledo, Ohio.

HOTELS AND RESORTS

Bermuda

HAMILTON HOTEL

HAMILTON, BERMUDA
Open December until May
MEAD & BROOKS, Managers

Mr. Mead will be at N. E. Summer Resort Bureau, 3 Park Place, New York, November 30th to Dec. 12th, 11 to 1 o'clock, daily, to show plans, make engagements, etc.

BERMUDA

THE IDEAL WINTER RESORT.

The Princess Hotel

This new and commodious hotel opens first week in December. For terms, circulars, etc., address
N. S. HOWE, Hamilton, Bermuda, or OUTERBRIDGE & CO., 39 Broadway, N. Y.

HAMILTON, BERMUDA VICTORIA LODGE
Opposite Victoria Park and Cedar Ave. Private Board.
Mrs. J. F. SMITH, Proprietor.

California

CALIFORNIA

Be sure to include in your itinerary a sojourn at the beautiful HOTEL VENDOME

SAN JOSE Charming winter resort. Climate beyond compare. Headquarters for all tourists to the great Lick Observatory; a matchless ride. Send for illustrated souvenir. GEO. P. SNELL, Mgr.

Colorado

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo.: The Antlers
Illustrated book, describing Colorado Springs, sent on request by E. BARNETT, Proprietor.

Connecticut

Crest View Sanitarium
Greenwich, Conn.
A quiet, restful establishment for the care and treatment of chronic invalids. Unexceptional location and surroundings for health, rest, or recreation. H. M. HITCHCOCK, M.D.

Florida

"Untouched by the Frost"
Tropical Florida at

PUNTA GORDA

The Punta Gorda, on Charlotte Harbor, accommodates 300. Opens in December. Tarpon fishing, shooting, boating, driving; 400 feet of veranda. Plenty of fruit. Special rates for the season. For pamphlet address F. H. ABBOTT, Room 23, 131 Devonshire St., Boston, Mass.

Florida

NEW ROCKLEDGE HOTEL ON INDIAN RIVER Rockledge, Fla.
Homelike and attractive. Northern help. Orange groves bearing. Hunting, excellent fishing. Send for ill. book.
H. P. SHARES, Prop'r, New Haven, Conn.
H. E. BEMIS, Mgr., Mohonk Lake, N. Y.

District of Columbia

"THE HAMILTON"

Corner Fourteenth and K Streets Washington, D. C.
A first-class family and transient hotel, modern in all its appointments. Beautifully located. Rates, $2.50 and $3.00 per day. American plan. BALL & POLLARD, Prop's.

Georgia

SOUTHERN RESORT.—On the top of the Sand Hills, Augusta, Georgia; 400 feet above the city. Extensive grounds; excellent accommodations; reasonable terms. Address Mrs. STOVALL, Sand Hills, Augusta, Ga.

Fort Valley, Ga. One of the most attractive winter and health resorts in the South. High land; Northern cooking; low rates. References given. Address E. B. PARKER, Littleton Common, Mass.

PERRY, GA.—Private board; old-fashioned Southern home, pleasantly situated; sunny rooms; open fires; halls heated; delightful climate; Northern management; references. Mrs. M. E. BATES.

Thomasville, Georgia
Old Oaks
A select boarding-house. Table first-class; location choice; modern conveniences; artesian water.
Miss UHLER, Cor. Warren and Seward Sts.

THOMASVILLE, GA.

Piney Woods Hotel

Annex Open for Guests December 15
HOTEL OPENS EARLY IN JANUARY
All modern improvements; good roads and drives, bicycle paths, quail shooting, etc. For circular and information address F. A. Budlong, Plaza Hotel, N. Y. City; or WM. E. DAVIES, Thomasville, Ga.

New Jersey

Beechwood Villa Lexington Avenue Corner Fourth Street.
Lakewood, N. J.—New house, with every modern convenience; centrally located: reasonable rates. M. A. PAUL.

The BRENTFORD

Cor. Madison Ave. and Sixth St., LAKEWOOD, N.J.
Now open. Address Miss A. M. MYERS.

THE MISSES BRODRICK
Clifton Avenue, between Second and Third Streets.
PRIVATE BOARD Lakewood, N. J.

FOREST LODGE
"Will make special rates until January"
For circulars address THOS. NOBLE, Lakewood, N. J.

THE MADISON LAKEWOOD N. J.
Madison Ave. & First St. | Address Mrs. M. C. ROBBINS.

THE PINES

LAKEWOOD, N. J.
Madison Avenue, between 2d and 3d Streets.
Now open. Address Mrs. J. M. CHILD.

THE TOWERS LAKEWOOD. N. J.
opp. Laurel House. Select family home, with all modern improvements; moderate prices. M. A. NOWLAN.

Winans' Cottage Fourth Street and Clifton Avenue, Lakewood, N. J.
Rates moderate. Write A. H. WINANS, Box 72.

New York City

ST. DENIS

Broadway and 11th St., NEW YORK
Opposite Grace Church EUROPEAN PLAN
Rooms $1.00 per Day and Upward

In a modest and unobtrusive way there are few better conducted hotels in the metropolis than the St. Denis.

The great popularity it has acquired can readily be traced to its unique location, its homelike atmosphere, the peculiar excellence of its cuisine and service, and its very moderate prices.

WILLIAM TAYLOR & SON.

New York

The Gleason Sanitarium

1852 ELMIRA, N. Y. 1896

A real home for those seeking health, rest, and recreation. Under the care of regularly graduated physicians of long experience in this special line of practice. Location high and sheltered. Climate dry and equable. Fine views of city, river, and hills. Perfect sanitary conditions. Skilled attendants to give all forms of baths, electricity, massage, Swedish movements, etc. Cuisine homelike and dainty. House thoroughly heated by steam and open fires. Large Solarium heated by steam. Safety Hydraulic elevator. Gas and electric bells. Telephone and livery. All the comforts of a well appointed home. Send for illustrated booklet.

A Very Comfortable Resting-Place for an Invalid can be found by addressing Box 113, Centre Moriches, Long Island. Sunny rooms, overlooking South Bay. Especially adapted for cases of nervous prostration.

Dr. Strong's Sanitarium

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

For health or pleasure. The appointments of a first-class Hotel. Elevator, electric bells, sun-parlor, and promenade on the roof. Suites of rooms with baths. Massage, Electricity, all baths and health appliances. New Turkish, Russian, and Natural Sulphur-Water baths. Dry tonic air, Saratoga water, croquet, lawn-tennis, etc. Open all the year. Send for illustrated circular.

North Carolina

TRYON, Western North Carolina, on the Asheville and Spartanburg Railroad in the Blue Ridge Thermal Belt. Delightful winter climate; unexcelled for healthfulness and grand mountain scenery. Pine woods. Good board in a beautiful location. Mrs. CANNON.

OAKDENE TRYON, No. Car.—Located in the Thermal Belt; unsurpassed climate; comfortable house, fronting south; bright, sunny rooms, porches, and grounds. BOX 55.

South Carolina

Pines—Pines—Pines—Pines

AIKEN, S. C.

The Highland Park

Opens December 1st. A high-class winter resort, accommodating 300. Driest climate east of the Rockies. Plenty of sunshine. Purest water. Golf, Fox-Hunting, and Polo. Write for book Second season management of PRIEST & EAGER, Aiken, S. C.

AIKEN, S. C. BUSCH HOUSE.—$2 per day. Special rates by week. Electric lights, etc. Hygienic baths and Kneipp's water cure. HENRY BUSCH, Prop.

Pennsylvania

WALTER'S IN SOUTHERN PA.
IS THE BEST. SANITARIUM
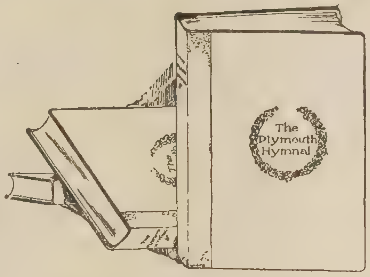
WALTER'S PARK, PENNA.
SEND FOR ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE.



THE BEST HYMN-BOOK

Many publishers claim that their hymn-books are "the best." Many pastors, after practical experience, say that the best hymn-book is

The Plymouth Hymnal

Edited by LYMAN ABBOTT

With the co-operation of HERBERT VAUGHAN ABBOTT and CHARLES H. MORSE

Rev. CORNELIUS H. PATTON, Duluth, Minn., says: "You have produced the best of all the hymn-books."

Rev. GEORGE W. KELSEY, Geneva, O., says: "The most complete and satisfactory hymn-book of which I have any knowledge."

Rev. THEODORE CROWL, Sterling, Ill., says: "It is the best book we know of for congregational use."

Rev. A. H. BRADFORD, D.D., Montclair, N. J., says: "I believe it to be the best hymnal now before the churches."

Rev. M. E. DUNHAM, Utica, N. Y., says: "I do not see how you could better it."

Rev. L. E. BROWN, Bedford, Mich., says: "No book till this has reached high-water mark."

Write to us for specimen pages. If you are a pastor, teacher, or choirmaster, we shall be glad to send a FREE (returnable) copy to you for examination.

The Plymouth Sunday-School Hymnal

Edited by Thomas G. Shearman and Walton N. Ellis, with an Introduction by Lyman Abbott

This Hymnal is in use in many Sunday-schools, and is an ideal book for children. It is beautifully printed and handsomely bound. Send for specimen pages. A free (returnable) copy will be sent to any pastor or superintendent for examination.

THE OUTLOOK CO., 13 Astor Place, New York

EDUCATIONAL

New York City

SCHERMERHORN'S TEACHERS' AGENCY
Oldest and best known in U. S.
Established 1855. 3 East 14th St., N. Y.

Miss S. D. Doremus
BOARDING and DAY SCHOOL for GIRLS
REOPENS OCTOBER 1ST
735 Madison Avenue, New York.

The Misses Ely's School for Girls
RIVERSIDE DRIVE
85th and 86th Streets, New York

Teachers College NEW YORK, MORNINGSIDE HEIGHTS, 120TH ST., WEST.—Department of Science. Preparation for (a) teachers of science in State and city normal schools; (b) teachers of science in high schools and academies; (c) supervisors of elementary science instruction in all grades of public and private schools. A college course, or its equivalent, required for entrance to the major course. Send for circular of information and Bulletin.
WALTER L. HERVEY, President.

Misses Whitfield and Bliss Boarding and Day School for Girls, 41 West 124th Street, Mount Morris Park, New York City. Reopens October 1st.

California

POMONA COLLEGE, Claremont, Cal.—Full College courses leading to degrees of B.A., B.L., B.S. Degrees recognized by University of California and other similar graduate schools. Thirty-five miles from Los Angeles. An Academic course. Preparatory school preparing for all institutions connected with the College. Address C. G. BALDWIN, President.

Connecticut

Brookfield Center, Fairfield Co., Conn.
The Curtis School for Young Boys
A strong life in school and out, full of normal activities and healthy conditions. A clean moral atmosphere, a loyalty, a high purpose—full of help for your boy's manhood. Home life; single rooms. $500. 22d year. A book full of suggestion. FREDERICK S CURTIS.

Connecticut

The Housatonic Valley Institute Cornwall, Conn.
Among the Berkshire Hills of Northwestern Connecticut. Home School for boys. Classical, Scientific, Business, Preparatory Courses. Thirteenth year.
H. B. MacFarland, S.B., L. W. Arnold, A.B., Principals.

WOODSIDE SEMINARY
HARTFORD, CONN.
City advantages for culture and study. Experienced teachers. Miss Sara J. Smith, Prin.

New Hampshire

COLBY ACADEMY, New London, N. H.
$200 to $250 a Year. Co-educational. 44th Year.
Send for Catalogue. Rev. GEO. W. GILE, PRESIDENT

New York

MT. PLEASANT MILITARY ACADEMY. 82d year. Refers to Hon. Joseph H. Choate, Hamilton W. Mabie, L.H.D.
THE PRINCIPALS, Sing-Sing-on-Hudson, N. Y.

CLASSES FOR ATTENDANTS in the care of convalescents, feeble elderly persons, little children and chronic cases, will continue throughout the winter under the auspices of the Massachusetts Emergency and Hygiene Association. For details apply to the instructor, Dr. ANNA G. RICHARDSON, between 3 and 5 P. M., 92 Charles Street, Boston.

TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTERS,
102 Fulton st., New York, sell all makes under half price. Don't buy before writing them for unprejudiced advice and prices. Exchanges. Immense stock for selection. Shipped for trial. Guaranteed first class. Largest house in the world. Dealers supplied. 52-page illus. cat. free.

-THE- CINCINNATI BELL FOUNDRY CO
CINCINNATI, OHIO.
SOLE MAKERS OF THE "BLYMYER" BELLS
FOR CHURCH SCHOOL. FIRE ALARM &C
Catalogue with 2500 testimonials. Prices and terms FREE.

THOSE answering advertisements appearing in The Outlook will confer a favor upon the advertiser as well as the publisher by mentioning this publication.

BANGS & CO.

91 and 93 Fifth Avenue, N. Y.

Announce the Sale of the Library of the late Henry F. Sewall, of this City.

A large and valuable collection covering a wide range of topics and a long time in the history and practice of the art of printing. The department of Old English Literature is probably the most extensive and the most interesting, comprising first and early editions of many famous writers. Books of emblems and fables are many, and the works of famous artists and illustrators. There are choice works of bibliography; a few extra-illustrated volumes; specimens of fine binding. In addition to the precious older books, the library contains a representative gathering of modern literature.

The sale of part II. will take place November 30th and following days, and the concluding sale will follow in January next.

KITCHEN FURNISHING

COOKING UTENSILS, MOULDS,
CUTLERY, CROCKERY, AND GLASS,
REFRIGERATORS,
HOUSECLEANING ARTICLES.

LEWIS & CONGER
130 and 132 West 42d St., N. Y.

SUBSCRIBERS' WANTS

Want advertisements of thirty words or less will be published under this heading at one dollar a week. Four cents a week is charged for each word in excess of thirty.

A YOUNG LADY wishes position as mother's assistant; fond of children; competent to do all family sewing; can assist children with lessons. Willing to make herself generally useful. Good reference. Address B. A., No. 2,161, care of The Outlook.

Christmas Silverware

No. 300 A.
Mirror.

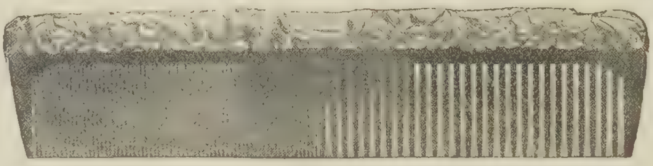
No. 603 A.
Hair Brush.

Purchase your silverware of the Legitimate Jeweler, and avoid the doubt which otherwise may arise as to its genuineness; it costs no more.

The best class of jewelers throughout the country will furnish STERLING SILVER toiletware of the style shown, made by the Gorham Mfg. Company, silversmiths, and bearing their well-known trade-mark, TRADE MARK STERLING which not only guarantees the quality, but also a high standard of workmanship and finish, at the following prices:

No. 602A, Hair Brush, large -	$5.00
“ 603A, “ “ small	4.50
“ 605A, Military “ - -	3.75
“ 606A, Cloth “ - -	4.75
“ 630A, Hat “ - -	1.50
“ 52A, Whisk Broom, -	4.75
“ 152, Bonnet Brush, - -	2.00
“ 460, Ladies' Comb, -	1.00
“ 455, Gentleman's Comb, -	.75
“ 300A, Mirror, - -	9.00
“ 915, Puff Box, all silver, -	9.00
“ S2575, Puff Box, cut glass, silver top, - - -	5.00
“ 21, Nail Polisher, - -	2.00

No. 460. Comb.



A complete line of every article in silver requisite for toilet use is made to match this pattern in addition to the pieces enumerated above.

“The Luxembourg”

STERLING SILVER TOILET WARE

One of the newest designs made by the Gorham Mfg. Co., comprising every requisite for the toilet; for sale by the better class of jewelers only.

When a guaranteed article of real merit, bearing the Gorham trade-mark, TRADE MARK STERLING can be bought for so little money from the legitimate jeweler, the fact is demonstrated that it is unnecessary even for those who are obliged to be most careful of their expenditures to purchase unknown and unvouched-for wares.

The following are the prices of the more important pieces:

No. 1254, Hair Brush, small,	$3.50
“ 1253, “ “ medium,	4.00
“ 1252, “ “ large,	5.00
“ 430, Ladies' Comb, -	1.00
“ 425, Gentleman's Comb,	.75
“ 415, Mirror, small ring handle, - - -	7.75
“ 430, Mirror, large ring handle, - - -	9.50

No. 420, Mirror, small long handle, - -	8.75
“ 435, Mirror, large long handle, - - -	11.00
“ 1256, Cloth Brush, -	4.00
“ 1258, Velvet “ -	2.00
“ 1280, Hat “ - -	1.50
“ 159, Bonnet “ -	2.00
“ 1255, Military “ - -	4.00

No. S2595, Puff Box, cut glass silver cover, $5.00

No. 1253. Hair Brush.

GORHAM MFG. CO.

Silversmiths NEW YORK

S0-AWI-474